Greenspan foresees economic expansion

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said Wednesday the economy has "regained some traction" after a late spring slowdown that was triggered by a sharp spike in oil prices.

Greenspan's moderately upbeat forecast came as the nation entered the final two months of an election battle in which President Bush and Democratic challenger John Kerry have widely different views on how the economy is performing at present.

Normally, incumbent politicians are unhappy if the Fed-al Reserve is raising interest rates close to an election.

However, many private economists believe the Fed is probably helping the Bush campaign by signaling an intention to keep raising interest rates because such a stance supports the administration's view that the economy has begun to emerge from the recent slowdown.

In his testimony before the House Budget Committee, Greenspan said that two key indicators, consumer spending and housing construction, bounced back in July after a weak performance in June.

"Economic activity hit a soft patch in late spring after having grown briskly in the second half of 2003 and the first part of 2004," Greenspan told the committee.

"The most recent data suggest that, on the whole, the expansion has regained some traction," he said.

The Fed has boosted the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge on overnight loans, from a 46-year low of 1 percent to 1.5 percent in the past two months.

Economists believe the Fed will keep raising rates at a measured pace at coming meetings, including another quarter-point increase on Sept. 21.

Greenspan made no comments in his prepared remarks on the direction of interest rates. He said this year's slowdown "in activity no doubt is related, in large measure, to this year's steep increase in energy prices."

The big jump in energy prices acts like a tax on consumers, leaving them less money to spend on other items.

In answer to questions, Greenspan told the panel that if it had not been for the jump in oil prices this year, he believed the country would "still be seeing some very strong growth."

Greenspan refused, however, to quantify how much the oil price increase had reduced growth, saying it had affected the economy in a number of ways such as depressing consumer confidence.

White House unveils new intelligence plan

By Jesse J. Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The White House unveiled plans Wednesday to give a new national intelligence director strong budgetary authority over much of the nation's intelligence community, a key provision in the Sept. 11 commission's recommendations.

President Bush intends to give the intelligence director full budget authority over the National Foreign Intelligence Program and "the management tools" to oversee the intelligence community and integrate foreign and domestic intelligence, the White House said in a statement.

The administration's recommendations comes as the Senate prepares to start crafting its own legislation to address criticisms from the 9/11 commission that the nation's 15 different intelligence agencies did not work together properly to stop the 2001 terrorist attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C.

Bush revealed his plans in a White House meeting with congressional leaders from both parties. Leaders were then briefed by Condoleezza Rice, the national security adviser.

The administration's plan would give the national intelligence director "sufficient authority to not be a figurehead and really manage intelligence," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn.

Sen. Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut, ranking Democrat on the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee — which is writing the legislation the Senate will consider — also called the Bush recommendations "a very significant step."

Most members of the Senate seem to be behind creating a national intelligence director to oversee nonmilitary intelligence, and many have echoed the 9/11 commission's call for that person to have the ability to hire and fire leaders of the intelligence agencies and to control the money Congress provides those agencies.

The White House had not previously openly endorsed that aspect of the commission's recommendations.

But on Wednesday, the White House said "the president seeks intelligence reform legislation that is consistent with the recommendations of the 9/11 commission."

Under the White House plan, a new national intelligence director would be appointed by the president, confirmed by the Senate and serve as the head of the intelligence community. The director would also be assisted by a new Cabinet-level Joint Intelligence Community Council, but the director would not sit in the president's Cabinet or be located in the president's executive office.

The new director would be able to allocate and shift funds within the intelligence community.

But the White House did not go as far as saying that an intelligence director would be able to unilaterally hire and fire people in the intelligence community, saying only the NID should "have a role in the appointment of any individual to a position that heads an organization or element within the intelligence community."

Intelligence leaders, however, "must receive the concurrence" of the intelligence director on appointments and presidential appointments "shall be accompanied by the recommendation" of the intelligence director, the White House said.

The Defense Department would also keep control of the National Security Agency, the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency and the National Reconnaissance Office, "thereby avoiding the disruption of the war effort that a more far reaching restructuring could create," the White House said.

Space capsule crashes after parachute fails

By Paul Foy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah — The Genesis space capsule, which had orbited the sun for more than three years in an attempt to find clues to the origin of the solar system, crashed to Earth on Wednesday after its parachute failed to deploy.

It wasn't immediately known whether cosmic samples it was carrying back as part of a six-year, $260 million project had been destroyed. NASA officials believed the fragile disks that held the atoms would shatter even if the capsule hit the ground with a parachute.

"There was a big pit in my stomach," said physicist Roger Wiens of Los Alamos National Laboratory, which designed the atom collector plates. "This just wasn't supposed to happen. We're going to have a lot of work picking up the pieces."

Hollywood stunt pilots had taken off in helicopters to hook the parachute, but the refrigerator-sized capsule — holding a set of fragile disks containing billions of atoms collected from solar wind — hit the desert floor without the parachute opening.

The impact drove the capsule halfway underground. NASA engineers feared the explosive for the parachute might still be alive and ready to fire, keeping helicopter crews at bay.

"That presents a safety hazard to recovery crews," said Chris Jones, solar system exploration director for NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The helicopters were supposed to snatch the capsule's parachute with a hook as it floated down at 400 feet a minute, or more than 6 feet per second. But the capsule tumbled out of control. It was supposed to be spinning at 15 revolutions a minute to slice evenly through the atmosphere, but camera images showed it tumbling instead.

Scientists hoped the capsule's charged atoms — a "billion billion" of them — would reveal clues about the origin and evolution of our solar system, said Don Burnett, Genesis principal investigator and a nuclear geochemist at California Institute of Technology.

"We have for years wanted to know the composition of the sun," Burnett said before the crash. He said scientists had expected to analyze the material "one atom at a time."

Genesis had been moving in tandem with Earth outside its magnetic shield on three orbits of the sun.

Cliff Fleming, the lead helicopter pilot, and backup pilot Dan Rudert had replicated the retrieval in dozens of practice runs.

Fleming and Rudert, stunt pilots by trade, were drafted for the mission because of their expertise flying high and capturing objects. Fleming has swooped after sky surfers in the action movie "XXX" and towed actor Pierce Brosnan through the air in "Dante's Peak." He just worked on "Batman 4."

The Genesis mission, launched in 2001, marked the first time NASA has collected any objects from farther than the moon for retrieval to Earth, said Roy Haggard, Genesis' flight operations chief and CEO of Vertigo Inc., which designed the capture system.

Together, the charged atoms captured over 884 days on the capsule's disks of gold, sapphire, diamond and silicone were no bigger than a few grains of salt, but scientists say that would be enough to reconstruct the chemical origin of the sun and its family of planets.

Scientists had expected to study the material for five more years.

The women's volleyball team begins play today against Florida at the Diet Coke Invitational in Minneapolis, Minn.

The 7 p.m. game against the Gators will be the first of three matches in three days for the Wildcats, who also take on Minnesota and Northern Iowa on Friday and Saturday, respectively.

The competition will be the best the No. 15 Wildcats, 4-1, have seen this season, with No. 4 Florida with a 4-0 record. Next up is the host No. 5 Golden Gophers with a 4-1 record. K-State finishes with the 3-1 Northern Iowa Panthers.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the Wildcats will benefit from playing some of the best teams in the nation.

"We're trying to prepare ourselves to play with the best teams in the country, and you can't prepare to do that unless you play those teams," Fritz said. "It will be incredibly competitive. It will be a tremendous environment and it will be great for our team. If you want to be the best, you play with the best."

Sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner said the tournament will help the Wildcats see how they stack up as a team at this point in the season.

"I think it's great to play these top teams early in the season, to see where we are and what we need to work on," she said. "It will be a lot of fun this weekend, because there's

NBA | Bryant accuser said to have been ill before trial

One of the prosecutors in the Kobe Bryant case said the 20-year-old woman who accused the NBA star of rape grew physically ill on the eve of the trial, leading her to pull out of the case and forcing the district attorney to drop the charges against Bryant last week.

Dana Easter, who has worked on sexual assault cases since 1989, said the "remarkable young lady" had withstood over a year of being followed by Bryant's investigators and the media but had feared what was going to happen during the trial.

Had the case gone to trial, Easter said prosecutors could have proved the woman had been raped based on the woman's injuries, Bryant's statement to investigators as well as three people who saw her after the alleged assault.

Easter, who had been prevented from speaking out before because of a gag order in the case, said experts would have testified about "battering ram" injuries suffered by the woman because of the alleged assault on June 30, 2003 at the Lodge & Spa at Cordillera, where she worked.

Easter also said that there was no truth to the defense's claim that the woman had sex with someone else soon after her encounter with Bryant.

Prosecutors dropped charges against Bryant as the final phase of jury selection was set to begin. Still pending is a civil suit filed by the woman seeking an unspecified dollar amount from Bryant.

She is seeking unspecified monetary damages for pain and emotional distress she says she has suffered since her accusation became public 14 months ago.

Hitting the fields

Higher participation levels for intramurals

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Intramurals are under way, participation is up, and deadlines for the next wave of action are approaching.

Intramural Coordinator John Wondra said he is pleased with the way things have started for intramurals this fall.

"We haven't had any complaints, yet," Wondra said. "Things seem to be going well."

Wondra said numbers for football and the individual and dual sports are up. Flag football saw a 2-percent increase in participation, and individual and dual sports showed a 4.6-percent increase.

Nathan Peters, junior in mechanical engineering, said better promotion of the intramural sign-ups contributed to the increase in numbers.

"Last year, people didn't really know about it," he said. "More people participate because they know what is going on and don't feel like they have to have as much skill."

Kurt Childs, senior in industrial engineering, agreed and said more people are getting involved earlier instead of waiting until their sophomore or junior year.

"The freshman are getting involved quicker, because is it a

NBA | Trade sends Mutombo to Rockets

Hoping to find the rugged lost post presence they've been sorely lacking, the Houston Rockets acquired veteran center Dikembe Mutombo in a trade with the Chicago Bulls on Wednesday.

The Rockets sent reserve guards Adrian Griffin, Eric Piatkowski and Mike Wilks to the Bulls.

An eight-time All-Star and four-time defensive player of the year, Mutombo has averaged 11.7 points, 11.7 rebounds and 3.22 blocked shots in 13 seasons with New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Denver. He is fourth in NBA history with 2,996 blocks, trailing only Hakeem Olajuwon, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Mark Eaton.

The 7-foot-2 Mutombo was traded to the Bulls in August as part of a deal that sent Jamal Crawford and Jerome Williams to the Knicks.

Mutombo, 38, will be the primary backup for All-Star center Yao Ming.

Nagging injuries and advancing age have slowed Mutombo in recent years, however, and he averaged only 6.7 rebounds and 5.6 points with the Knicks last season.

NFL | Gordon headed to Miami for draft pick

The Miami Dolphins may have found a replacement for retired running back Ricky Williams.

The Dolphins acquired Lamar Gordon from the St. Louis Rams on Wednesday in exchange for a third-round draft pick in 2005.

The deal was contingent on Gordon passing a physical. He arrived at the team's training facility Wednesday afternoon.

The 6-foot-1, 228-pound Gordon was the third-string back in St. Louis behind Marshall Faulk and first-round pick Steven Jackson. But he certainly will move up the depth chart in Miami, where the Dolphins have struggled to replace Williams since he abruptly retired a week before training camp.

Coach Dave Wannstedt decided this week to have Travis Minor, Sammy Morris and Leonard Henry share snaps in Sunday's season opener against Tennessee. The trio combined for 59 carries for 152 yards (2.6 yards per carry) during the preseason behind an oft-maligned offensive line.

Gordon missed most of the preseason after undergoing ankle surgery for an injury that bothered him since last season. The Rams featured him in the preseason finale, and he gained 77 yards on 22 carries.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The sports world is full of bone-headed decisions.

Professional managers, owners and presidents make decisions that force you to shake your head and say, "Did they really just do that?"

The Kansas City Chiefs are no stranger to this flax.

They made a decision this past week that was illogical and could come back to hurt them in the very near future.

I'm talking about the Chiefs' decision to cut former K-State offensive lineman Ryan Lilja.

Did anyone see this coming?

I certainly didn't. Not after all the praise heaped on Lilja's shoulders from head coach Dick Vermeil and Chiefs' general manager Carl Peterson.

Vermeil said he cut Lilja because he wanted him to get a year's worth of NFL strength training. Problem was, Vermeil didn't stop to think what would happen if Lilja decided not to return to the Chiefs and be relegated to the practice squad.

On Monday, the Indianapolis Colts signed Lilja to their 53-man roster, a considerable upgrade from K.C.'s practice squad.

These are the same Indianapolis Colts who went into Arrowhead Stadium last season and walked away with a playoff win in a game where their offense drove on Kansas City at will.

These are the same Indianapolis Colts who are making a return trip to Kansas City on October, in a huge game for both teams.

How in the world could the Chiefs let this happen?

Lilja had an amazing preseason. He even started against the Dallas Cowboys in the final exhibition game.

People were amazed at Lilja's athleticism and how easily he fit the mold of a Kansas City lineman: quick, sturdy, and consistent.

At K-State, Lilja learned to play at every position on the offensive line, from tackle to guard to center. K-State head coach Bill Snyder insists his linemen are well-rounded.

Lilja's versatility could be a hot commodity for any team looking for a capable backup.

Lilja looked primed to gain a roster spot for his exemplary play, and then the Chiefs thanked him by cutting him and asking him to be on the practice squad.

The opportunistic Colts swept Lilja up. Aside from the Chiefs, the Colts have possibly the best offensive line in the NFL, and yet they still added Lilja to their roster.

They saw his potential. Why did the Chiefs allow their best young offensive linemen to join a team they are expecting to compete with for a conference title?

Not only that, but Monday, Vermeil was actually upset about the Colts decision to pick up Lilja.

He said he also has curated small exhibitions, and for many of the museum's smaller exhibitions, like "Thru My Lens," staff members approach certain people or groups.

"For a lot of Kansas artists and regional artists, that's how we approach them," he said. "You run across their work somewhere and you bring it to the staff, and you want to bring this person in for a show, or this group or a deceased artist."

The 79-year-old Jeffcoat just put his work in the hands of Beach museum staff members. "I had nothing to do with it; it was from their perspective and just left me out of it," Jeffcoat said.

"You watch a little town like Abilene start to disintegrate, and the windows are boarded up like this one here. You know things are changing all around, and this is just a documentation of that. It's sort of like photojournalism."

To pick the right 21 photos for the exhibition from the hundreds of documentary photographs Jeffcoat took over the years, he said Beach Museum director Lorne Render visited him at his studio in Abilene.

"(Render) came over to the studio, and we went through pictures, and he went back to Manhattan with 50," he said. "From those 50, he picked out the exhibit."

North quit her job as assistant print curator at the University of Kansas' Spencer Museum last year for marriage and childbirth.

She said she has no background in public relations, and her public speaking skill are a result of on the job training.

Collecting objects for the museum's collection, and monitoring the condition of the art over their time, she said, is also the curator's responsibility.

"I personally really enjoy research," North said.

She said it doesn't matter if it's researching a new object or an artist - she loves it all.

"Curator is not a job that can be left at the office."

Scottish rockers Franz Ferdinand, whose debut album has been hailed by critics as a masterpiece of pop, won the prestigious Mercury Music Prize.

The Glasgow-based quartet were the favorites among the 12-strong shortlist to take home the award for their self-titled album.

The $35,600 prize, now in its 13th year, honors the best album of the year by a British or Irish band. It is judged on talent and innovation rather than commercial sales, and the winner can usually expect a surge in sales and publicity.

Among the acts Franz Ferdinand beat for the prize were two-time nominee the Streets, a.k.a. rapper Mike Skinner; young soul sensation Joss Stone; urban star Jamelia; and guitarless rock band Keane.

Bacall balks after Kidman called 'legend'

How old is a movie legend? Definitely older than 37-year-old Nicole Kidman, according to screen veteran Lauren Bacall.

Bacall became irritated during an interview with Britain's GMTV on Wednesday when the younger actress was described as "a legend."

"She's not a legend," Bacall said, cutting off interviewer Jenni Falconer in mid-sentence.

"She's a beginner. What is this 'legend'? She can't be a legend at whatever age she is. She can't be a legend, you have to be older."

The two actresses were in Venice, Italy, to promote their new film "Birth," in which 79-year-old Bacall plays Kidman's mother.

At a joint interview, reporters peppered Kidman with questions and, embarrassed, she finally suggested they direct their questions elsewhere.

Soccer, however, showed a slight drop in involvement, with two fewer teams signing up this year.

Wondra said the decline could be attributed to a decrease in the number of women's teams.

"We lost four or five women's teams. It's tough to get a team together with a large number of people. That could be a hindrance," he said.

On the flip side, interest in doubles volleyball has increased. The sport has the most participants, with 178 women's teams signing up.

Excuse me while I wipe away an imaginary tear for Verneil. Sorry, you had your chance and you let it slide away to Indianapolis.

I think the real reason behind this was not a question of Lilja's strength as a lineman. I believe it was purely a bureaucratic decision based on the fact that Lilja would have been an undrafted free agent taking a roster spot from someone who was drafted.

Don't get me wrong, I love the Kansas City Chiefs, and I will cheer my heart out for them, but this move has me stumped.

like I played in qualifiers," Van Cleave said. "This course is extremely difficult — it's a long course with small greens and a pretty tight fairway."

On a course that Coach Tim Norris said is one of the top-25 most challenging in the country, Norris believes K-State's advantage is the similarity in the lengths of the qualifying rounds at Colbert Hills and tournament-play at Inverness.

The four qualifying rounds played on Colbert Hills' 7,100-yard course are comparable in distance to the three rounds to be played on Inverness' 7,250 yard course.

"This could be the most challenging course of the fall. For what it matters, though, these qualifying scores are lower than last year's," Norris said.

Besides Van Cleave, it will be the other Wildcats' first time to compete at Inverness.

"The biggest factors this season will be how the freshmen make the transition from high school to college, and how the returnees have improved over the years," Norris said.

Clay Hodge, the only freshman to qualify for the Inverness, thinks he's already improved since high school.

"Just being around guys who are better has helped me improve," Hodge said.

Although it's difficult to predict who will come out on top this weekend, Norris said the University of Kentucky, a preseason top-10 pick, could prove to be a challenge.

However, preseason rankings are not a concern to Norris.

"Rankings are not a focus for this team. As the year goes on, rankings get more valid," Norris said. "It's just great for these guys to go somewhere and play a course of this caliber."

Davenport easily advances to U.S. Open semifinals

By Howard Fendrich
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - With win after win, all of Lindsay Davenport's talk about retirement sounds more and more premature.

Now she's two victories from a second U.S. Open title and the No. 1 ranking.

After waiting out a day of rain, Davenport beat Shinobu Asagoe of Japan 6-1, 6-1 in just 46 minutes Wednesday night to reach the Open's semifinals in a match that began with about 100 people in the seats at 9,645-capacity Louis Armstrong Stadium.

At least she finished: The ballyhooed showdown between two-time champion Andre Agassi and No. 1 Roger Federer was stopped by showers in the first game of the fourth set, with Federer ahead 6-3, 2-6, 7-5. No. 5 Tim Henman led No. 22 Dominik Hrbaty 6-1, 7-5, 4-5 when their quarterfinal was interrupted. The matches were scheduled to resume Thursday.

"It's not a total shock to tennis players that we have to go through this," Davenport said. "At this point, I just didn't care if there were 100 people there or 10 people, I just wanted to play."

After a few seasons marred by injuries, four years since her last Grand Slam final appearance, and now 28 and married, Davenport spoke earnestly at Wimbledon about quitting the sport.

Since losing to Maria Sharapova in the semifinals at the All England Club, though, Davenport has won 22 matches in a row, with four titles.

"I'm in a great position. I've done everything that I could possibly do to be ready to play here and do well," Davenport said, "and now you just see what happens."

Student discounts available for renter's insurance

Rates vary based on personal possessions

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For $10 to $15 a month, a student can have personal property insured for up to $25,000.

"It depends on what you have, but it gives you a piece of mind," AAA Insurance Representative Jason Sisler said. "You can never replace emotional attachments, but it can help financially."

The price for renter's insurance can decrease if a person has automobile insurance already, Sisler said. There are also student discounts offered.

The need for renter's insurance increases with a few details, Sisler said.

"Is your house well lit? What are some of your habits regarding safety?" Sisler said.

"The price will be affected by how many possessions you have."

Michelle Hoffman, College Heights Apartments representative, said renter's insurance will cover a multitude of incidents.

"If something should happen, my insurance covers the building, not the tenant and their property inside," Hoffman said. "Renter's insurance covers break-ins. If the tenants cause damage to our building, it covers that."

Woodway Apartments Property Manager Tammy Samuelson said she recommends renter's insurance.

"Renters insurance is a release of liability," Samuelson said. "If any damage is done we cannot be held liable."

Some of the risks that renters have include wind damage, storms, break-ins, and any other mishap that may occur, Samuelson said.

Most freshman and sophomore students who come to K-

State tend to stay on their family's homeowner's insurance, Sisler said.

"More college students with renter's insurance are non-traditional or graduate students," Sisler said. "A homeowner's policy that a parent has can often extend to the students at up to ten percent."

Sisler suggested that students shop around to find the best deals.

"Contact your parent's insurance company and see if they can give you a discount for renter's insurance," he said.

"Most insurance companies are willing to work with students to find them the best deals possible for the coverage they need."

Memos show Bush suspended from flying during Vietnam era

By Pete Yost
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House released memos Wednesday night saying that George W. Bush was suspended from flying fighter jets for failing to meet standards of the Texas Air National Guard.

The Vietnam-era memos add new dimensions to the bare-bones explanation of Bush's aides over the years that he was suspended simply because he decided to skip his annual physical exam.

The exam was scheduled during a year in which Bush left Texas, where he had been flying fighter jets, to work on a U.S. Senate campaign in Alabama.

White House communications director Dan Bartlett told CBS' "60 Minutes II," which first obtained the memos, that Bush's superiors granted permission to train in Alabama in a non-flying status and that "many of the documents you have here affirm just that."

"On this date I ordered that 1st Lt. Bush be suspended from flight status due to failure to perform to USAF/TexANG standards and failure to meet annual physical examination ... as ordered," states an Aug. 1, 1972, memo by Lt. Col. Jerry Killian.

In a memo a year later that uses only last names, Killian points to turmoil among Bush's superiors over how to evaluate his performance because there was no "feedback" from Guard officials in Alabama in 1972 and 1973, where Bush had been largely inactive.

"Staudt has obviously pressured Hodges more about Bush," Killian wrote on Aug. 18, 1973. "I'm having trouble running interference and doing my job. Harris gave me a message today from Grp (Bush's unit) regarding Bush's OETR (officer evaluation) and Staudt is pushing to sugar coat it. Bush wasn't here during rating period, and I don't have any feedback from 187th in Alabama. I will not rate."

The memo concludes: "Harris took the call from Grp today. I'll backdate but won't rate. Harris agrees."

Walter B. Staudt was commander of the Texas National Guard and Lt. Col. Bobby Hodges was one of Bush's superiors who two years earlier had rated Bush an outstanding young pilot and officer and a credit to his unit. Lt. Col. William D. Harris Jr. was another superior of Bush's.

A third Killian memo makes clear that Killian was concerned from the outset over Bush's plan to go to Alabama, because the military had spent a substantial sum of money turning Bush into a pilot and that his National Guard duties might suffer if he went elsewhere.

CLASSROOM | Further renovations forthcoming

The projected cost for the possible Memorial Stadium renovation is about $9.5 million.

An entirely new building may also be added.

DeBusman said a request was submitted on Aug. 1 to the Kansas Board of Regents for funding of a new $15 million academic building.

"One possible location is behind Waters Hall where the parking lot is," he said.

Shubert said the destruction of Denison Hall was necessary because of its condition.

"It had deteriorated to a point where it was not a good place for people to have offices or classes to be held," he said.

With Denison gone, there was a loss of classroom space

Shubert said, but alternatives were found.

"I think that loss of classrooms has been accommodated," he said. "But maybe other people will have different opinions."

The possibility of more classroom space is always being discussed, Shubert said.

"You can't say that where we are now is an end point," he said.

RED CROSS | Volunteers benefit local aid groups

"We have more active volunteers than Topeka or even Washington, D.C., which makes our chapter very unique," LaFaver said. "Part of our success is due to K-State."

Jason Lantz, American Red Cross Club of KSU community adviser, said the organization has made a huge difference to disaster relief responses.

"One of our biggest projects was with the Republic County flooding," Lantz said. "Although it was dangerous, we still had students who responded within hours to the storm."

Those who volunteer through the Flint Hills American Red Cross Chapter go through training to prepare for these disaster relief projects. Volunteers are sent through a week of training, emphasizing on how to provide emergency services and running a shelter operation.

The next series of training is from September 13-16.

Getting people, including students involved is a little challenging, he said.

"We are always looking for students to get involved with projects," he said. "They do not have to quit school to be a committed member to our organization."

People should not worry about their volunteer work being a huge time commitment, LaFaver said. "There are many incentives to joining the group," he said.

"Volunteers get a stipend that will cover their expenses on their journey." The money can help pay for things such as food and additional travel expenses.

Many of the volunteers, however, take home more than just cash. Instead, they get a great experience to share, LaFaver said.

"Our volunteers worry most about how much time they have to commit to the projects," LaFaver said. "Most volunteers spend two to three weeks on a project."

LaFaver said people employed by the state can actually take a maximum three-week leave from their employment for projects such as disaster relief volunteering. Some may get paid leave. He suggests employees discuss this option with their employers if they want to become a volunteer.

"If people cannot volunteer, they should look into smaller ways of helping us out," LaFaver said. "They can either participate in our local operation or just donate."

With a small operation, money gets tight, LaFaver said. Donations are always welcome, because the local chapter pays for stipends, training, and other expenses as well.

"We welcome any type of help," LaFaver said. "K-State students are always excellent workers and highly motivated for our projects."

Mysterious insects plague football game

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURG, Kan. - While the Pittsburg State Gorillas were chewing up Western State College of Colorado's football team a couple of weeks ago, something else was eating at the opposing team - and nearly everyone else at Carnie Smith Stadium that night.

Now the Crawford County Health Department, Kansas State University entomologists, exterminators and some formerly itchy visitors are trying to find out what caused the mysterious bites.

Jerry Swaro, of Salida, Colo., whose son Mike is a linebacker for Western State, said fans were so badly bitten at the game that many thought they had been victims of bedbugs at a Pittsburg hotel.

But when some fans who had not stayed in town also complained of the bites, it became apparent that something at the game had a feast.

Steve Shepherd, a local exterminator, said a bug that was sent to Kansas State last week turned out to be a clover mite, which feeds off grass. He said until the culprit has been identified conclusively, applying pesticides to the field would be a waste of time and money.

WOMEN'S STUDIES | Addition of tenured professor to program allows students to major in field

Verschelden said women's studies came about in the 1970s, and it has grown since then.

"It's not just men and women. We look at race, and we look at class," she said. "There's lots of contemporary issues dealing with women's studies."

Feminist Thought and Gender Ethnicity and Class were two new classes added this year because of the new major, she said.

Thirty hours of women's studies are needed plus all the general requirements within the College of Arts and Sciences, she said.

One of the core courses is Intro to Women's Studies. Angela Hubler, associate professor of women's studies, teaches a section.

Hubler was last of the three tenured teachers, receiving the title in 2002.

"I've been full-time in women's studies since I was tenured," she said. "It's something I feel passionately about."

She said after she was tenured it took awhile to get the major.

"There was never any hold up in the process. It was just a very lengthy process within our own program, and then it went to student senate to be approved. Then it had to be approved by the Board of Regents," Hubler said.

The new major is beneficial for students, she said.

"I think it benefits the students that were secondary majors and wanted the legitimacy of a major," Hubler said.

Summer Lewis, senior, said she was able to become a women's studies major while still keeping her sociology and Spanish majors.

"I had enough credit to go ahead and take a couple more classes to have a major," she said.

Lewis said she is eligible to graduate in December, and the major will help her with her career.

"I'd like to eventually work, probably, in politics dealing with foreign policy," she said.

She said women's studies have helped her thought process on issues.

"It's taught me to think critically," she said. "It's made me think a lot more deeply and question how policies and government affect people."

The flexibility of the department is appealing to Lewis, she said.

"There's some classes that are only offered in the spring, but they allowed me to work with professors," she said.

"What's really nice about the women's studies major is you can take classes that can get credit for other majors."

State revenue collections up

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. - The state collected $12.8 million more in revenues than expected in August, providing another dose of good news Tuesday for officials seeking signs of economic recovery.

Revenues were $337.9 million for the month, compared with the state's official estimate of $325.1 million. It was the fourth consecutive month collections have exceeded expectations.

The state also took in $5.3 million more than expected in July, the first month of the 2005 fiscal year, creating a two-month bulge of $18.1 million.

"That's certainly better than the alternative," Senate Minority Leader Anthony Hensley, D-Topeka, said. "You just have to be cautiously optimistic that we're starting to move out of the hole we've been in."

Total revenues for July and August were $693.9 million, compared with the official estimate of $675.8 million.

The state's latest financial forecast was issued in April, with officials expecting the revenues at $4.54 billion in fiscal 2005.

Revenues in fiscal 2004 were almost $4.52 billion, exceeding expectations by $68.3 million, thanks to a bulge in collections in May and June.

For July and August, individual income tax collections, at $281.4 million, were $5.4 million ahead of the estimate.

August sales tax collections, at $128.9 million, were $128,000 behind the official estimate.

Effects of Sept. 11 terrorist attacks linger

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A lot has happened in three years. The 9/11 Commission released a report on the failures of that fateful day. The war in Iraq continues with more than 1,000 American deaths. The aftermath of the attacks has become a central issue of the presidential campaign. Riley County Republican Party

Chair Charles Hostetler said President George W. Bush's response to the attacks prove the current administration's success — setting him above Democratic candidate Sen. John Kerry. "First of all, it obviously was a terrible event, but Bush showed a great deal of leadership the way he initially responded to it," Hostetler said. "He's been a strong advocate of security measures, which so far have prevented another major terrorist attack within the United States. I give him very strong praise for his leadership in the aftermath of the attack." However, Kathryn Focke, chair of the Riley County Democratic Party, said the events of Sept. 11, 2001, are being exploited for political gain. "I think it was a terrible disaster, but I don't think the Republicans ought to be exploiting a disaster for their own political gain," she said. "They have to use that as a campaign strategy because they've got nothing else to talk about." In March, the Bush campaign ran a television advertisement showing wreckage of the World Trade Center along with images of firefighters carrying a flag-draped victim. Families of victims, as well as firefighters, called for the ad's removal. The events of Sept. 11 are only being used to highlight Bush's leadership, Hostetler said. "One of the president's main attributes is his strong leadership, particularly as it pertains to combating terrorism," he said. "The fact we haven't had in approximately three years any more serious attacks in the United States shows that he and his administration

Campus buildings lose power Thursday

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Power outages swept across campus Thursday, leaving some buildings without electricity for about an hour.

Ed Heptig, director of facilities and maintenance, said the outage happened around 10:30 a.m. and affected about 30 classroom buildings across campus, including the K-State Student Union, Justin Hall and Waters Hall.

The outage was caused because of a glitch in the power sent from WestStar Energy, he said.

"This one wasn't our fault," he said.

On campus, there are two main routes — 4,160 volts and 12,460 volts — and the 4,160-volt route was affected the most, he said. About 20 buildings were affected because they are on the 12,460-volt route.

"Everything experienced a blink, probably," Heptig said.

Four suspects were arrested in Topeka Wednesday night after allegedly robbing two Manhattan Shop Quik locations earlier that morning.

Riley County Police Department Captain Gary Grubbs said the Topeka Police Department notified RCPD after they received a tip about the robbery.

"We had information that one of the involved suspect's mothers called the Topeka Police," he said.

The suspects arrested include 18-year-old Arron M. Charpentier of 1134 S.W. Garfield, Topeka, 15-year-old Alonzo C. Timley of 700 S.E. 35th Street, Topeka, and 17-year-old twins Michelle D. McNeal and Morgan J. McNeal of 3368 S.E.

Identity theft remains a concern for K-State community

By Brad Kurtz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Commercials — like the one that shows an old woman cleaning out her pool while talking about buying "mud-flaps with naked ladies on them," in a drastically different voice — offer a humorous look at identity theft. But identity theft isn't so funny when the joke is on you.

Anna Bolmeier, sophomore in interior design, knows first hand what it's like to have her personal information abused.

Bolmeier said she found out on Aug. 27 that her eBay account had been hijacked.

"I got an email that looked like it was from eBay asking me to update my account information," she said.

"Later, I found out it was a fraud."

Bolmeier said her account had been used to sell a laptop computer.

"I figured it out after I got some e-mails saying my password had been changed," she said.

"I got another e-mail from the person who bought the laptop. Then I found out that my eBay e-mail account had been changed."

The fake e-mail asked her for her Social Security number, Bolmeier said, which worries her now that she knows it was a fraud.

"I was just worried about my info. I wondered, 'am I going to be able to access my checking account?'"

Bolmeier said her eBay account was closed due to suspicious activity. The investigation into her account and the thief who nabbed her information is still ongoing.

According to the Federal Trade Commission site at www.consumer.gov/idtheft, identity theft occurs when someone's personal information — such as name, Social Security number, credit card number or other identifiable information — is used without permission to commit fraud or other crimes.

Although identity theft was a little-known problem as recently as two years ago, law enforcement officials and others now recognize it as a serious concern, and are likewise responding.

Det. Steve Gregoire of the Riley County Police Department said Kansas law takes ID theft very seriously.

"Kansas has made identity theft a person felony, which is a crime committed against a person," Gregoire said. "In a lot of other states, it's considered to be a property felony, which is less serious. Until July, identity theft was a misdemeanor in Missouri."

The FTC recently released a survey showing that 27.3 million Americans have been victims of ID theft in the last five years, including 9.9 million people in the last year alone.

According to the survey, consumer victims reportedly Hurricane Ivan hit Jamaica Thursday after killing 23 people in five countries. The hurricane also hit Grenada where police fired tear gas to stop frenzied looting and students armed with knives and sticks.

Milla Jovovich is back for another dose of evil. "Resident Evil: Apocalypse," the sequel to the 2002 video game-turned-film, opens today in theaters nationwide. In the film, Jovovich's character, Alice, battles legions of undead as she attempts to expose the seedy underbelly of the Umbrella Corp. Besides both "Resident Evil" movies, Jovovich is best known for her role in the 1997 sci-fi thriller, "The Fifth Element."

2 | PICK YOUR BRAIN

Even though it's the weekend, you could still put your gray matter to use at After Hours, sponsored by the Union Program Council. The Fabulous Feud Game Show will pit two teams against each other in a match of wits. The game show runs from 9 p.m. to midnight. Afterwards, indulge in some brain food when UPC serves breakfast at 10 p.m. Both the game show and the food will be in the Union Courtyard. At midnight, top off the evening with a screening of "Along Came Polly," a romantic comedy about an anxious insurance salesman (Ben Stiller) who enters into a relationship with a free-spirited young woman (Jennifer Aniston). The Wildcat football team looks to come back from what many fans see as a mediocre performance last weekend when they face the Fresno State Bulldogs for the second game of the season. Both teams are 1-0. The Cats look to running back and Heisman Trophy candidate Darren Sproles to help lead them to victory, especially in light of Sproles' 221-yard run last weekend. Kickoff is at 11:10 a.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

New Italian restaurant spices up dining options

By Courtney Keith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wednesday was an exciting day for Terry Wark and Andrew Zink.

Their new Italian restaurant, Gilio's, opened for business.

"The business has been steady today, even though we had little advertising about the opening," Wark said.

Molly Vandenberg, hostess at Gilio's, said this was her first opportunity to work during a grand opening.

"Tuesday night we had a friends and family night so that everyone could be well prepared for the opening," said

Vandenberg. "All of the employees have previous restaurant experience, but it is exciting to work during the opening of a new place."

Wark said they anticipate a big turnout this weekend with the football crowd.

"We'll be opening at 2 p.m. so that people can come eat after the football game," he said.

Wark, who also runs Porter's West, said he hoped Gilio's would help to expand business on the west side of town.

"After Marco Polo left, we saw an opportunity to replace it with another Italian restaurant," he said. "We did a lot of remodeling in order to present an image of fine food and casual dining."

Wark said the new restaurant also allowed for new endeavors.

"The larger kitchen at Gilio's will allow us the opportunity to expand our business to catering, something we could not do with the smaller space at Porter's West," he said.

Wark said he did not foresee any competition with Valentino's restaurant, which is located in the same area.

"We have a completely different environment."

"We allow you to sit down and be served," Wark said.

Donna Morgan, of Riley,

Kan., said she was excited about the new restaurant.

"My meal was very good and the new decor added a nice touch," Morgan said. "I will definitely come back and bring my family."

Gilio's will be open Wednesdays and Thursdays from 4:30 p.m. until 10 p.m. and until 11 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays.

Architecture college to present lecture

Builder's visit spurs talk on campus

By Alicia Gilliland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will reminisce at today's presentation of "The Day Frank Lloyd Wright Came to Town" as a part of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design's 100-year anniversary.

Wayne Charney, associate professor of architecture, will present the lecture at 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

The lecture is free to students, faculty and the community.

Wright greatly affected the architecture department, as well as the K-State campus and Manhattan buildings, said Diane Potts, assistant to the dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Wright visited the campus in 1952, and today's lecture will discuss his importance to the college's development, Potts said.

Charney discovered a piece of Wright's early works and has focused on his work since he began at K-State 26 years ago.

He took Wright's work and reattributed authorship back to Wright.

He researched Wright's visit to the campus and found a surprising link between Wright and the K-State campus.

"Dr. Charney is an architecture historian with a major focus of interest in Frank Lloyd Wright," Potts said.

Black Student Union, Campaign for Nonviolence Student Activists, Ichthus Christian Fellowship, and the Hispanic American Leadership, all had proposals passed unanimously. Community Cultural Harmony Week's proposal was referred to the Allocations Committee to clear up wording.

In other business, senators Ben Fenwick and Justin Shrauner were appointed to the Educational Opportunity Fund Committee by Senate Chair Eleri Griffin.

Faculty Representative Bill Muir asked senators to consider the meaning of the third anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks on Saturday.

He called senators to "remember not only what happened three years ago, but also what has transpired since."

TO THE POINT Citizens should take ID theft threat seriously

The threat of ID theft is ever-present, and community members would be wise to be cautious with their sensitive personal information.

While ID theft is not as prevalent as other forms of crime, more than 9 million cases of it were reported in the United States last year, resulting in $5 billion of lost assets.

It therefore is important to remain vigilant against it.

The State of Kansas has done its part by classifying the crime as a person felony.

With enforcement in place, everyday citizens must realize the threats posed and take action to protect themselves.

Not only can identity theft lead to complicated financial difficulties from the misuse of Social Security and credit card numbers, but the possibility of identity theft by terrorists is a new threat that must be combatted.

Incidents of identity theft have proven in the past to be difficult to investigate, sometimes taking years to solve if at all. Vital information just isn't worth risking considering the threats.

When using such data, whether on the town or on the Internet, discretion and safety are the keys to protecting yourself from the potential hazards of identity theft.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

One day last year, my former roommate couldn't wait to tell me the news when she came home after a tumultuous weekend in Aggieville.

ABBY HILES

"You did what?" I asked, as I stared at her incredulously.

"I made out with my lab GTA! Right there in Joe's! He is so hot... Don't tell anybody, though, OK?" And with that she flounced out of my room and into the bathroom for a much needed post-weekend shower.

I couldn't believe it. You can make out with a professor? Even if he is a graduate student, I doubted this was OK.

I mean, sure, I'm not going to deny there have been some past professors I would love to drag into an office every now and again (trig recitation graduate teaching assistants, for example). Never would I have the guts to try it.

She just acted like it was any other weekend.

It seems like with the advent of every school year, student/professor relationships are brought to new levels. The lines start to become blurry and escalate to more serious relations.

Many colleges and universities throughout the United States have decrees in their by-laws stating any persons of differing status on campus (whether that be student and GTA, GTA and professor or even professor and dean) are not allowed to interact socially or romantically as it may lead to complications in the work place and maybe even possible sexual harassment suits.

Basically, the flirtations and canoodling get taken a little too far and when one side wants to break it off, a shift in power happens.

However, it appears my roommate has nothing to worry about. No wonder she was so flippant and carefree about the whole saliva exchange that night.

Here at K-State, there are no written laws or decrees banning students and teachers from engaging in outside of the classroom relationships. Yep, that's right, canoodling is not illegal here in Manhattan.

It may be a "strongly discouraged" practice, but nonetheless, not an illegal one.

The University of Southern Florida goes about this issue the same way we do. There is no written law, and it is discouraged among staff. However, after a recent incident, they may be singing a different tune.

James Inman, professor of English at USF, was charged two years ago with sexual harassment following his relationship with a former GTA under his supervision.

The relationship lasted a few months, but when Julie Makosky, his former student/girlfriend, tried to end their relationship, he persisted with e-mails and phone calls. Eventually, she brought charges of sexual harassment against him.

Since then, Inman has been forced to resign his job and relocate to the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, where he still teaches English and probably picks up girls in his classes.

Student/professor relationships should be kept to the classroom and to the small window of office hours.

Even if your psych GTA has the physique of a Greek goddess, or your history professor resembles Brad Pitt, hold yourself back. This cannot end up in a good place.

Besides, if he or she hits on to you, just think of all who have come before you.

You are not the first – trust me – and you will not be the last. And when it is said and done, you will have nothing to show for it.

Take my roommate, for instance, she may have had her two minutes of glory with the beautiful, foreign lab GTA... but in the end all she has left is a B in chemistry and this column to remember it by.

Soft drinks part of balanced diet

WRITE TO US

The Collegian welcomes your letters to the editor. They can be submitted by e-mail to letters@spub.ksu.edu, or in person to Kedzie 116. Please include your full name, year in school and major. Letters should be limited to 250 words. All submitted letters may be edited for length and clarity.

In our health-conscious society, most of us have gotten much more than our fair share of advice about what we eat and drink.

LETA REPERT

With this in mind, I decided to find the truth about the most controversial type of beverage since Prohibition.

If we don't stand up for our rights, we might end up going to speakeasies to enjoy our much maligned soft drinks.

According to www.about.com, "Soft drinks can trace their history back to the mineral water found in natural springs.

Bathing in natural springs has long been considered a healthy thing to do, and mineral water was said to have curative powers."

Obviously, this must mean that soft drinks are good for you.

Furthermore, about.com reports that Coca Cola was invented by a doctor, which proves its health benefits.

Not only that, but Dr. Pepper also has a very medical-sounding name.

What more could you ask? Well, there is more.

An ABC News article dated August 24, 2004, reports that Harvard researchers have done a study that found, "Women who drank one or more soft drinks per day gained, on average, 17 pounds (7.7 kg) over the eight-year period, while those who drank one soft drink per week or less gained six pounds (2.7 kg) on average."

Since most of us are trying so desperately to gain weight, this is obviously another health benefit.

We should all consider adding some soft drinks to supplement the typical college-student diet of bean sprouts, carrot sticks, and prunes.

Furthermore, a study by Tufts found that, "bone density in women may be reduced by soda consumption."

The way this supposedly works is the phosphoric acid in the soft drinks keeps our bodies from being able to take up the calcium we eat.

We've all heard of the detrimental effects of calcium on our bodies.

Do any of you remember the elementary school science experiment where you put a chicken bone in a jar of vinegar?

After a while, you can bend the bone, almost like rubber.

Just think what great party tricks you could do if your bones would do that.

Not only are soft drinks good for you, they also boost the economy.

And not just for the soft drink industry, either.

The same Harvard study that links soft drink consumption to weight gain also links it to diabetes, which obviously brings a lot of money to the medical profession and to pharmaceutical companies.

Aside from all of the additional doctor visits soft drinks contribute to, they also help dentists.

The Web site for the Academy of General Dentistry reports on a study that, "found that over time, exposing dental enamel to carbonated beverages and non-carbonated canned ice tea weakens and permanently destroys enamel."

Now that I've seen the evidence, I've come to the conclusion there should be an addition to the food guide pyramid.

With so many benefits to our health and economy, soft drinks deserve a place of honor in all of our meals.

Pepsi, anyone?

We can water the sidewalks, but we can't keep the lights on in the Union. Way to go, K-State.

Barbara Meyer is just pissed off because she never got picked for dodgeball in elementary school.

Yeah, Shanna Hajek, I don't think the employment rate is up to 6.4 percent. I just saw on the news yesterday that it was 5.5 percent and I don't see it dropping almost a full percentage point in less than two months.

I don't think the guy smoking on Page 10 is 30 feet from the door. Somebody get on him!

Yeah, actually I would rather have a repeat of the past four years than have a Democrat in office.

Can we please have a Willie skit at this game? Please?

The only car I ever drove in Johnson County was a 1986 Cadillac. Please let me know if you see one of those sporting a GPS locator.

Here's a newsflash: just because you were born in the 80's doesn't mean you can dress like it. Put your collar down, you look like an idiot.

I think I saw a mouse at Panera Bread.

Did anyone notice that the USA olympic team was coached by two ex-KU coaches, Larry Brown and Roy Williams, and that resulted in the worst record ever for the men's Olympic team?

Listen, if you're crossing the crosswalk and there are no cars, don't push the button, just walk. Because otherwise people have to stop fifteen seconds after you've already gone by.

Whoever does the sports report on 91.9 is hilarious.

I waited four years for the Manhattan Menu Guide to come out, and it comes out after I graduate! Bull!

I've been waiting for the Manhattan Menu Guide to come out almost as long as Chris Bluiett's been alive, and he's almost 40!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Current administration harms economy with president's lack of job creation

Editor,

Shanna Hajek's basic point that the economy has not fared well under George W. Bush is essentially correct, but her unemployment number for June of this year is wrong — it was 5.6 percent, not 6.4 percent. She cites Fox News — not known for accuracy — but it's hard to believe they got this one wrong.

A far better source for information about such matters is the Bureau of Labor Statistics, www.bls.gov. In December of 2000, the last month of the Clinton administration, unemployment stood at 3.9 percent. It began rising in January of 2001, peaking at 6.3 percent in June of last year. Since then the trend has been downward, reaching 5.4 percent last month.

The real story, however, is the lack of job creation during the Bush administration. The number of employed Americans has actually fallen slightly. If job growth had matched the growth of working age

Americans, 5 to 6 million more of us, would be employed than now have jobs. About the only beneficiaries of this withdrawal of people from the labor force have been MBA programs and law schools; whether this reflects improvement for the country I leave to others.

Athletic efforts insulted by Collegian column

Editor,

After reading Barbara Meyer's column "Academic En-croachment" Tuesday I think I've lost what little respect I had for the Collegian's writers.

I do recognize that it was on the Opinion page, and rightly so, but a good portion of her column was using facts incorrectly. If she thinks athletic credit hours are so harmful, why did she not attack the UFM which routinely offers classes in dancing and other non-academic subjects?

As an athlete, I can assure her with upmost confidence that the athletic department, which does an absolutely stellar job bringing business and success to Manhattan and K-State, makes a very clear point to make student-athletes out of us, not athletes who go to college.

We are required to take minimum amounts of credit hours per semester that contribute to our major.

I wouldn't hesitate to believe that a good portion of the students at K-State do not maintain the minimum schedules that athletes are required to have. In addition to this, our few athletic hours generally only count for electives, even though we spend exponentially more hours training, working, and practicing for our team than we are allowed to claim academically.

Perhaps the Collegian could spend more time supporting the efforts of its athletes to glorify K-State, instead of publishing columns that not only degrade the people who spend, by far, the most time devoted to K-State, but also undermine the validity of the Collegian's writers.

Step up the plate Collegian. Our athletes do, why can't you?

Column provides needed breath of fresh air

Editor,

Shanna Hajek has restored my faith.

It is so refreshing to read a column from someone who is rational and has taken the time to look at the facts, not just swallow the party line — that of the party with the most money and the loudest

Thanks, and keep up the good work.

Perhaps you could talk to Logan and explain to him that a southern Democrat is a Republican but won't stand as one because it was the party of Lincoln.

Most fair people think Lincoln did the country a great service. In the South, some still think it was a disservice — mostly the ones who have never accepted victory by the Union army or all that it implied.

Lee Chenoweth

Check facts before making assumptions

Editor,

As an alumnus of K-State and a former manager for the men's basketball team, I am writing to let you know that you should give all the facts before putting to print a column (Barbara Meyer) like that.

All major sports at K-State, including the women's, have a one credit-hour class for their sport. This is available to all scholarship or non-scholarship athletes and student managers.

This hour is a very minimal credit for all the time these individuals put into the university. Barbara Meyer shouldn't bash the football players and Coach Snyder for a policy that was implemented by the administration.

Additionally, if you have ever taken any of the one-hour athletic classes like basketball or bowling, I guarantee you more work and effort goes into the Varsity courses than the ones taken by regular students.

I am ashamed that the editor of the paper let such a misleading article printed in such a great paper as this one.

Travis Hecht

1-hour credit for student-athletes fair

Editor,

There are physical education courses such as walking, jogging, golf, basketball, etc., that students get credit for. One of my friends last semester took basketball.

He got credit for playing basketball at the Rec three hours a week.

Football players spend six hours a day working out, watching film, and practicing.

If a normal student can get credit for playing basketball, then I believe one credit hour in a semester for all of the work a football player puts in is very fair.

By the way, not all learning takes place in a regular classroom setting.

PERSPECTIVES

Americans should not let weapons ban die

DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN
U. PENNSYLVANIA

PHILADELPHIA — This Monday, the Federal Assault Weapons Ban that has been in place since 1994 will expire. Currently, Congress appears unwilling to even address extending the ban. Letting the ban expire is a dangerous and irrational action. Polls consistently show that public sentiment backs extending the ban. According to the Annenberg Center for Public Policy, 68 percent of Americans support extending the ban, including 57 percent of people with a gun in their home and even 32 percent of the National Rifle Association.

Despite this, and repeated urging from grassroots organizations, Congress is determined to disenfranchise its constituents with all the grace of a four year old putting his hands over his ears and yelling, "Nah nah nah."

In anticipation of the expiration date, gun companies all across America are offering programs to ship parts to consumers that would restore pre-ban features to their guns. These include clips with more than 10 rounds, bayonet lugs and collapsing stocks.

The idea of gun companies profiting by saturating American neighborhoods with AK-47s, TEC-9s and other assault weapons is as distasteful as it is unethical.

The argument for the right to own assault style weapons does not fall within the traditional arena of how we interpret the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Nor does not fall within the debate over the right to self-defense.

There is simply no logical reason why a private citizen not involved with the military, law enforcement or other such organizations needs an assault weapon. In fact, in terms of law enforcement, the prevalence of assault weapons on the street puts police officers at a dangerous disadvantage. Washington, D.C., Police Chief Charles Ramsey has called assault weapons "a threat to the safety of our dedicated police officers and public."

For all involved citizens, this issue is important. For students and residents in a big city, this issue is critical. West Philadelphia has come a long way, and is not nearly as dangerous as it once was. But flooding the streets with assault style weapons will do a lot to set back that progress.

K-State men's rugby club offers chance for social outlets, friendly competition

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Luke Amey knew he would play even before he set foot on K-State turf.

Amey, senior in architectural engineering, began playing rugby with some friends as a junior in high school and fell in love.

Coincidentally, upon choosing K-State, Amey found the rugby club.

Now as a senior, he has been voted president of the club.

"I've played sports my whole life, and it's hard to imagine not competing in some sport. Also, at the college level of life, it gets difficult, so you have to find an outlet," he said.

The K-State men's rugby club plays club teams from the Kansas City area, as well as collegiate teams, such as the universities of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado and Missouri.

Amey said the team is most looking forward to scheduled games against University of Kansas and Truman State University.

Although KU has long been a rival to K-State, Amey said rugby is different, because it is known as a "gentlemen's sport."

"We go beat the hell out of each other. Then we all go to the bars afterwards, and everyone has a good time. It all stays on the field," he said.

Amey said he accepted the position as president in hopes of guiding the club in the right direction.

"It seems to me, the easiest way to get things done, is to take charge. Someone had to step up and do it instead of pointing fingers all the time," he said.

"It gets really busy at times, balancing being president and school. It seems like I'm running sprints taking care of everything, but school always comes first. Rugby is a very close second."

Amey's teammate, senior in chemistry Diego Flores, said despite Amey's busy schedule, he is a very responsible, reliable person.

"Luke is a guy who attended practice every day and got the group motivated. He is just an excellent guy, friendly, fun and always there when the team needs him," Flores said.

Amey and Flores both agree that although Amey is president of the club, leadership must be found throughout every player in every aspect of the game.

MLB | Royals set runs record, Randa scores 6 times

The Kansas City Royals set a team record for runs in a doubleheader Thursday.

Unfortunately for them, they did it all in the first game.

The Royals set numerous records in a 26-5 first-game rout of the Detroit Tigers, but had no offense left in an 8-0 loss in Game 2.

Joe Randa led the Royals in the first game, going 6-for-7 and tying a major league record by scoring six times. He had five singles and a double, but he wasn't in the starting lineup for the second game.

Randa also had two RBI in the first game when the Royals matched an American League record by putting 13 straight runners on base in an 11-run third inning. It was the most runs allowed by the Tigers in a nine-inning game — Detroit allowed 24 runs twice. Randa also became the first AL player to have six hit and six runs in the same nine-inning game.

Kevin Seitzer was the last Kansas City player with six hits in a game, on Aug. 2, 1987, and Shawn Green was the last major leaguer to score six times, on May 23, 2002.

The previous Royals' record for runs scored in a game was 23, against Minnesota on April 6, 1974. The major league record for a nine-inning game is 29 runs by the Boston Red Sox against St. Louis on June 8, 1950.

It was the most runs scored in a major league game since Texas beat Baltimore 26-7 on April 19, 1996, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

CFB | Troy State shocks Missouri by 10

Jason Samples threw one touchdown pass and caught another and offensive lineman Junior Louisaint scored on a 63-yard fumble recovery as Troy upset No. 19 Missouri 24-14 Thursday night.

The Trojans (2-0), a fourth-year Division I-A program, overcame a horrible start to beat the first BCS conference team to visit Troy. The fans stormed the field and pulled down a goal post as Missouri players slumped to the locker room.

The Tigers (1-1) scored touchdowns on their first two possessions but not much else went right. Brad Smith passed for 224 yards and ran 15 times for 36 yards but was intercepted twice in the second half and was hauled throughout the game.

Missouri committed three turnovers and had a punt blocked by Bernard Davis, looking like a different team that built the 14-0 lead.

Smith started out 13-of-14, but completed only one of his final six passes of the half. He finished 25-of-46.

Cross country travels to Topeka

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's and women's cross country teams return to action this Saturday, hosting the Wildcat Invitational at the Staterland Cross Country Fairgrounds in Topeka.

The women are coming off a win at last week's Bob Timmons Invitational in Lawrence, where they edged Kansas by three points.

This week, the Wildcats will again meet up with Kansas, as well as other conference teams in Oklahoma State and Oklahoma. Rounding out the field are teams from Wichita State, University of Missouri-Kansas City, Fort Hays State University, and Haskell Indian Nations University.

Coach Michael Smith said he anticipates another close race for the women.

"We are going to be competing against more talented teams in Oklahoma State and Oklahoma," Smith said. "We'll see how good we really are or where we are relative to everyone else in the conference."

Smith said the women's team will

Runners deserve admiration for ambition, drive

Not that anyone cares, but the K-State cross country team is hosting the Wildcat Invitational Saturday.

The team will have to travel to Topeka for its home meet, but as cross country runners, they understand a little adversity.

Whether it's at the high school, college or professional/international level, cross country is a sport that's usually relegated to the shadows.

Taking a backseat to other sports has never really bothered cross country runners, though. It's a sport that lends itself to that whole "it's me-against-the-world mentality."

It takes dedication, toughness and an incredible amount of stamina to be successful. As they say, there aren't any time-outs in this sport.

If you haven't guessed yet, I'm shamelessly biased on this subject. Cross country runners are some of my favorite people in the world.

Now, and not because I'm still bitter from lack of respect for the sport when I ran in high school, I get to give them a

In the limelight

'Paparazzi' shows dangerous side of media's obsession with celebrities' lifestyles

"Paparazzi"

Album review by Tanni Chaudhuri

If you like sneaking into the lifestyles of the rich and famous, you better think twice. If you're like the photographers in the new movie "Paparazzi," the outcomes could be pretty simple: losing your life or landing in jail.

"Paparazzi" takes us to a somewhat psychological detour to Lady Diana's death in 1997, when she and her friend Dodi Fayed crashed in a tunnel in Paris, allegedly followed by a group of paparazzi.

The terminology refers to freelance photographers on the look out for candid pictures of celebrities to sell to magazines, newspapers and tabloids. The reference to Lady Di's death or the coincidental resemblance to the plot of the film is more than obvious.

Bo Laramie (Cole Hauser) is an overnight success as an action hero in Hollywood. Together with his wife, Abby, and son, Zach, he is savoring his newly discovered success and limelight until peace is disrupted by a group of four freelance journalists.

An initial encounter between Rex Harper (Tom Sizemore) and Laramie over the reporter trying to take pictures of Zach in a park leads to an unpleasant series of media controversies. Laramie is not left alone anymore.

Ultimately an almost insane car chase by the group of four paparazzi leads to a fatal accident. Laramie's wife loses her spleen, and his son sinks into a coma. The climax begins with Laramie turning the table on the four and planning his revenge in the cold.

For the most part of the movie, Laramie's victory appeared quite one-sided. The first act of revenge was unintentional, and the rest seemed to fall into place. The flow of three quarters of the movie was pretty easy-going.

Detective Burton (Dennis Farrina) of course did his job, but there was not much to do. Laramie was now the real-life action hero settling scores with people who have encroached his personal space. The paparazzi would retaliate but there were no sweet surprises in this story line.

There were some missing links in depicting the revenge sequences, such as it was not clearly shown whether Laramie discovered all the hidden cameras that the paparazzi planted in his house. The police did not try to look into the recordings of these tapes to find out about Laramie's designs to get back to the reporters.

In fact, Detective Burton's happy discovery of the paparazzi instigating the car accident almost stalled his criminal investigation against Laramie. Both the actor and the cop silently acknowledged the privacy of the family and the price one has to pay for attempts to mess with it.

On a lighter note, cameo presence by Chris Rock, Mel Gibson and Matthew McConaughey provided good comic relief. Hauser was moderately good in his portrayal of Laramie, and Farrina was cliché, but convincing as the cop.

Sizemore's performance as the street smart, sly and almost wicked Harper is above average.

In a nutshell, "Paparazzi" is little above a layman's guide to get back to curious and cunning celebrity gossip mongers.

Body piercings spark conversations, pique others' curiosities

I remember the incident distinctly. I was at a party when my friend Lara came up to me.

"Hey, did you know Derrick has a piercing?" she asked me.

"No! Where?"

"Down there."

"Omigod, are you serious?"

Yes, it was true. Derrick has his most tender and valued body part pierced. Surprisingly he's not the only one. I know other guys with piercings down there, girls with their nipples pierced, girls with their, ahem, other parts pierced.

Hearing about these private piercings always leads me to ask several questions.

1. What the hell are you guys thinking? Owwww! I can barely be in a room with a needle, let alone have one shoved through my most sensitive areas.

2. More importantly: Is it true what they say about piercings and sex? Do they really make it better?

Not having any experience with piercings myself, I asked these people with piercings if extra metal helps give extra pleasure.

Mykaela braved the piercing needle when she decided to get her clitoris pierced. How much did that hurt? So much that she blacked out for a couple of seconds. She couldn't wear underwear for two weeks afterward because it hurt so bad.

Now that the pain is gone, does it enhance your pleasure when you're fooling around? Yes, she said, but only when someone is playing with it.

"Some people want to think that when you walk you get orgasms, but that's not true at all," Mykaela told me. "I can't even feel it unless a guy touches it."

Having a piercing down there definitely helps Mykaela gets aroused. She said she's much more sensitive down there than she was before.

There is one downside of having a private piercing: overzealous guys that play a little too rough with it.

"One thing I don't think guys understand about my piercing is that it's very sensitive. Guys think they can bite it or pull on it, and I'm like, 'Honey, that's attached.'"

So take note guys – if you come across a piercing down there, play nice.

Derrick also braved the needle when he decided it might be fun to have a ring put through his penis. I can hear you guys all across campus groaning.

But guys listen for a second. Derrick says his piercing didn't hurt that bad and was a good investment because it helps start conversations with the ladies.

When Derrick tells girls about his piercing most ask to have a look-see, but some ask for a feel.

"It makes it easier to get girls to have sex," Derrick told me. "They're the ones who want to feel it."

Apparently, they can feel it. Not only does Derrick's piercing give him more stimulation, it seems to please the ladies as well.

Mykaela, who's been with a pierced partner, can attest to that. She said the piercing made her guy seem both longer and wider.

Hearing this makes me curious, but I still can't help but shudder. I have frightening visions of it getting snagged on a sensitive part and ripping it off. Thanks, but I'll pass.

The last area I asked about was the nipple. While this is an erogenous zone, I couldn't quite see how a piercing here could help spice things up. Do they give extra pleasure, or are they just there for looks?

Shannon has had both of her nipples pierced at different points in time. She said that her piercings were more for herself than for others.

"If you have your tongue pierced then everyone can see it," Shannon said, "but a nipple you can hide more than your lip or your eyebrow. You can keep it your business."

As for getting her aroused, Shannon's nipple was more sensitive before, but it's not a huge difference. She said having it isn't an automatic turn on, so guys still have to put some work into it.

So, it sounds like if you can handle the pain and the embarrassment of having a stranger touch your private parts, then piercing might be an option to explore if your looking to enhance your arousal.

As for me, I think I'll keep my private parts unadorned and leave the arousing up to him.

Rapper-producer Kanye West received a leading six Source Hip-Hop Music Awards nominations Thursday, while Ludacris got five.

West's nominations included best album, video, lyricist and producer of the year.

The Source Awards will be handed out Oct. 10 in Miami, as they have been since 2001.

Kerry the rock star?

This could finally be the Electras' breakout year.

Of course, it's not musical chops that has renewed interest in this obscure garage rock recording; it's the bassist: Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry.

Rare vinyl copies of their lone 1961 recording are fetching prices north of $2,000. Two separate CD versions of that same recording are being sold after some "Behind the Music"-style intra-band squabbling.

"Their enthusiasm is only muted by the fact that they weren't that good," summed up Chuck Miller, and Albany-based columnist for Goldmine magazine who recently bought a slightly scuffed copy of the vinyl album.

The Electras were formed in the fall of 1960 at St. Paul's School, a tony private boarding school in Concord, N.H. The band was named for a cool looking Buick and they played pre-Beatles standards by Eddie Cochran and the Ventures at local school dances.

Sandwich shop to open

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new eatery is coming to Aggieville in October.

Rolly Polly Fresh Rolled Sandwiches, located at the corner of 11th and Moro streets, is projected to open Oct. 9, James Barr, co-owner, said.

Barr said the restaurant is different than other sandwich shops because the sandwiches are wraps, not bread.

"Most people think we're Subway with a tortilla, and that's not what it is," he said.

Rolly Polly also has rare flavor in its food, he said.

"The flavors that are included are always put on the same way," Barr said. "There are various combinations of dressings and meats."

The restaurant targets college students and the late crowd, Barr said. There is already one open in Lawrence.

Barr said Rolly Polly could be closed during times when there isn't much business.

"It will definitely be open after the bars let out," he said.

He said they will have a dining area, carry-out and delivery.

The most popular sandwich Rolly Polly offers is the basil cashew chicken. Barr said they might promote the restaurant by offering the sandwich free of charge in the store and for only a small charge for delivery.

Chuck Pence, general manager of Jimmy John's, said he isn't worried about the competition.

"When Pita Pit opened up, we didn't really experience a loss in business," he said.

"When something is brand new, everyone wants to try it, so it might affect business for a week or two."

However, Lyle Butler, Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce president, said Manhattan recently has had an influx of new restaurants such as Valentino's and Panera Bread.

"We've had a lot of restaurant venues that have opened up across Manhattan, and they seem to be doing well," Butler said. "I think it just gives students and people of the area another restaurant venue to go to."

Hurricane ravages Grenada, Barbados

By Ian James
OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — Hurricane Ivan took aim Thursday at Jamaica and possibly Florida after killing 23 people in five countries and devastating Grenada, where police fired tear gas to stop a looting frenzy and frightened students armed themselves with knives and sticks.

Ivan, the deadliest hurricane to hit the Caribbean in a decade, pummeled Grenada, Barbados and other southern islands on Tuesday.

It weakened slightly and was downgraded from a Category 5 hurricane — the most powerful — to a Category 4 storm packing 150 mph winds but was still expected to pound Jamaica, where officials urged a half million people to evacuate coastal and flood-prone areas.

Jamaican Prime Minister P.J. Patterson put security forces on alert against looting.

"All of us are continuing to hope and pray that by some miracle we may at the last minute be spared the worst," he said.

But the U.S. National Hurricane Center in Miami said Ivan appeared headed for a direct hit on Jamaica Friday.

The dead included a 75-year-old Canadian woman who drowned in a canal swollen by flood waters in Barbados after going out in the storm to search for her cat, and four youngsters in the capital of the Dominican Republic who were swept away by a giant wave Thursday even though the storm was nearly 200 miles from land.

U.S. officials ordered people to evacuate the Florida Keys after forecasters said the storm — the fourth major hurricane of a busy Atlantic season — could hit the island chain by Sunday after crossing over Cuba. It was the third evacuation ordered there in a month, following Hurricane Charley and hard on the heels of Hurricane Frances.

Officials were also considering evacuating the 1,000 American citizens in Grenada, mostly university students who said they want to leave.

The storm left its worst damage in Grenada, where from the air it appeared that nearly every house had been ripped apart. Hunks of twisted metal and splintered wood torn from homes were strewn across the hillsides and roads of this country of 100,000 people.

Many trees were snapped off, and those left standing were stripped of their leaves. The stone walls of the capital's cathedral withstood the storm, but the entire roof had caved in.

In St. George's, Grenada's

capital, police fired tear gas to try to stop a looting frenzy.

Hundreds of people, including entire families with children, smashed hurricane shutters and shop windows to take televisions and shopping carts of food. An Associated Press reporter watched people walk away with bed frames and mattresses on their heads.

Sixty soldiers from Barbados, Antigua and St. Kitts arrived to help restore order, military officials in Barbados said.

Thursday afternoon, police set up barricades on roads leading into the capital and ordered all but emergency personnel off the streets.

Hundreds of screaming people said they had to get to town to buy water and food.

"To be a good leader, one must attend practice, respect the team and players, work toward improving their rugby skills by working out, ask questions about the rules and show other people the amazing world of rugby," Flores said.

Amey said the goal for the season is to go to the national tournament.

Club faculty adviser Chris Sorensen said the tournament is similar to the final four in college basketball.

"It would be very difficult to get to the final four teams, but it could be done. However, the bottom line this season is to feel that we played good rugby as a team. It is so important in any sport," he said.

Sorensen, too, said he has loved rugby for some time now.

"When the chance came up to be the adviser, I grabbed it. I like being part of the team in that manner," he said.

Sorensen said Amey will be a great asset to the team as the president.

"Having worked with Luke, he's a good, straight-forward guy with his act together. You talk to him, and you know you are talking with a quality person," he said.

Amey said he does not see himself as someone to be put on a pedestal.

"I don't think of myself as a role model," he said. "I think of myself as another player out there. I just happen to be in charge of the paper work."

The team is traveling to Fayetteville, Ark., today to play the University of Arkansas.

Those interested in becoming part of the team can attend practices on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday at 6:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium, or contact Amey or Sorensen.

COLUMN | Cross country fans give due respect to team

little press.

At K-State — and most Division-I schools — football is king, and deservingly so. Football brings in television, merchandising contracts and much revenue for the school.

It also doesn't hurt that we have the reigning conference champions and one of the nation's best programs.

Volleyball doesn't bring in the revenue of football, but the team has been just as successful, winning a conference title of its own. Like football, it's conducive to the spectator.

You can come to a volleyball game, stand or sit in one place, and watch all the action unfold in front of you.

Cross country fans don't have it so easy. If you're lucky and can climb a big hill, you might be able to see most of a race. But usually you end up walking almost as far as the runners in your attempt to catch all the action.

I use the word "action" loosely.

It's not that fun to watch, and — speaking from experience — it's no fun to actually do.

The people who love it are those who find enjoyment in a sport that requires you to inflict as much pain on yourself as you can bear.

Everybody else just watches and shakes their heads.

Back to the K-State team.

The Wildcat harriers haven't had the success of the football or volleyball teams, but they deserve just as much respect.

Last week, the women took first and the men third at the Bob Timmons Invitational in Lawrence.

The women are led by senior Trisha Culbertson, an Academic All-American majoring in biological and agricultural engineering.

Senior Mathew Chesang paces the men. He was the top Wildcat finisher in every race last season.

Chesang and Culbertson both reached the NCAA National Championships in 2003.

If you get the chance, wake up early Saturday morning and go support the team. I won't be there. I'm going to go to the football game.

But I'll check their times throughout the season, and I'll see Chesang ran a 10K in 31 minutes, and I'll think, "that's averaging five minutes a mile."

For 6.2 miles.

And I'll think to myself, "Wow."

They deserve at least that much.

Kent is a junior in mass communications. You can email him at sports@pub.ksu.edu.

CROSS COUNTRY | Chesang to compete soon

18:09. The Wildcats were also helped along by the emergence of freshmen Stephanie Lavin and Whitney Patton, who placed sixth and 12th, respectively.

Culbertson said the team will be looking to improve on last week's surprising success and win its home meet.

"We have always felt like we can be at the level where we can win," she said. "We will be looking to tune up a little more and race as far as getting out there and pushing harder and being more competitive."

As for the men's team, it will welcome back top runner senior Mathew Chesang. Chesang, like Burrell, was held out of last week's meet in order to focus on training and improve fitness.

After last week's third-place finish, Smith said he will be looking for marked improvement from the men.

"I would expect them to raise their game, since the competition is getting better," he said. "Training will allow them to become more fit, and as they become more fit, their times will get faster."

Junior Joe Moore, after last week's fifth-place overall finish in Lawrence, will try to lead the Wildcats, who are trying to improve on last week's third-place finish.

Smith said he wants to see the rest of his team step up like Moore did in last week's race.

"We are going to be competitive if our other guys can match what Joe is doing," he said.

IDENTITY THEFT | Student ID cards at particular risk of theft

lost $5 billion because of identity theft last year.

Although instances of ID theft are on the rise, Grégoire said that such occurrences are rare in Manhattan.

"It isn't a very big problem," he said. "There aren't very many instances where the actual identity of a person is stolen. But it is consistent, meaning we might get two or three such cases a month. That's about it really."

However, Grégoire did say instances similar to identity theft happen quite often in Manhattan.

"We get a lot of criminal use of financial card cases," he said. "Stolen cards are used, debit card numbers are used on the Internet, that sort of thing. But there are still only about two or three cases where actual identities are stolen. In a lot of cases, the crimes occur out of our jurisdiction."

There have also been cases of K-State ID cards being misused. If students have had their K-State ID cards stolen, they need to contact the Student ID Center right away, said Craig Johnson, manager of the ID Center.

"If students report their card lost or stolen, we can change the deactivation number," he said.

"As soon as they realize their card is missing, students should contact us. The sooner they do, the less likely it is someone can use it. We do the best we can to make sure the cards are as secure as possible."

Johnson said college students may be at a higher risk for this type of theft due to the nature of college campuses.

"The fact is there's more interactivity going on," he said. "Students are out walking around. Most of the time they're carrying their ID card with them, which presents more of an opportunity for theft."

According to the FTC, consumers who think their personal information may have been abused should contact the fraud departments at any

Did you know? Identity theft

Your personal information may have been stolen and abused if:

- Your credit card statements show unauthorized charges and/or purchases that you know you did not make
- You fail to receive bills or credit card statements for charges you have made, when in the past you received them at the same time each month
- You are receiving phone calls from creditors trying to collect debts that are not yours one of the three major credit bureaus: Equifax (www.equifax.com), Experian (www.experian.com), and Trans Union (www.transunion.com).

A fraud alert requests creditors to contact consumers before opening any new accounts or making any changes to existing accounts. As soon as the credit bureau confirms the fraud alert, the other two bureaus will be notified to place alerts as well.

Commission officials suggest consumers then close any accounts they know have been tampered with or opened fraudulently.

Next, consumers should file a police report. They should get a copy of the report to submit to their creditors and anyone else that may require proof of the crime.

Finally, consumers need to file a complaint with the FTC itself. The FTC maintains a database of identity theft cases used by law enforcement agencies for investigations. Filing a complaint helps the FTC learn more about ID theft and the problems it creates, officials said.

When it comes to stopping ID theft, offense is the best defense. There's no surefire way to prevent all theft, but with a little bit of initiative, identity theft can be prevented.

The RCPD is willing to do whatever it can to help, Grégoire said.

"If they think their identity may have been stolen, students can contact me or anyone else at the Police Department," he said.

OUTAGE | Officials don't expect technical damage

Heptig said the switches had to be checked before buildings could be turned back on.

"We had to make sure if everything was ok," he said.

Power outages can cause problems for technology, but there doesn't seem to be any problems this time, Heptig said.

"You react when it happens. It's pretty hard to predict when," he said. "At this time, we don't think we've lost anything."

Possible problems could still be reported, though, such as the ruin machines, he said.

Lynda Andrus, professor of art, said her 3D design class was without power for about 15 minutes.

"The students continued to work," she said. "We didn't even discuss leaving."

She said it was slightly more difficult to see, but it didn't really affect the students' progress on their paintings.

"We have lots of windows, so it was pretty bright," she said. "If we were using computers, it would have made a difference."

This is not the first time K-State has experienced power outages, Heptig said. The transformer in Anderson Hall quit working during this summer.

"It's sitting there with a temporary transformer," he said. "We are getting the other one rebuilt."

that he and his administration have done a good job. The Democrats are critical of various things, but if we have another major catastrophe, they would blame him."

An Associated Press poll released Thursday shows 98 percent of those polled remember exactly what they were doing three years ago when the World Trade Center and Pentagon were attacked. Republicans and Democrats were equally likely to say their dominant feeling about that day was deep anger, according to the Associated Press.

While terrorism prevention is important, Focke said, other issues should get equal attention.

"It's a very important issue, but it's not the only issue. There are a lot of other issues that are important, mainly the economy and what we are going to do about the deficit. Those things are just as devastating to the country as a terrorist attack."

Hostetler said the criticism following the attacks, including the 9/11 Commission's report, will not affect Bush on election day.

"I think the president has directed us in the right course," he said. "You can always look back and blame people, and there will always be mistakes."

Whether it's discussing the failures of Sept. 11, or the lessons learned, Kerry and Bush must get back to the issues, Focke said.

"I just wish the candidates would get back to talking issues rather than attacking people," she said. "A lot of people only listen to the negative, and that's unfortunate. I wish they would get more focused on what we can do to move forward."

A Sense of Urgency

Scott Edmonds sacks KU backup quarterback Nick Kurtenbach during last season's game at KSU Stadium.

New linebacker coach focuses on improving defensive unit

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State announced the hiring of Chris Cosh as its new linebackers coach, defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said he knew they had chosen one of the best coaches in the game.

"I think he's great," Elliott said. "Everywhere he's ever been, he's been a difference-maker, and he's been an excellent football coach."

Brought in to replace Brett Bielema, Cosh was hired last February after completing five years on Lou Holtz's staff at the University of South Carolina. During the 2003 season, Cosh served as the Gamecocks' defensive coordinator.

When he arrived at K-State, Cosh was met with the task of finding replacements for graduating linebackers Josh Buhl and Brian Hickman.

Cosh said he felt the pressure, but he was confident in his abilities to teach the younger players.

"In coaching, there's pressure anytime," he said. "But that's why you go out and compete." Junior strong-side linebacker Matt Butler said Cosh's effect has been significant. "Coach Cosh has brought fundamentals, and he's brought a real caring attitude and intensity," he said. "I haven't looked at a lot of things the way he looks at it."

Elliott said he knows that the linebackers have responded positively to Cosh's guidance.

"I think they feel good about him," Elliott said. "He's a great guy to play for, and I think they really like that."

For Cosh, a graduate of Virginia Tech where he played linebacker for the Hokies, the journey to K-State has been a long one.

He started his coaching career as a student assistant at Virginia Tech in 1983. Since then, his stops have included places such as Minnesota, Illinois, Maryland, Michigan State and most recently, South Carolina.

During those years, Cosh became known as a superb defensive mind. Under his guidance, players such as Simeon Rice at Illinois and John Abraham at South Carolina were voted All-Americans.

Cosh said, through each coaching stop, he picked up valuable experience.

"I've been coaching for many years," he said. "I think I bring to K-State the ability to teach fundamentals, and I have some experience."

In last week's game against Western Kentucky, the linebackers came under heavy criticism for their play.

Elliott said he believes that if any coach can shore up the questions at the position, it's Cosh.

"He spends all kinds of extra time with them," Elliott said. "He is doing a great job, and he's got a tough situation right now and getting through it pretty good."

As for Cosh, he said he just wants to help the team improve week to week by being a mentor to his players.

"I think I'm a teacher first. Coaches should be teachers," he said. "I just focus on getting people better and taking them from where they're at and trying to improve them daily."

Wildcat defense ready for Bulldogs

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cedrick Williams can't wait to get on the field. After K-State's 27-13 win over Western Kentucky on Saturday, the senior cornerback said the team is ready to step up its play after what many viewed as a mediocre performance.

"I want to go straight to Saturday right now, just to show we are a lot better team than that," Williams said. "I know we can play a lot better than we did."

In K-State's season opener against the Division I-AA Hilltoppers, the Wildcats' defense gave up 259 yards of total offense, 13 first

The Trojans amassed only 138 yards of total offense and five points against the Wildcats.

This season, the Wildcats will face a tougher team in its second game when the Fresno State Bulldogs make their first-ever trip to the state of Kansas. The Bulldogs are coming off a 35-16 win over Washington.

Simmons falls off depth chart

Linebacker back in the doghouse, coaches say potential is still there

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This was supposed to be Marvin Simmons' big game.

When asked at K-State Media Day on Aug. 7 what game he was looking forward to most this season, the Compton, Calif., native was quick and clear with his response.

"Fresno State," he said. "I know a lot of guys on the team. I haven't seen them in a couple years, and I don't even know if they know I'm still playing."

Simmons said he wanted to let people in his home state know he was still the type of player he was at Compton College. There, Simmons was a first-team All-America linebacker his freshman year before taking a path that led him to transferring to K-State from the junior college.

"I know a lot of people back home will be watching, and I'm very anxious to prove what I can do," he said. "And to prove to the fans and the team that I can be accountable and do what it takes not to just get on the field but stay on the field and be a leader."

Barring a dramatic turn of events, Simmons will not get that chance Saturday in the Wildcats' 11:10 a.m. game against Fresno State — if ever.

course of the past several weeks, as he has found himself in the doghouse of Coach Bill Snyder and defensive coordinator Bob Elliott after being listed as a starting outside linebacker on the team's depth chart prior to the season.

"It's a mental-health issue," Snyder said at the Western Kentucky post-game press conference Saturday as to why Simmons did not play in the contest.

This is not the first time Simmons has found himself at odds with the coaching staff. Last

PLAYER TO WATCH

It's obvious from last week's game that sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier already has a favorite target. Look for transfer wide receiver Yamon Fingers to have a big game against the Fresno State tight coverage on the corners.

The Wildcats will bounce back

All aboard the K-State-hater bandwagon.
It's funny how perceptions of the Big 12 Champion Wildcats have changed just in the matter of a week following K-State's too close for comfort, 27-13 win over Western Kentucky.

You already hear the Wildcat faithful panicking.
"Only 27 points against a Division I-AA team? We're going to get creamed by the real competition."

"This is going to be 2001 all over again. Here comes 6-6."

Or my favorite: "Did you see what Fresno State did to Washington? They're going to come in here and beat us."

Calm down, campers.
Granted, the Western Kentucky game was far from pretty, but don't go over the edge here.

Let's take a collective deep breath and remember a few things.
First of all, K-State still has Darren Sproles, arguably the best running back in college football.

Sproles racked up a huge game against the Hilltoppers, going for 221 yards, but here's the thing: he has better efforts in front of him.

He even said it in the post-game press conference that he could have played better.

A guy who just ran for more than 200 yards — true, it was Western Kentucky — said he was not satisfied with his performance.

If I'm a Fresno State Bulldog, I'm freaking out right now.

In the post-opening weekend talk, it also seems like we've forgotten how well Dylan Meier fared his first time out.

He was very composed running the offense, only making a few errant throws, looking comfortable working with his receivers and tossing no interceptions.

As coach Bill Snyder and his assistants have said, Meier manages the offense as well as they've seen from anyone his age. That's an ability you usually don't lose.

As for that lack of red-zone efficiency we saw in game one, it is a problem.

However, when you look at the mistakes that occurred inside the red zone, I wouldn't expect to see more of them later this season.

Two Sproles' fumbles? Raise your hand if you expect that to happen again.

Same with the botched center-to-quarterback exchange in the final drive of the first half. These are things that can be attributed to first-game mistakes.

"What about the defense?"

Yes, the defense does appear to be the weakness on this team so far this season, though much of that is due to factors beyond the players' control.

The linebacker unit looked nothing like it was supposed to Saturday.

But help could be on the way with middle linebacker Ted Sims' return a possibility.

Also, look for the coaches to become more aggressive with the defensive line and linebackers in an effort to get to the quarterback Saturday — something that didn't happen against Western Kentucky.

The secondary has a few issues, especially with getting burned for the occasional downfield strike, but the Bulldogs better watch out.

Throw Cedrick Williams' way, and — well — you've got problems.

Now, for this Saturday morning's clash.

I know Fresno State smoked Washington, I know this.

But after watching the game, I can honestly say fans should fear the Bulldogs less.

I know the trendy thing to do is look at the score, scream "oh my god" and worry. But the Bulldogs scored three defensive touchdowns in a 35-16 win.

Do the math, and that's only 14 points on offense against a less-than stellar Washington team.

And I'd almost go all-in on Meier and the offense taking care of the ball better than the Huskies did with their five turnovers.

I remember telling anybody who would listen to watch the Fresno State game.

Nobody listened; everybody laughed. Now many of those same people are predicting doom this Saturday.

I'm not buying it. I predict K-State will play with an added intensity lacking last week and take out Fresno State.

GAMETIME

OFFENSE

Edge

Sproles, Sproles and more Sproles. That's what Fresno State will see Saturday. After a typical 42-carry, 221-yard performance last week against Western Kentucky, senior running back Darren Sproles is still K-State's primary weapon. When the Wildcats do take to the air, look for quarterback Dylan Meier and the receiving corps to try to exploit the aggressive coverage of Fresno State's corners for big gains. K-State must keep turnovers to a minimum after the Bulldogs had five takeaways last week.

With nine starters back from last year's unit, the Bulldog offense is experienced. They feature quarterback Paul Pinegar, who has more than 4,700 career passing yards, and running back Dwayne Wright, who gained more than 1,000 yards in 2003. The Bulldogs are the most inexperienced at wide receiver, where they lost two players from the last year's squad to the NFL. Overall, the offense is well-balanced between pass and run. Last week, the Bulldogs rushed for 137 yards and passed for 125.

The K-State defense lacked a little of its usual swagger last week, giving up 259 yards of offense to Western Kentucky. They'll have to do better this week, and they will. This group is young and inexperienced and will continue to improve each game, and the possible return of junior linebacker Ted Sims from an injury will help. If the Wildcat secondary limits Fresno State's big plays and the front seven can pressure Bulldog quarterback Paul Pinegar, K-State should slow Fresno State's offense.

Their secondary was the story in the Bulldogs' 35-16 win over Washington. They snatched four interceptions and returned two for touchdowns. The defense scored 21 points for Fresno State, which also returned a fumble for a touchdown. All-Western Athletic Conference safety James Sanders, who had two picks and one touchdown last week, is the leader of the Bulldog secondary. Defensive ends Brian Morris and Garrett McIntyre, who combined for 17.5 sacks last year, anchor the Bulldog frontline.

SPECIAL TEAMS

If the Wildcats limit their mistakes, they have the better unit and will win the special teams battle. Besides giving up an onside kick and botching a snap on a field goal, K-State had an otherwise strong special teams outing last week.

Led by kicker Brett Vintainer, who was perfect on point-after attempts last season and 21-28 on field goals, the Fresno State special teams are solid. Last year punter Mike Lingua averaged 38 yards a kick. The Bulldogs never allowed a blocked punt.

INTANGIBLES

K-State is coming off a lackluster performance last week with plenty to prove. Also, the Wildcats are at home. Third, and most importantly, they won't overlook Fresno State. The Wildcats remember all too well when another mid-major school, Marshall, beat them on their home field last season. And finally, the 11:10 a.m. start time will feel like 9:10 a.m. for Fresno State.

Fresno State has been to five straight bowls and has beaten its share of BCS conference opponents. The Bulldogs aren't scared, and they're playing with nothing to lose. The win over Washington, coupled with K-State's less-than-dominant win last week, only fuels their confidence to come into KSU Stadium and pull off an upset of No. 13 K-State.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 34 - FRESNO STATE 20

This isn't your typical K-State non-conference game. Fresno State is no cupcake. It's a quality opponent that's better than several Big 12 teams. It will be a dogfight — pardon the pun — but in the end, K-State will outlast the Bulldogs. The Wildcats simply have more firepower and have a slight advantage in every aspect of the game. Of course, the same could've been said of last year's match-up with Marshall. History won't repeat itself.

K-State takes measure of opponent

Wildcats hope to continue 15-year streak of 2-0 start to season

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 13 Wildcats have opened 2-0 for the past 15 seasons under Coach Bill Snyder and aim to extend that streak to 16 against the Fresno State Bulldogs on Saturday.

The Wildcats (1-0) opened the season with a 27-13 win over the Western Kentucky

Hilltoppers in Manhattan.

Behind their defense, the Bulldogs (1-0) got off to a good start with a 35-16 win over the Washington Huskies in Seattle, Wash. The win improved Fresno State's record against Bowl Championship Series schools to 8-6.

The aggressive Bulldog defense forced five fumbles and scored three defensive touchdowns in the win.

"Defensively, they are an awfully fast football team," Snyder said. "They are a very aggressive football team; they have great pursuit and are very physical. They are the complete package."

Fresno State's defense was led by junior safety James Sanders, who registered seven total tackles, two interceptions — one for a touchdown — and a sack. Sanders also was named the Western Athletic Conference's defensive player of the week.

Co-offensive coordinator and wide receivers coach Greg Peterson said the game should be a great match-up for both schools.

"They are very athletic on defense," he said. "They have excellent team speed, and they play a tough brand of football. We have to play a tough-minded game."

On offense, the Bulldogs were paced by junior running back Dwayne Wright and junior quarterback Paul Pinegar. Wright rushed for 109 yards on 24 carries and a touchdown.

"I like the combination of running backs they have," Snyder said. "I mean, Wright is a 1,000 rusher, and he ends up as No. 2 on the depth chart. They have good skill at those positions."

Pinegar hurt the Huskies with his legs and arm. The 6-foot-4, 220-pound quarterback rushed for 28 yards on six carries and completed 13 of 21 passes for 125 yards, with one touchdown and one interception.

"I like Pinegar; he's a 60-percent thrower through his career there, and his experience shows up in just the way he manages a game and operates the offense," Snyder said. "His stats may indicate he is not a real mobile quarterback, but that's not true at all. He's very capable of pulling the ball down and scrambling with it."

Cedrick Williams is a talker. At the football press conferences, you always can find Williams by the crowd of reporters around him.

But K-State's senior cornerback is more than a quote machine. Williams has plenty of "walk" to go with his talk.

Last year, the transfer from Garden City Community College made an immediate effect. Williams started in K-State's last 11 games, grabbing five interceptions, including two against Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl. He also was an honorable mention All-Big 12 selection.

So how good can Williams be this year?

"As good as I want to be," he said. "With being coached by coach (Bob) Elliott and coming everyday — not just on game day — but to practice, I feel like this has been the hardest year I've had. I've been pushing myself, because I want to be on the top defensive backs in the country."

As a senior, Williams has a much larger leadership role as one of two

Red, white, blue and purple pride

Saturday is an important day for the K-State football team and fans.

The No. 13 Wildcats will get their first real test of the season against a talented Fresno State team, but Saturday is also an important day for the nation.

This weekend's game falls on the third anniversary of the Sept. 11 tragedies in New York, Washington, D.C., and Pennsylvania – a day when the lives of every American changed.

Sept. 11 also marked the beginning of America's war on terror and a day we sent our brave young men and women of the armed forces overseas to protect our way of life.

At the time of the attacks, fall sports were in full swing and because of the uncertainty and sorrow we felt as a nation, the decision was made to cancel all sporting events.

It was a no-brainer.

I couldn't have cared less about who was going to win the World Series or what my fantasy football team was going to do that week. All I cared about was hearing from my uncle who worked close to the World Trade Center. Seven grueling hours later, we heard from him that he was safe.

The games eventually went on, and stadiums provided a place to forget about the awful events and show patriotism with flags and yellow ribbons.

Almost three years later, we are still fighting the same war, and the wounds have not fully healed, but the games have helped us move on.

Week in and week out, we talk about the upcoming games on the schedule and how our favorite teams will fare, giving us something to debate about other than the war. It's not that we don't think about our friends and family over there fighting, but it's something to remind us of how it used to be.

This Saturday is different. This Saturday is a day to remember the ones lost and the ones still fighting, a time to once again come together as a nation and show our support.

I can't think of a better way to come together than at KSU Stadium with family, friends and strangers.

I know that horrific day seems far away, but for everyone who lost someone in the attacks or lost someone in the ensuing war, they live with it every day.

So, at the game Saturday, don't forget to bring your American flags and yellow ribbons along with all that purple.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

For the third time in the past two seasons, a non-conference K-State football game will be televised.

Saturday's game versus Fresno State will appear on Fox Sports Net. The game, which begins at 11:10 a.m. at KSU Stadium, was not originally scheduled for broadcast.

Associate Athletics Director Casey Scott explained why this game was chosen to be televised after it was initially not listed.

"The Big 12 has agreements with ABC and Fox. If ABC decides they don't want to televise the game, we then ask Fox Sports, and if they decide they don't want to televise it, they goes to TBS," Scott said. "If they decide they don't want to televise it, then it is not aired at all."

The game, like K-State's other two non-conference games this year, was originally passed on by all three networks.

After consideration, Fox Sports decided to air the game.

"The networks chose not to televise this game, but we felt that the game should be televised for exposure of the school, financial reasons and also for exposure of Darren Sproles for Heisman," Scott said.

Since the Big 12 has the rights to television agreements, it controls what is shown and what is not shown.

"No institution has the ability to air its own games, the Game time K-State vs. Fresno State

Where: KSU Stadium
Television: Fox Sports Net

Big 12 decides which games will be aired and which games won't," Scott said.

As for upcoming games, Scott said he was not sure which games will be televised in the future.

"For the first three weeks of the season, the networks decide what to televise and what not to televise in early June," he said. "For every week, after the first three weeks, it is a week-to-week selection with either 12 or six days to decide. We expect to have at least four conference games televised this year."

Keith Eyestone, owner of the Purple Pig, said business is higher when games are televised.

"When the game is available on TV, our business stays up; when it's not, we tend to have a slight decline," he said.

The Purple Pig can show as many as 12 games at the same time with their ESPN Gameplan package.

"Even when K-State games aren't televised, people still come in and watch the other games that are carried by Gameplan," Eyestone said.

Curt Theobald, floor manager at Kite's Bar & Grill, said Kite's offers a special menu for patrons on Saturdays.

"We offer a gameday menu every Saturday K-State plays," Theobald said. "Our business tends to get slow when we aren't televised, but when we are on TV, we tend to get a little busier."

Though Big 12 teams cannot televise their own games, Big 12 basketball teams can, Scott said.

"The Big 12 has a contract with ESPN; if they pass on it, it comes to us, and we can put a package together if we want."

FRESNO STATE | Wildcats prepare to face fiery defense

Senior cornerback David Rose said Fresno State isn't going to hold anything back.

"They are going to attack it and come after us," Rose said. "They have two great backs back there, and they have a lot of skill at receiver and their quarterback is good."

"It's definitely going to be a dogfight," junior tackle Jeromey Clary said. "To put up 21 points defensively is pretty amazing, so it's definitely a feat, and it will be fun to have them come here and play against them."

In the victory, the offense racked up more than 500 yards. Senior running back Darren Sproles finished with 221 yards rushing on 42 carries, averaging 5.3 yards per carry.

Sproles' 42 carries were the second-highest total in his career, but Snyder said he was comfortable giving Sproles the ball any number of times.

"There's no plan going in that says, 'OK, let Darren carry the ball 25 times, 30-35, or 40,' or whatever the case is," Snyder said. "I'm comfortable with however many carries; if the carries are 10 and we are doing what we need to do, then I am comfortable with that and so is he."

Dylan Meier made his first start as the Wildcats' quarterback against Western Kentucky, completing 12 of 18 passes for 183 yards and rushing for 60 yards on nine carries, including a nine-yard touchdown run.

"I thought he did some nice things at times," co-offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach Del Miller said. "For his first time out, I was pleased."

Snyder said K-State will have its hands full with Fresno State.

"They are not a team that gets intimidated," he said. "I think it's a very confident football team. I think they feel they are on center stage with whoever they line-up against and, that's the way it should be."

WILLIAMS | Cornerback looks to leave his legacy with well-rounded play and consistency

Rose said the change in Williams' role from last year to this season is evident.

"This year he's brought a lot of leadership to the table. He's definitely picked up his leadership role this year," Rose said. "Last year he was a little more quiet and was getting used to the system. This year he has a good grasp of the system, and he's stepping up as a leader."

The secondary's other returning starter, junior safety Jesse Tetuan, said Williams enhances several aspects of the defense.

"(He brings) experience from last year and his speed and his man-to-man cover ability," Tetuan said. "It's good to have corners that when the situation calls for it, you can put him on a receiver and lock him down, and we don't have to send extra guys to go do it. Cedrick has the ability to do it on his own."

In 2004, Williams said he hopes to continue his improve-

He said his play in last Saturday's game showed the progress he has made.

"Saturday was the best game I played — an all-around fundamental game," he said. "I stayed patient, I didn't fall asleep and when the play came, I made it. That shows my maturity. Last year, I would've been looking for plays and would've been places I wasn't supposed to be."

Williams, who has sub-4.3 speed in the 40-meter dash and wears number four, is often compared to another K-State cornerback who wore that number.

But Williams isn't interested in being the next Terence Newman.

"I just want to be Cedrick Williams; I don't want to be Terence Newman," he said. "Terence Newman's a great kid and great athlete, but I just want to be me."

Maybe when his career at K-State is over, people will wonder who the next Cedrick Williams will be. That would give him something to talk about.

Cedrick Williams breaks up a pass to Western Kentucky's Earl Clayton during the fourth quarter of the Wildcats' win last Saturday.

the highly-touted Simmons played in just three games for Snyder.

Elliott said Simmons — now a junior — has missed several practices so far this season and wonders just as much as fans and the media about the linebacker's thought process.

"Your guess is just as good as mine," Elliott said. "He just hasn't practiced for various reasons. We're not going to put a guy on the field who hasn't practiced."

Elliott suggested at Tuesday's press conference that issues outside of football could be playing a factor in the former Parade High School All-American's troubles with the team.

"You know, all the reasons aren't his fault," he said. "There have been a lot of things that have happened to him. He just hasn't been able to get out on the field, and we can't count on him. Until we can count on him, we can't put him out there."

The K-State coaching staff has not gone into specifics as to why Simmons has missed practices and fell out of favor and, according to Elliott, is not currently on the depth chart.

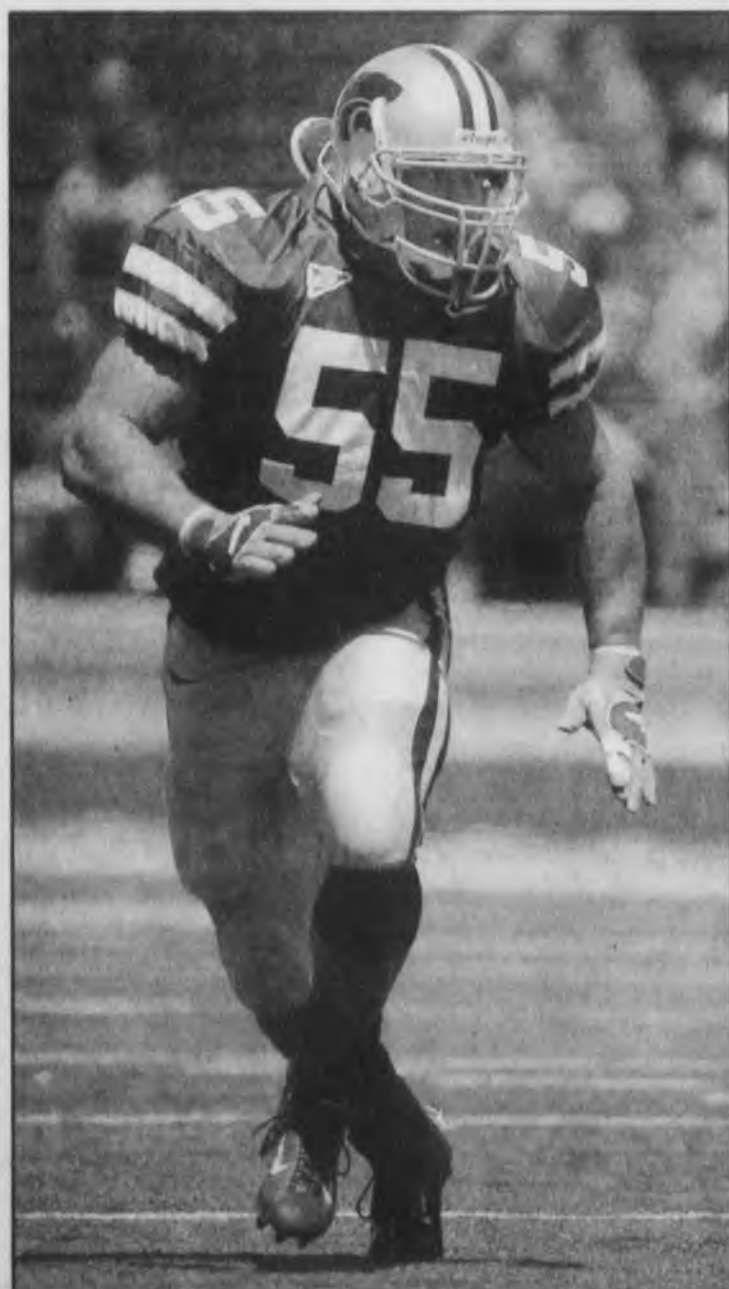

What is clear is the affect the absence of Simmons has had on the linebacker core.

The Wildcats were forced to use several different combinations of linebackers in last Saturday's Western Kentucky game, as junior starting middle linebacker Ted Sims also did not play due to injury.

Junior Matt Butler was the only listed starter at linebacker who actually played against the Hilltoppers, as the Wildcats rotated Maurice Thurmond, Sean Lowe, Kyle Suttles and Brandon Archer into the other two linebacker positions.

"It's a challenge to miss great players. We just have to step up and fill the void," said Butler of the absence of Simmons on the field.

"He brings instincts and great linebacker play."

Simmons finished with 125 tackles, 13 sacks and two interceptions at Compton College. The 2002 first team All-America pick initially signed a letter of intent with USC.

K-State will be without Simmons' instincts on Saturday, as the defense attempts to contain Fresno State running back Dwayne Wright, who rushed for 109 yards against Washington in the Bulldogs' 35-16 win last weekend.

Will Simmons be able to turn it around this season?

Elliott said Simmons has the ability and physical tools to be an impact player for the Wildcats and is still in the right environment to do so.

"There's a lot of guys out on the street corners today that could've been, would've been, should've been great players. But the difference is, Marvin's here," Elliott said. "He's earned a chance, and if he can just get himself in the right, then he's got a chance to help us."

gained Fresno State by 98 total yards, the Bulldogs had a balanced attack, gaining 137 yards on the ground and 125 yards through the air.

Williams said the Bulldog offense will be a challenge for the Wildcat defense.

"You can't focus on the run too much or the pass too much or they will pick us apart if we are not balanced," he said.

"The best thing you can do is just split your gaps, play your game and we will get it done on Saturday."

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said the defense needs to come together as a team.

"We just need to get more in synch as a team - better pass rushing, better coverage," he said.

"We should make a big improvement. Everybody on the team is working on little things that we overlooked during the last game."

Senior cornerback David Rose said the problems on defense against Western Kentucky stemmed from assignment confusion.

"We have to learn to make adjustments on the fly," he said. "Last week we were a little slow on the adjustments."

Despite the perceived problems on the defensive side of the ball, Rose said he and his teammates will be ready for Saturday.

"We have a tradition here of having great defenses and to be a part of that, you have to hold your end of the rope."

Left: Jermaine Berry finished with seven tackles and had the lone sack for the Wildcats on Saturday. Last year Berry finished with 82 tackles and seven sacks.

Far Left: Kevin Huntley takes down a member of Western Kentucky's offense during the third quarter of Saturday's game. The Cats will face Fresno State this weekend at KSU Stadium.

Attacks kill nearly 60 Sunday in Iraq

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Insurgents hammered central Baghdad on Sunday with one of their most intense mortar and rocket barrages ever in the heart of the capital, heralding a day of violence that killed nearly 60 people nationwide as security appeared to spiral out of control.

At least 37 people were killed in Baghdad alone. Many of them died when a U.S. helicopter fired on a disabled U.S.

Bradley fighting vehicle as Iraqis swarmed around it, cheering, throwing stones and waving the black and yellow sunburst banner of Iraq's most-feared terror organization.

The dead from the helicopter strike included Arab television reporter Mazen al-Tumeizi, who screamed, "I'm dying! I'm dying!" as a cameraman recorded the chaotic scene. An Iraqi cameraman working for the Reuters news agency and an Iraqi freelance photographer for Getty Images were wounded.

Maimed and lifeless bodies of young men and boys lay in the street as the stricken U.S. vehicle was engulfed in flames and thick black smoke.

Across the country, the death toll Sunday was at least 59, according to figures from the Health Ministry, the Multinational Force command and local authorities.

Nearly 200 people were wounded, more than half of them in Baghdad.

Strong detonations again shook the center of Baghdad after sunset Sunday. There were no reports of damage or casualties.

As the early morning barrage was under way in Baghdad, insurgents attacked the infamous U.S.-run Abu Ghraib prison on the city's western edge. Several mortar shells exploded outside the complex about 6 a.m., and about 20 minutes later a pickup truck packed with artillery shells crashed through the chain-link fence on the outer perimeter.

Fort Riley tank crewman killed in grenade attack

A Fort Riley soldier died Tuesday in Iraq.

Spc. Yoe M. Anerios, 20, was killed near Sadr City during a rocket-propelled grenade attack. Anerios was a tank crewman assigned to Company C, 2nd Battalion, 70th Armor, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division.

Anerios, of Newark, N.J., had been stationed at Fort Riley since January 2003 and was deployed to Iraq in June 2004. He had a previous tour in Iraq in 2003.

Forty-two Fort Riley soldiers have been killed during Operation Iraqi Freedom. As of Friday, the total number of American soldiers killed since March 2003 was 1,008, according to the Defense Department. Of those, 762 died as a result of hostile action, and 246 died of non-hostile causes. The figures include three military civilians.

Bulldogs dismantle Wildcats in 'all facets of the game,' Coach Bill Snyder says

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State was supposed to receive a test from the Fresno State Bulldogs.

But few could have expected this. The Wildcats were dominated in every aspect of Saturday's nationally-televised game, falling 45-21 to the Bulldogs.

It was the worst K-State defeat to a regular season non-conference opponent since the Washington Huskies beat the Wildcats 56-3 in 1991.

"We got soundly beat today in all facets of the game — offense, defense and kicking game," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I've been here for 16 years. You can remember some of the 1-10 and 5-6 (seasons). We never had a football team that just got beat up as badly as we did today."

The K-State offense was stagnant throughout the game, compiling only 180 total yards.

Senior running back Darren Sproles struggled to break out against the Bulldog defense, rushing for 37 yards on 11 carries.

Fresno State Coach Pat Hill said his team wanted to prove it could handle containing the explosive Sproles.

"He is an outstanding player," Hill said. "Our goal was to work hard on defense and for him to respect us after the game, because we respect him."

Defensively, things were no better for the Wildcats.

K-State gave up 400 yards of total offense, though the game did start off on a positive note.

Decade-old assault weapon ban expires, sales of arms legal again

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The sale of certain assault weapons became legal today following the expiration of a 10-year-old law.

The Brady Bill, which was passed in 1994, banned 19 types of semiautomatic weapons and several accessories common to military and crime-related weapons.

Some Kansans said they expect little change from the expiration.

"I don't look to buy any," said Mike Weisbender, owner of Ole Mike's Shooters Supply & Tackle.

Weisbender said the law had an effect on his business when it was instituted, but he expects little change in his business since the ban has expired.

The primary effect of the ban's expiration would be an increase in crime, a spokeswoman for U.S. Rep. Dennis Moore, D-Kan., said.

Columnist Jonas Hogg explains why society will benefit from the bill's expiration.

Rebecca Black, Moore's deputy communications director, said the bill has led to decreased violence and that Moore thought the law should be extended. Moore co-sponsored a bill that would have extended the ban, which has been stuck in subcommittee since April.

Weisbender said, though, that he has not seen any statistics that have convinced him the bill has been effective.

"Lots of guns on there aren't really assault weapons," Weisbender said.

A recent poll showed about two-thirds of Americans agreed with Moore's stance that the ban should be extended. But Ralph Goodwin, president of the

A mushroom cloud that billowed up from North Korea was not caused by a nuclear explosion, South Korean and U.S. officials said Sunday, but they said the cause was a mystery. Secretary of State Colin Powell confirmed that unusual activity had recently been detected at some of North Korea's atomic sites, but said there was no concrete evidence the North's secretive communist regime was preparing for its first nuclear test explosion.

Hurricane Ivan battered the Cayman Islands with ferocious 150-mph winds Sunday, flooding homes, ripping off roofs and toppling trees. Ivan has killed at least 60 people and was expected to strike western Cuba on Monday. More than 1 million Cubans were evacuated from their homes.

A suspected arson fire raced through an apartment complex Sunday in suburban Columbus, Ohio, killing 10 people and forcing others to jump from third-story windows to escape. At least 53 people were left homeless by the blaze.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Russia unifies in grief

Grigory Dukor | REUTERS

Relatives grieve over the body of Vasily Reshetnyak, an eight-year-old hostage killed in Russia's school siege, during his funeral Tuesday in the town of Beslan. Russian President Vladimir Putin rejected any dialogue with Chechen separatists, blamed for at least 335 deaths in the school hostage siege, as hundreds of thousands joined rallies against terrorism.

Staff and wire reports

GLOBAL TERRORISM

Public outcry arose in Russia in a stand against terrorism last week. More than 350 people were killed by terrorists after a siege at a school.

People flooded the streets Wednesday in Moscow to show unity against terrorism.

The standoff in Beslan was blamed on Chechens and other Islamic militants.

CLINTON'S SURGERY

Former President Bill Clinton recovered from quadruple bypass surgery in New York last week.

Clinton, 58, entered the hospital Sept. 3, complaining of chest pains.

The president was said to be recovering as expected.

HURRICANE HELL

Florida and the Caribbean islands continued to get battered by hurricanes, increasing damage and death counts from previous storms.

Frances, downgraded from a hurricane to a tropical storm killed 14 in Georgia and Florida, while Ivan made its way toward the United States. Ivan struck Granada and killed 23 in Jamaica.

MOURNFUL MILESTONE

The number of U.S. military killed in Iraq passed 1,000 on Tuesday, as insurgents resumed attacks in Fallujah.

On Wednesday, U.S. warplanes began increased attacks on Fallujah, killing at least six.

BAD ENDING FOR GENESIS

Adding to NASA's recent list of problems, the Genesis spacecraft slammed into the Earth at nearly 200 miles per hour on Wednesday.

Scientists were able to recover at least part of the solar particles gathered by the craft.

The craft was supposed to be snagged by helicopters flown by stunt pilots, but the parachutes failed to deploy.

INTEL MONEY

The Bush administration said Wednesday it will give full budgetary authority over much of the nation's intelligence community to the new intelligence director.

The unification of the U.S. intelligence agencies under one central director was one of the key suggestions of the 9/11 Commission.

DEFICIT DEBACLE

The federal government will have its largest deficit ever, according to a Congressional Budget Office prediction.

The $422 billion deficit is actually smaller than what many analysts predicted earlier in the year — a change Republicans said was good news.

If the prediction is correct, it would top last year's record-setting deficit of $375 billion — which Democrats plan to use to their advantage in the November election.

Speaker to address issues of justice, human rights

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An organization speaking to universities across the country and gaining popularity on national news stations has a speaker coming to campus tonight.

Larry Martin, vice president of Education and the Dean of the International Justice Mission Institute presents "Seeking Justice," at 7 tonight in the K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom.

The event is sponsored by the Ichthus Christian Fellowship.

The International Justice Mission is a human rights organization helping people who suffer injustices.

The organization works toward justice through both casework and education, said John Luthi, Ichthus group member and senior in construction science and management.

Luthi said it is important for students to hear Martin's speech, because his message utilizes the expertise of lawyers, detectives and social workers.

"IJM is a Christian organization, and Mr. Martin would Intersection requires more work

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Congestion at the corner of Bluemont Avenue and Third Street continues, even though road work was finished during the summer.

Jeff Hancock, city engineer, said the intersection is more congested because students are back in Manhattan for the fall semester.

"It worked really well since the students weren't here this summer," he said.

Despite the continued congestion, the intersection still is improved from before, Hancock said.

"It's a lot better than what it used to be, but it's still not as good as it should be," he said.

The timing of the traffic light system is off in some places, Hancock said. Some of those problems will be adjusted to better fit traffic needs later this month.

He said the traffic control system is difficult to operate, so some tweaking is needed to get everything running the way it should.

"This is just a very technically mind-boggling traffic control system," Hancock said. "It's probably one of the most, if not the most, complicated systems there are."

Malo Eteuini, operating partner of Sonic, said the biggest problems lies when turning left onto Bluemont from Third.

"We were sitting and wondering how long the light was, so we timed it," he said. "If you are on the turn, it only turns green for 10 seconds."

However, that has been fixed to 20 seconds now, Hancock said. It is only 10 seconds during rush times when people will be going to and from work between 7 and 9 a.m. and 4 and 6 p.m.

He said Bluemont needs the extra time, because more people travel it at those times.

Eteuini said he likes the new intersection better, though.

"From a business standpoint, it has increased visibility and accessibility," he said.

Jessie Jordan, manager of Short Stop, said the biggest problem is the congestion.

"The back-up is still almost as bad," she said.

Jordan said the problem might be unavoidable to a certain extent.

"With two traffic lights so close together and such a high volume of traffic, there is going to congestion," she said.

TO THE POINT Fans should continue cheers despite loss

There's no way to sugar-coat it — the football team's 45-21 loss to Fresno State was ugly.

In front of 46,468 fans at KSU Stadium and a nationwide audience watching on Fox Sports Net, K-State played its worst game in years.

It is understandable that students who live for football season every year, are disappointed right now.

However, there's a difference between being a little heart-broken after a poor performance from your team and completely bailing out on them.

Fresno State's offense scoring at will and the Wildcats getting physically-dominated on every play were less disturbing than what happened in the stands.

Hundreds of students and other Wildcat fans began taking to the exits halfway through the third quarter, continuing until the final seconds ticked away in the fourth quarter.

Those who call themselves fans should have stayed.

All too often in sports, fans will cheer for a team only when it is successful and then abandon it when the same team hits a rough spot.

It might be difficult, but fans should stand by this program that has provided so many good moments and memories.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

As of today, we are officially free of the 1994 Assault Weapons Ban. If anyone is wondering what this amounts to, allow me to put it in one word: zip.

Certainly the James Brady bunch and all the other gun grabbers are going to be pounding on their drums and warning us of the impending massacre we all face. But these panic mongers have been unable to produce any evidence of the effectiveness of this particular ban.

In fact the law seemed half-baked from the onset. After all, the entire thing revolves around what physical features the weapon has, not what the weapon is capable of doing.

This small fact seems easily overlooked by many who really have no idea what the bill encompasses.

For instance Mark Morford, San Francisco Gate columnist and idiotarian extraordinaire, wrote: "the [law] outlawing Uzis and TEC-9 semiautomatics and AK-47s and all other way-cool manly guns that have no other purpose in this world than to annihilate crap at 200 rounds per minute, is about to expire."

Wrong, Mark. So what does the ban really concern? Dangerous devices as folding stocks, pistol grips, and the dreaded bayonet mount. Lest I forget, the ban also made it illegal to have a grenade launcher mounted on your rifle, which is a real danger especially since there were already laws in place that made that illegal.

Are these things that require congressional action? Is bayoneting such a problem in this country that we need Congress to pass laws forbidding bayonet mounts?

No, the bill was entirely ineffective at its intended purpose, which was to lower crime.

If this failure shocked anyone, it certainly wasn't the police. In 1990, 100,000 officers delivered a message to congress stating that only 2 to 3 percent of all crime is committed with assault weapons.

However, facts rarely have been useful against reactionist crowds, and the anti-gun lobby managed to push through a law that for 10 years accomplished nothing except create confusion for the law-abiding citizen.

The law is dead (may it rot in hell) and hopefully for a while, common sense will be the rule of the day. Sadly, though, common sense is far from common, and I'm sure that soon another lame-brained, ill-thought attempt at slowing crime will worm its way through Congress.

JONAS HOGG

Many countries that have banned guns have taken to banning more things. Such as swords and laser pointers in Australia, and a recent movement started by mothers in England to ban the carrying of knives.

But the anti-gun lobby is not interested in such things as facts and reason. The preprogrammed thought is that guns are bad and the people that own them all belong to militias. Gun grabbers are fighting to pass laws that will raise crime rates and slowly ease us away from those bothersome Constitutional rights. They want to protect us, but ironically, they want to do it by leaving us defenseless.

Multicultural differences color life

Why must we embrace diversity?

When I look back a few years ago, I realize that my first trip to Lawrence was a quantum leap over the quality of my social life in Manhattan.

Since then, I have made dozens of weekend trips to Lawrence in favor of attending the lukewarm Aggieville scene.

Lawrence offers much more in terms of diversity and variety. This is a town where I fell in love with jazz music and experienced my home country's food on American soil for the first time.

Its urban consciousness doesn't seem contaminated by cautions such as, "don't talk to strangers," or "curiosity killed the cat."

It's not because this town has not seen a "cat licking a light socket" or "crawling into a microwave." Lawrence just promotes cross-cultural dialogue based on fearless social interactions.

For example, if you booze around on Massachusetts Street or take a nap in a peaceful corner of a coffee shop, even if you cover your face with a Jane Austen novel, you could be bugged by someone obsessed with former President Reagan's speech, "Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall."

The real charm of diversity can be enjoyed only by destroying the walls of prejudice and opening doors for others. It doesn't mean endangering your social identity; socializing with people from entirely different social and ethnic backgrounds is really an act of empowerment.

When we establish a cross-cultural dialogue or exchange ideas with other people possessing different life styles, we generate social capital.

It creates an environment that embraces the concept of mutual respect and acceptance of otherness with out disrupting anyone's identity.

When we take an example of Lawrence, its atmosphere is strongly associated with rich and long-established traditions of multiculturalism at the University of Kansas.

This cultural phenomenon also is coupled with the diversity of commerce in the town.

Unfortunately, Manhattan doesn't offer much diversity of commerce. Most of its cultural activities are just associated with K-State students and their enthusiasm or appreciation for diversity.

K-State is gradually shifting from an agricultural paradigm, but we still have a long way to go.

K-State's multicultural groups, especially the bustling Black Student Union, are not lagging behind in their efforts to win this marathon of promoting and embracing diversity.

All people and groups are somehow dependent on each other. Their basic needs are quite common. Only prejudice or social fear blocks the channels of communication among them.

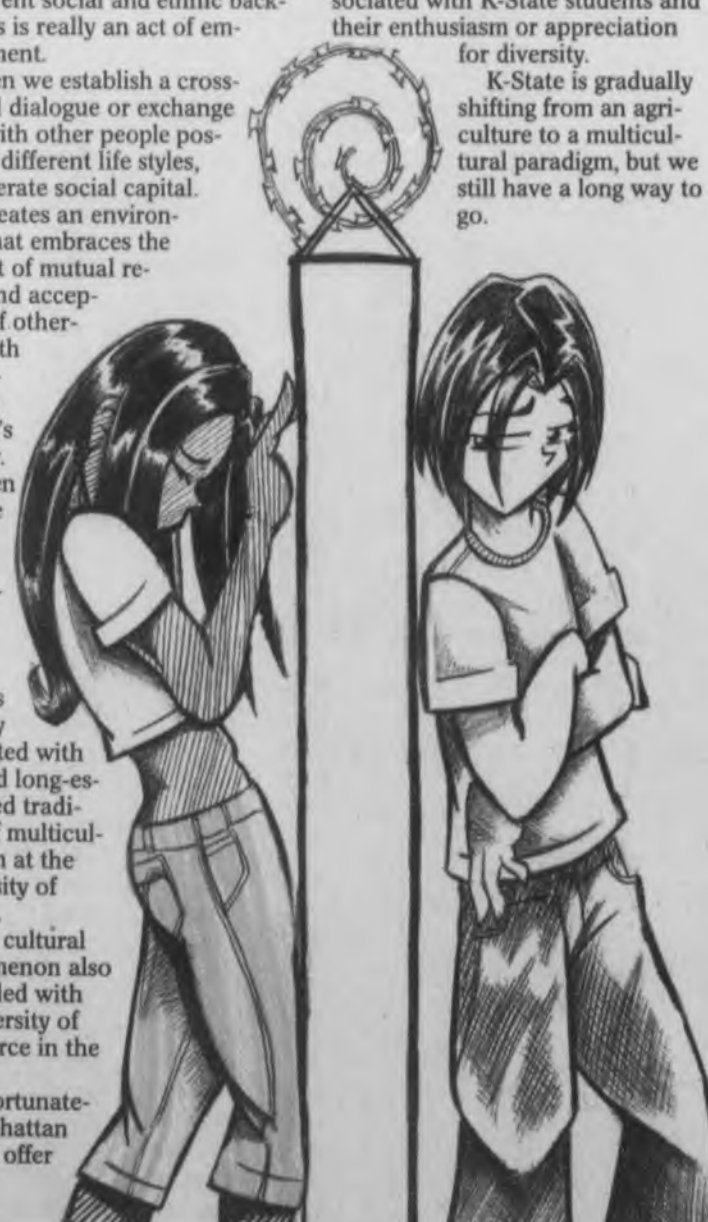

For example, "when the women in a company are seen talking together," remarks Professor Belle Rose Ragins, "the men often think they're planning a revolution."

Don't let yourself down because of your social fear or prejudice. Culture isn't the only area where we are diverse. For example, we have some other problems related to gender-based diversity in campus academic life.

According to a University of Maryland survey, female international students have a harder time adjusting to life in the United States compared to males. International female students feel more easily discouraged when things do not work out.

The academic needs of international female students are different than male students. They usually need to be more comfortable to speak up in class and often prefer activities like note taking. There is major need to understand all aspects of diversity to build a healthier, more respectful society.

Collegian column on piercing lacks taste

Editor,

We would like to make a complaint about a story in the Sept. 10 Collegian. Lacey Storer's column about body piercings was disturbing. The borderline explicit references to sex, orgasms and how to "enhance your arousal" tips were not what we had in mind when reading about body piercings.

We feel that such elaboration on this topic was not appropriate in such a widely read paper. We would like to hope that the Collegian uses more discretion in its choices of "entertainment" columns in the future.

Criticism must be tolerated with civility, respect

Editor,

After reading Barbara Meyer's column in the Collegian on Tuesday, Sept. 7, I can understand that some people would be upset. Very few people like to see K-State's football team get criticized. That Meyer has the courage to address such a controversial issue is to be commended. The fact that she did so in a mature, adult fashion is admirable.

Unfortunately, many people don't think so. Since Tuesday's article, Meyer has received many anonymous threats. Many of these were phoned into the Fourum from public phones.

Meyer should not have to worry that someone is going to take a swing at her while she is walking on campus. She should be secure in the knowledge that even though all of her fellow students may disagree with her, they will act with maturity and dignity in expressing their disagreement. Some students have done this by writing letters to the editor.

Many more have simply called in threats and insults to the Fourum. It is sad that on a university campus, where the First Amendment is touted as the ultimate right of students, Meyer's fellow students do not express their criticism in constructive, intelligent and adult ways.

Health fair succeeds in promoting issues

Editor,

The fifth annual Jardine Health and Safety Fair was held Sept. 8 at the Frith Community Center at the Jardine Apartment Complex.

The event was a huge success with more than 100 residents attending the event. They had an opportunity to visit with and gather resources from groups and organizations from all over Manhattan.

The Jardine Apartment staff would like to remind the K-State community of the great professionals here in town that are willing to take time out of their evenings to meet the needs of our community.

We would like to thank the following organizations for their help: K-State Women's Center, Campaign for Nonviolence, Social and Rehabilitation Services, Adult Student Services, K-State Police Department, Lafene Health Center, University Counseling Services, Manhattan Fire Department, Parents as Teachers and Riley County EMS.

It is important we are able to continue the tradition of providing our residents with all of the resources we have in Manhattan.

The participation by community and campus members in an event such as the Health and Safety Fair continues to show us why Manhattan is such a great place to live.

K-State gives up 400 yards of total offense

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the first and last time the K-State defense looked good against Fresno State on Saturday.

With 11:36 left to play in the first quarter, junior defensive back Bret Jones stepped in front of Fresno State quarterback Paul Pinegar's pass and sprinted 42 yards for a touchdown, giving the Wildcats a 7-0 lead.

On Fresno State's ensuing drive, the Bulldogs drove down the field 73 yards in 10 plays and tied the game at 7-7.

The rout was on.

"We came out on fire, but somewhere down the line we lost that fire," senior cornerback Cedrick Williams said. "After that touchdown we thought it was going to be a rout and they were going to lay down, but they came right out and drove down the field and scored."

During their 45-21 defeat of the Wildcats, the Bulldogs racked up 400 yards of total offense, including 244 passing yards and 156 yards on the ground. The K-State defense was plagued throughout the game by missed tackles, shuffling of defensive personnel and the lack of production by the Wildcat offense.

CFB | Wildcats drop out of both national polls

K-State's 45-21 loss to Fresno State on Saturday has drastically changed perceptions of the defending Big 12 Champions in the minds of pollsters.

The Wildcats dropped out of the latest versions of both the Associated Press and ESPN/USA Today Coaches polls, released Sunday.

After being ranked No. 13 by the AP and No. 14 by the coaches, K-State fell out of the Top 25 to just receiving votes in both polls.

It is the first time since November 2003 K-State has not been ranked.

As a result of its upset-loss to Troy State last Thursday, Missouri joined the Wildcats in exiting both polls.

The Tigers previously were ranked No. 17 in the coaches poll and No. 19 in the AP poll.

Now, Oklahoma (No. 2 in both polls) and Texas (No. 6 in both polls) are the Big 12 Conference's lone representatives in college football's major polls.

NASCAR | Mayfield wins, now title contender

The task was clear for Jeremy Mayfield: Win the race and don't worry about making NASCAR's playoffs.

Mayfield accomplished.

Mayfield raced to his first victory in the more than four years Saturday night, taking the Chevrolet 400 at Richmond International Raceway after leader Kurt Busch ran out of gas eight laps from the finish.

The victory locked Mayfield into NASCAR's race for the Nextel Cup title in the final qualifying event.

The chase will start with Jeff Gordon as the points leader, followed in five-point increments by Jimmie Johnson, Dale Earnhardt Jr., Tony Stewart, defending champion Matt Kenseth, Elliott Sadler, Busch, Mark Martin, Mayfield and Ryan Newman.

The points system was adopted this year, replacing the format that began in 1975 and rewarded consistency while often creating dull championship chases. The champion has typically coasted to his title with few challenges over the stretch run.

Now, any of the 10 drivers can win it.

MLB | Bonds now one shy of 700 home runs

Barry Bonds had a feeling Mike Kopelove would pitch to him.

"I could see it in his face," Bonds said. "Like, 'I'm tired of this, too. You might miss it.'"

Bonds certainly didn't, hitting a 460-foot shot off the bottom of the center-field scoreboard for his 699th home run. The ninth-inning drive Sunday helped the San Francisco Giants regain the NL wild-card lead with a 5-2 win over the Arizona Diamondbacks.

Bonds walked his first two times up, increasing his record total to 203, then took a called third strike and grounded out to overshifted second baseman Scott Hairston in short right field.

With the count 3-1, Bonds finally got a pitch he liked and connected for his 41st homer of the season.

Bonds is third on the career list behind Hank Aaron (755) and Babe Ruth (714). After an off-day Monday, the Giants play at Milwaukee on Tuesday.

Tennis | Federer wins U.S. Open in straight sets

Roger Federer is at his best against the best, when it counts the most, and he was pretty much perfect in the U.S. Open final.

Federer became the first man since 1988 to win three majors in a year, thoroughly outclassing Lleyton Hewitt 6-0, 7-6 (3), 6-0 Sunday to add the American Grand Slam title to those he took at the Australian Open and Wimbledon.

There hadn't been two shutout sets in the event's championship match since 1884.

Federer led the fourth-seeded Hewitt in winners (40-12), aces (11-1), and service breaks (7-1), and won the point on 31 of 35 trips to the net.

He never before made it beyond the fourth round at Flushing Meadows, leading some to wonder whether the wind, wild fans and roaring airplanes overhead might provide too many distractions for the fastidious Federer.

Netters finish tourney with victory over Northern Iowa

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team capped a tough three-match stretch with a win Saturday at the Diet Coke Invitational in Minneapolis, Minn.

The Cats beat Northern Iowa on Saturday to finish with a 1-2 record for the weekend after close losses to Florida and Minnesota on Thursday and Friday. The No. 15 Wildcats are now 5-3 on the season.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she was pleased with the play of her team throughout the weekend.

"I thought we played very well and made some great strides and at times played very good volleyball for this time of year," she said.

On Thursday, K-State fell to No. 4 Florida 2-3. It was the Cats' first five-game loss in the last nine matches.

K-State got double-double performances from sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner (17 kills, 11 digs), senior outside hitter Valeria Hejjas (13 kills, 12 digs) and senior setter Gabby Guerre (48 assists, 16 digs). Freshman libero Angie Lastra had a career-high 26 digs.

K-State dropped another very close decision to No. 5 Minnesota on Friday 2-3, losing 28-30, 30-26, 30-26, 27-30 and 15-13.

Lastra broke her career record, setting a school record with 36 digs, and sophomore middle blocker Joy Hamlin tied a school record with 11 block assists. Hejjas added 12 kills and a career-high 20 digs and senior middle blocker Lisa Martin contributed 12 kills and eight blocks.

Fritz said losing close games is tough, but the team could still take much away from the game.

"It's difficult, but our program is not about wins and losses, it's about improvement," she said. "Even though the wins and losses didn't reflect what we accomplished, the team can take pride in playing close and having opportunities to beat two of the best volleyball teams in the country early in the year."

In Saturday's match, the Cats swept Northern Iowa in three games, 30-27, 30-23 and 30-23. Hejjas and Werner had 13 and 12 kills respectively, and Lastra added another 12 digs.

Fritz said the win over the Panthers showed K-State's resiliency after two tough losses.

"I was proud of the way the team played this weekend," she said. "We played our eighth time in eleven days and battled through some fatigue and emotion."

K-State begins its defense of the Big 12 Conference championship at 7 p.m. Tuesday on the road at Colorado.

Men's golf finishes 9th in Toledo

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team shot a combined 907 on the Inverness Club golf course to finish ninth out of 13 teams, Sept. 10-11, at the Inverness Intercollegiate in Toledo, Ohio.

After Friday's first two rounds, the Wildcats — who had five players qualify for the tournament — were tied for 10th place with the University of Alabama-Birmingham but managed to beat out UAB to secure the ninth place spot.

"We just got a little better with each round," Coach Tim Norris said.

Individually, senior Matt Van Cleave was the team's top finisher with an overall score of 220. In the tournament, Van Cleave tied for eighth place with four other players out of 66 golfers.

"My all around game was on this weekend. I hit a couple of birdies and really took advantage of those shots," Van Cleave said.

Junior Ben Kern wasn't far behind Van Cleave with his final score of 224. Despite shooting a 79 in the first round, Kern rallied in the final two rounds, shooting a 72 and 73, to secure a 18th-place finish.

"The greens at Inverness are the smallest greens I've ever played. It's a struggle just to get your ball on the green," Kern said. "My last two rounds I shot the greens much better."

Freshman Clay Hodge shot a 226 to finish in 36th place, which Norris said is very respectable for a freshman.

"I was very pleased with Clay's play. The conditions at Inverness are much different from the conditions he is used to playing in Texas, where he's from," Norris said.

Van Cleave said he was impressed with all his teammates' play, as well, considering the senior was the only one to have previous experience on the course.

"You just can't imagine how hard this course is. There's really no way to prepare yourself," Van Cleave said.

As the team expected, the University of Kentucky proved to be the biggest challenger, winning the tournament with a score of 877. Kentucky's John Holmes, a 2003-04 All-American, won the tournament individually with a score of 213 — par for the course.

Michigan State was the leader after the first day with a collective score of 581, but Holmes' tournament-record score of 65 in the second round helped to solidify Kentucky's first-place finish.

K-State now looks ahead to their next tournament on Sept. 20-21 in Lawrence at the KU Invitational.

Van Cleave said the Inverness was possibly the most challenging course the team will play at all year.

Chesang leads team to 2nd place

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week, cross country coach Michael Smith said he was looking forward to fielding a full squad at Saturday's Wildcat Invitational.

After the race it was apparent why, as two of K-State's top runners sparked a productive weekend for the Wildcat harriers.

Senior Mathew Chesang for the men and senior Shauna Burrell for the women made their first appearances of the season for the Wildcats, as the K-State cross country teams ran on their home course at the Stalend Cross Country Fairgrounds in Topeka.

Chesang won the individual title for the men in a time of 25:05 in the 8-K race, helping the K-State men place second overall behind Kansas.

Smith said Chesang ran the type of race he knew he was capable of running.

"I was expecting that he would be able to win the meet, and I was hoping that he would run 25 minutes, and he did," Smith said. "I would say that it bodes well for the future."

K-State's success was rooted in a consistent and steady effort from the entire squad. K-State placed five runners in the top 20, a step up from last week's Bob Timmons Invitational where only two Wildcat runners placed as high.

Smith said his team made solid improvements that allowed them to be more competitive.

"I think we had some guys step up this week," he said. "Joseph Moore ran another steady race and was consistent. Tyler Roark and Gerardo Rabelo each performed much better."

Smith said with the way his runners are improving in training and racing, they are starting to look like they could be competitive at the Big 12 meet in October.

"We can be a top-six team in the conference if we can continue to improve," he said. "With the personnel that we have right now, I'm hoping that we can continue to race at the level that we train at."

In the women's race, K-State claimed the third-place spot behind Oklahoma State and Wichita State.

Burrell's return to the team resulted in her placing 13th individually, three spots behind teammate and number-two runner junior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle.

Smith said his team is even better now that Burrell is back to racing.

"Shauna made a difference and helped us," he said. "That was her first race since May and Shauna can and will run a lot better."

Number-one runner senior Trisha Culbertson provided K-State with another solid race as she placed sixth in a time of 22:07 in the 6-K race.

Culbertson said she was happy with her race, but felt she could have done better.

"I am gaining some confidence," she said. "I have some work to do, but it was

Exhibit in K-State Student Union displays Fort Hays graduate's vision of human figure

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are 10 naked women in the K-State Student Union right now.

The current exhibit at the William T. Kemper Art Gallery includes 16 paintings, 10 of which are nudes, created by Zhimin Guan, associate professor of art and design at Minnesota State University Moorhead. The exhibit will be on display until Sept. 24.

"Nude figures have been major academic training throughout history," Guan said. "(The nude figure) represents human nature and when you combine it with a landscape it becomes very surreal."

Xuhong Shang, professor at the Southern Illinois University Carbondale School of Art and Design, submitted the proposal for his friend Guan in April. Until July, Shang was a professor in the K-State Department of Art.

"To paint a nude model is a tradition in the western art history," Shang said. "It is a great appreciation of ourself as a human being."

Guan said his goal is to try to reveal the tension between dream and reality.

He said he still seeks that goal, but Shang is more complementary.

"Of course his goal is clearly achieved, I think his goal is very clear," Shang said. "I believe in him 100 percent as his fellow artist."

"Professor Guan is a extremely talented painter, his skill in oil painting can be matched by very few artists in the present time."

Guan's paintings, drawings and prints have been exhibited in museums throughout China and the United States. They have been published in multiple art journals, have been in more than 80 exhibitions and have received 20 art awards.

Even though he teaches at a university in Minnesota, Guan is familiar with Kansas, because he graduated from Fort Hays State six years ago.

Union Programming Council programming director Ben Hopper said the Union Art Gallery showcases local artists, but also brings in recommended artists like Guan.

"We liked the artist's proposal," Hopper said. "It is something different."

Guan's work was created using a variety of media.

"His work fits the gallery well, because his work not only offers a high quality oil painting skill, but also a high level of appreciation of the naturalness of people,"

Artwork by Zhimin Guan, associate professor of art and design at Minnesota State University-Moorhead, titled "Figures and Abstraction," is on display through Sept. 24 at the William T. Kemper Union Art Gallery.

Shang said.

Hopper said this is good, because it appeals to different people's preferences.

"Good variety creates more enjoyment," Hopper said. "It'd be boring if they were all the same thing."

As for the nudes, Hopper said UPC has not received any complaints.

"This is an academic institution," he said. "It is a place to broaden views and put forth stuff to broaden perspectives."

Having a personal style trumps any passing fashion anyday

I'm lucky.

When I go shopping with my friends, they pick out something to show to me, and I always like it.

Even better than that, I never have to worry about them buying the same thing for themselves.

This is because I have style, which should not be confused with fashion.

Fashions come and go with the season, but style is permanent.

Fashion is for whoever wants to spend money on a designer label, while style is very personal.

Whenever someone looks at you, your physical appearance makes an impression.

Style is how you personalize your appearance so that it says something about you.

You may want to pick a pre-existing style or from different areas.

Pre-existing styles already have precedents set for what they mean. Preppy is usually for yuppies, goth is for the brooding type, and punk is for the politically active and knowledgeable leftist.

By mixing styles, you can express multiple aspects of your personality or use them to contrast each other.

My style is nearly the same every day — khakis and Hawaiian shirts.

I occasionally mix it up with a Tabasco shirt, and on those rare times when I can't find an open laundromat, you might spot me in a T-shirt or jeans.

What does this say about me?

Khakis are professional, business-like and old-manish. This shows that I take my work and studies very seriously.

Hawaiian shirts show a lot

I first started wearing a couple I'd inherited from my grandfather after he passed on.

All 50-plus of my Hawaiian shirts are partly in tribute to him.

The next part was Johnny Cash.

You're probably thinking that if he had a part in my style, I'd be wearing black and not rainbow flowers.

In Cash's song, "Man In Black" he says that he would like to wear bright colors, but is too depressed by the state of the world to do so.

I try to find beauty in the way we all endure despite the oppression that surrounds us.

Most Hawaiian shirts you see now were mass-produced for Old Navy two summers ago — not mine.

All of my Hawaiian shirts are authentic and were made on the island.

Why is this important to me? Since Hawaii is part of the United States, I can support U.S. workers at a time when so few clothing items are made here and still keep a clean conscious by not supporting sweat-shop labor.

And there's always the obvious — Hawaiian shirts bring the party, and without the party, life would be even more boring and depressing.

My style says a lot about me. Make your style express you too.

Alicia Keys cancels Jakarta show

Singer Alicia Keys and British violinist Bond have canceled concerts in the Indonesian capital after last week's deadly suicide attack on the Australian Embassy.

A spokesman for promoter Java Musikindo said Saturday that both acts were due to play Jakarta next month but have pulled out due to Thursday's bombing, which killed nine people and wounded more than 170.

In recent months, several popular Western bands played in Indonesia, even though it has been hit by a series of bombings in recent years that have led many acts to avoid playing in the country.

R. Kelly gig at conference draws concerns

R. Kelly was set to headline a Congressional Black Caucus benefit concert Friday night, but not all the lawmakers were "happy people."

Some CBC members are concerned about Kelly being connected to the conference while he is facing 14 counts of child pornography in Chicago.

"I would not have invited R. Kelly," Congressman William Jefferson, D-La., the CBC Foundation Chairman, told the Associated Press by phone Friday. Other CBC members "worry that it will overshadow the event," he said.

The concert, to be held at the Washington Convention Center, is one of the premier events of the CBC's Annual Legislative Conference. Sponsored by the spouses of the CBC, its purpose was to raise money for scholarships for needy young people.

Actor killed Friday in NY car crash

Actor O.L. Duke, who appeared with Denzel Washington in the movies "Malcolm X," "Antwone Fisher" and "Out of Time," was killed in a car accident Friday, police and relatives said. He was 51.

Duke was returning home after performing in the off-Broadway play, "Waitin' 2 End Hell," when a car cut him off, said his wife, Monica Duke. His vehicle jumped a divider and struck an oncoming car, according to police.

Monica Duke said her husband was an avid actor who loved attending the theater. He often spoke enthusiastically about his work with other actors, including Washington, whom he counted as a friend, she said.

Italy complains about Venice film snub

Italian media grumbled Sunday over the failure of a hometown film to win big prizes at the Venice Film Festival, where the British movie "Vera Drake" by director Mike Leigh grabbed the best picture award.

Such complaints have become an almost annual rite there, and are a sign of ambivalent Italian feelings toward the festival. Organizers say they want a world-class show, but face controversy whenever a locally touted Italian film doesn't win.

"Venice disappoints our cinema," Rome's La Repubblica newspaper said in a front-page headline, noting that the jury didn't give a single prize to "Le Chiavi di Casa" ("The House Keys") by Italy's Gianni Amelio.

Twenty-two films from around the world were in competition for the Golden Lion awards handed out Saturday night.

Women's golf team makes first trip to Ptarmigan/Ram tourney

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team kicks off the season today in Fort Collins, Colo., at the Ptarmigan/Ram Fall Classic.

Since the Wildcats have never competed at the Ptarmigan before, they are going into the tournament with open minds.

"I've never seen the course before, but no matter what course it is, we just have to play the game," Coach Kristi Knight said.

After three qualifying rounds, senior Sarah Heffel was the leading scorer with an average of 75. Sophomores Katy Heffel and Helene Robert, as well as freshmen Kali Quick and Hailey Mireles, also qualified.

With no experience at this tournament, there is much left unknown about the course and the competition.

"We don't know a lot about the teams. We played several of them last year and beat them, but that was last year," Knight said.

According to Knight, the Ptarmigan field generally has a west coast feel, with teams including San Jose State, San Francisco State University and the University of Nevada.

"Both San Jose State and San Francisco have been good historically," Knight said.

San Francisco, the reigning tournament champions, finished 11 over par on the 72-par course last year.

Reputations aside, Heffel said she does not let the past get in her way.

"It's the beginning of the year, so it's hard to tell who's going to be good," she said.

Heffel, the team leader, said she considers this tournament a good way to gauge the team's ability.

"We're just going to try and play the best we can and see what we can improve," she said.

Knight said she believes the determining factor in this tournament will be the players' own mentality.

"The girls need to be mentally patient and nice to themselves. They need to avoid getting too high or too low," she said.

Regardless, Knight said the team has her confidence.

"They know what their strengths are, and they know when to be aggressive. Those things combined will be the keys to our success," she said.

FRESNO STATE | Meier uncertain for next game

Junior safety Bret Jones intercepted Fresno State junior quarterback Paul Pinegar's pass, returning it 42 yards for a touchdown and giving K-State the early 7-0 lead at the 11:36 mark in the first quarter.

That was as good as it would get for the defense, however, as the Bulldogs put together touchdown drives of 73 and 82 yards to give them a 14-7 lead at the end of the quarter — a lead they would not relinquish.

Fresno State succeeded on the ground and in the air.

Juniors Dwayne Wright and Bryson Sumlin combined for 144 yards rushing and three touchdowns.

Pinegar was 17-30 for 244 yards and two touchdowns, although he did toss three interceptions — an additional pick to Jones and one to sophomore safety Maurice Mack. Pinegar also ran for a score.

Snyder said he expected the Bulldogs to be a challenge for the Wildcats.

"I thought they'd be a pretty good football team and a physical football team," he said. "They played well. Their quarterback, Pinegar, does a nice job and commanded the game well, but the most impressive thing was how hard their backs ran."

Field position was crucial to Fresno State opening up a 31-14 lead at halftime. Poor K-State special teams play allowed the Bulldogs to start each of their three second-quarter scoring drives inside Wildcat territory, leading to 17 points.

tinez's shanked punt of 14 yards, a kick-catch interference penalty on senior cornerback Cedrick Williams and a 40-yard punt return by Fresno State's Adam Jennings all led to outstanding field position for the Bulldogs on the three scoring possessions of the quarter.

Sophomore quarterback Allen Webb made his first career start for the Wildcats, as scheduled starter Dylan Meier was still feeling the effects of an injury from the Sept. 4 Western Kentucky game.

Meier did enter the contest in the second quarter, throwing a 47-yard touchdown strike to junior wide receiver Davin Dennis to bring K-State within three of the Bulldogs, 17-14.

But Meier did not play a down in the second half, sustaining an additional injury, according to Snyder. Snyder said he hoped Meier would be able to play next Saturday against Louisiana-Lafayette.

Neither quarterback was overly impressive, combining to go 8-23 for 121 yards. Both Meier and Webb had an interception.

"Obviously, I could have done some things better and so could the team as a whole," Webb said. "It's a learning experience."

Several K-State players said there is now a sense of urgency with the team, as it prepares for next week's game and the start of the Big 12 conference season in less than three weeks.

For junior right tackle Jeromey Clary, the Wildcats' road to recovery after the blowout loss begins in practice.

"We need to go all in Monday, all in Tuesday, all in Wednesday," he said. "Practices haven't been the way they were last year when we were Big 12 champs. We haven't been sawing the wood like we should."

FOOTBALL | Short field position helped Fresno State

Coach Bill Snyder said he didn't have to see the game film to know the defense wasn't tackling.

"You don't solve those kind of basic fundamentals over night," he said. "What is discouraging is not the fact that we missed some tackles, but that we made absolutely no improvement in that area."

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the tackling issue has persisted since fall practice started.

"Right now this is a football team that isn't very tough," he said.

"We had three or four guys around them, time and time again, and our guys just didn't finish the play."

In the first half, Fresno State scored 31 points, controlled the clock with 19:37 in time of possession, was 4 of 9 on third-down conversions and racked up 13 first downs.

"Our offense put our defense on the field for an extended period of time," Snyder said.

The Bulldogs' 31 first-half points were the most given up by the Wildcats since 2000, when Oklahoma scored 31 points. The 24-point margin was also the largest defeat at the hands of a non-conference opponent in the Snyder era.

The Wildcat defense spent most of the game defending a short field, with Fresno State's average starting field position at the K-State 45-yard line, but Williams said the field position shouldn't matter.

"It doesn't matter where you are on the field; you still have to play defense," he said. "If you're keeping them to three points, you're doing a good job, but we didn't do that."

Senior defensive end Kevin Huntley, who had four tackles and a sack in the game, said the Fresno State offense had a play for everything the Wildcats tried to do on defense.

"Everything that we had for defense, they had a counter for it," Huntley said. "It just seemed like they had the perfect play every time."

good to know where I stand."

Going into the meet, the Wildcats faced uncertainty from other teams in the field of competitors. Saturday's meet was the first time this season K-State had faced Oklahoma State and Wichita State, and the unfamiliarity showed.

Culbertson said placing third behind Oklahoma State and Wichita State was upsetting, but the Wildcats' finish will only help to push her and her teammates next time they face either team.

"We didn't know what Oklahoma State would have and Wichita State, they were a surprise," she said. "We feel we should have beaten them, and I think we should next time if we get out there and run with some guts."

Smith said he is confident his athletes from both squads will step up and realize the goal for the season is competing for a Big 12 Championship.

"In everything we do, we use the conference meet as a reference point. Nothing else really matters," he said. "Ultimately, we are judged on how we finish in the conference."

the vehicle exploded before reaching the main security wall, killing the driver, a military statement said. Seven people were later arrested, it said.

Tawhid and Jihad, a militant group linked to al-Qaeda and led by Jordanian terror mastermind Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, said it carried out Sunday's coordinated campaign of violence in Baghdad.

In an Internet statement, the group boasted that it holds the initiative in the Iraqi insurgency and possesses the "capability to surprise the enemy and hit its strategic installations at the right time and place."

The statement's source could not be verified, but the scope and intensity of the attacks raised serious questions about the state of security, which has deteriorated since the June 28 transfer of sovereignty to the interim Iraqi government.

In Basra, interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi vowed to pursue insurgents.

"We are adamant that we are going to defeat terrorism," Allawi said. "We intend to confront them and bring them to justice."

Interior Minister Falah Hassan al-Naqib suggested the attacks could be in response to a government operation against the Adel neighborhood of west Baghdad, an insurgent hotbed. However, the scope of the attacks suggested they had been in preparation for some time.

Secretary of State Colin Powell acknowledged that the U.S.-led coalition faced a "difficult time" in Iraq, but said the United States had a plan to quash the insurgency and bring those areas under control in time for national elections in January.

The insurgency "will be brought under control," Powell said on NBC's "Meet The Press." "It's not an impossible task."

But Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zebari said the level of security in his country will dictate whether the national elections are held when scheduled.

"The timetable really depends at the end of the day on the security situation," Zebari said in Cairo, Egypt. "But we are going in this direction (of elections) without hesitation."

Near Hillah, 60 miles south of Baghdad, three Polish soldiers were killed in an ambush - raising Poland's death toll in Iraq to 13 - and a bomb killed three Iraqi national guardsmen. A district police chief was killed in an attack in Baghdad's Yarmouk neighborhood.

Meanwhile, 10 people were killed and 40 were wounded in fighting in the insurgent stronghold of Ramadi, 70 miles west of Baghdad, said hospital director Abdel Munim Aftan.

Three American soldiers and two Iraqi civilians were wounded Sunday when a suicide driver blew up his car next to a U.S. Army convoy on the road to Baghdad International Airport, American sources said. The vehicle was one of seven car bombs reported Sunday in Iraq, two of which did not explode, the sources said.

Powell did not elaborate on the plan for addressing the insurgency, but senior U.S. officials in Iraq have spoken of a multi-pronged strategy involving overtures to tribal leaders, economic incentives and the use of force as the best way to prevail against the resistance.

Rockets and mortar shells began raining down before dawn on the Green Zone, headquarters of the Iraqi government and its U.S. allies, and other parts of central Baghdad. As the shelling continued after sunrise, U.S. troops backed by armored vehicles moved into the streets searching for the attackers.

A Bradley fighting vehicle rushing down Haifa Street, a major traffic artery near the Green Zone, to assist a U.S. patrol was disabled by a car bomb about 6:50 a.m., the U.S. military said. Two Bradley crewmen were wounded by the bomb and four were injured by grenades and small-arms fire as they fled the vehicle, the military said.

Iraq's Health Ministry said 13 people were killed and 61 wounded on Haifa Street, though it was unclear how many were killed by the helicopter strike. Scattered shoes, pools of fresh blood and debris littered the street.

Twelve more people died and 41 were injured in other violence across the city Sunday, the Health Ministry said.

Fireworks show pays tribute to Sept. 11 attack victims

Ron Ford and his team put on a fireworks display Saturday night on Ford's farm, which is south of town on Highway 177. The display was to honor those who died in the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

More than $7,000 worth of fireworks lit up the sky Saturday night over Manhattan in remembrance of the victims of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

The show, orchestrated by Ron Ford and his Phantom Fireworks team, lasted approximately 15 minutes and featured fireworks that shot as far as one-quarter of a mile into the sky and were the width of three football fields. The show was put on from Ford's farm, located one mile from Highway 177.

"We have the advantage of being on one of the highest points in Manhattan, so the display could be seen all over Manhattan and even as far as high points in Junction City. It was really phenomenal," he said.

This was the first year that Ford and Phantom Fireworks have put on the show in honor of Sept. 11. The display originally was intended for the Fourth of July, but the team decided to postpone it as a Sept. 11 tribute.

"The tragedies of Sept. 11 are something that we should never forget," said Ford. "The people we lost were the mechanics and gears that kept this country intact, and we wanted to remember the victims and honor the soldiers who are fighting now."

Ford started putting on fireworks displays as a hobby, and he said it has become more technical as the shows have become bigger and laws have been tightened since the terrorist attacks. Ford said he does it for the enjoyment of the shows.

"I call it expensive artwork that doesn't last long," Ford said. "But it is fun."

Ford said he does not take all of the credit for the show.

"These were not your average store-bought fireworks," Ford said. "The show took about 60 or 70 man hours to create, which were contributed by the team."

The Phantom Fireworks team consists of 11 members, most of which once worked construction for Ford and were introduced to putting on displays through him.

This is the case for Kenny Johnston, one member of the team, who said they began one Fourth of July when they created a huge display, which led to putting on a display for a Kansas City Royals game.

"We have put on a show for a K-State football game, Country Stampede, Freaker's Ball, and we did last year's New Year's Eve display in Aggieville," Johnston said. "We work with the fire department for all our shows, so we thought the 9/11 display would be a good tribute to firefighters and to all the victims of the attacks."

The two said they plan on creating the Sept. 11 tribute show again next year.

The road more traveled

Right: Amaris Holland, sophomore in animal science and industry, watches as a classmate burns baking soda during a biology lab earlier this semester at Highland Community College. Many students are attending classes at local community colleges, like Highland, to avoid the increase in tuition prices at K-State.

With the increasing prices of higher education, many students are looking for cheaper alternatives, said Lewis Ferguson, Kansas Board of Regents member. "As a board, we review the many changes in the academic field."

One thing the Board of Regents does note is the changes of community colleges versus public and private state colleges.

Creation of cell towers on campus unlikely

By Karthik Reddy
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Due to increased use of cell phones, there have been several proposals to place cell phone towers at strategic locations on campus.

City Finance Director Bernie Hayen said the City of Manhattan had nothing to do with the proposal and it was the prerogative of K-State.

"The city only steps in to check if the building codes are being followed when the actual construction of the towers begin," he said.

However, it had been long standing K-State policy not to allow any construction that detracts from the motif of the university buildings and the campus layout, said Gerald Carter, director of facilities planning.

He said they received requests from all local cell phone companies on a regular basis for erecting cell phone towers, but resisted because of the need for additional buildings and extensive fencing around the towers.

Carter said it would be better for cell phone companies to pick locations outside campus and go through normal zoning procedures to build towers.

This would ensure wider coverage for both K-State and the Manhattan community rather than trying to place them on campus, which would only serve to minimize the company's costs and maximize their profits, he said.

"These cell phone towers are huge and ugly, and once they go up into the sky they never come down. They would stand out like a pimple on someone's nose," he said.

He also said if the need for cell phone towers on campus became paramount then they would discuss possible compromises such as short antenna facilities.

Carter said the only exceptions made to this policy were the radio towers being used, which formed a part of K-State history.

Radio station's $50,000 request set aside

By Scott Seel
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At a meeting Monday, the Privilege Fee Committee decided to set aside KSDB-FM 91.9's request for $50,000 to help student organizations advertise on the radio station.

The grant would allow all registered student organizations to advertise on the radio station free of charge to the organization.

Many committee members expressed an appreciation of the service such an initiative would provide students.

"My initial thought is that it's a really admirable request, as it has the student organizations in mind," said Jake Lauer, senator from the College of Agriculture.

Lauer said, however, despite the grant's intent, he felt the other areas of funding were more important, because they would directly improve the radio station.

Eleri Griffin, Student Senate Chair, said that while the proposal had noble intentions, she felt it could present an issue with "double-dipping."

"This is a very noble thought, as far as students, but in terms of the legality of it, it might get a little dicey," Griffin said.

Student Senate and the Office of Student Activities and Services bylaws prohibit student organizations from receiving money from Student Governing Association more than once for the same event.

Arts and Sciences Senator Ben Fenwick said the current system allows student organizations to obtain funding for promotions through the Allocations Committee, which committee members agreed would provide organizations with the flexibility to use

Publisher says evolving media can harm news accuracy

By Amy Preston
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today's news media is struggling with its traditional role as an impartial analyst, interpreter and commentator, the publisher of the New York Times said Monday.

Arthur Sulzberger, Jr., publisher and chairman of the New York Times Company and the 134th Landon Lecturer, discussed the difficulties of covering news objectively in today's society, but said both the public and news media can work together to overcome this problem.

"News consumers have become more skeptical and cynical about what they see and hear," Sulzberger said to a crowd of about 500 people in McCain Auditorium. "A sizable portion of our audience considers news to be just another form of reality programming, some variation of 'Fear Factor' or 'The Apprentice'."

Sulzberger said media outlets today are focused more on gaining an audience and getting the news out in a quick matter rather than thoroughly reporting and telling the story.

"News media frequently loses its way when it attempts to compete in a marketplace with an unlimited number of options," he said.

Such options include the growth of news on the Internet and 24-hour cable news channels. With these technological advances, today's society wants immediate information, Sulzberger said.

"My profession has damaged its relationship with its readers and viewers and listeners," he said. "Editors and reporters are constantly caught for the increasingly consumer demand for more immediate information. Too often accuracy plays second fiddle."

In addition, incidents such as the fabrication of news stories, which happened with former Times reporter Jayson Blair, only increases the public's insecurities with the news media.

Sulzberger said that after the Blair

THE CAMPUS PULSE

READERS' ADVOCATE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

War affects everyone, and it is the role of a newspaper to inform readers when and how conflicts develop.

The Collegian has kept K-State students apprised of the wars overseas. With the articles coming straight from the Associated Press, the Collegian can give students and faculty up-to-date information we probably would miss because of our busy school schedules.

We have been able to keep up with the casualty rate of soldiers not only from Fort Riley, but from around the nation as well. The Collegian has played an important role in keeping the K-State family close to our Fort Riley neighbors and allowing us to keep them in our hearts and prayers.

Students that I spoke to this past week were glad the Collegian supports our troops by acknowledging the war information on the first page of the paper.

Given that, this past Saturday was the third anniversary of the Sept. 11 tragedy. Seeing information and updates in the Collegian on the war in Afghanistan and Iraq was very somber. Others thought there should have been more articles and features on the progress of the wars, and stories inquiring if we getting closer to finding the mastermind behind the Sept. 11 attacks.

Another issue students would like to see in the Collegian would be more coverage of the presidential elections, which are less than two months away. Students would like more information on the candidates who are running for the most powerful office in the world.

A number of students said they feel they do not know enough about the candidates and would like to see more biographic information on the candidates and their platforms.

One other article in the Collegian you seemed interested in this past week was the news that Hobby Lobby and Hastings Entertainment Inc. are moving in where the old Wal-Mart store used to be. Many of you love the idea of having those two stores close, making it very easy to spend your parents' hard-earned cash.

Two of my upcoming topics include discussing the Campus Fourum and the amount of advertising in the newspaper. Send your questions and thoughts on these or any issues to me; my priorities are to listen to your thoughts and to explain Collegian policies to all readers.

QUICK QUIZ

What kind of boyfriend/girlfriend are you?

1. You're hanging out with your friends when your significant other calls and informs you you're supposed to go shopping for curtains. In response, you:

- A. Politely tell him/her that you'll meet him/her at the mall in half an hour.
B. Hesitate, then emit a heaving sigh and agree to go.
C. Feign smallpox.

2. You've forgotten your anniversary, which is tomorrow. You:

- A. Tell your significant other the truth and stay at home to snuggle while you watch "Casablanca."
B. Go to the grocery store and swipe some withering flowers and dusty candy from the discount aisle.
C. What anniversary???

3. Your significant other catches you cheating on him/her. What do you do?

- A. Sobbing, you fall to his/her feet and beg forgiveness.
B. You try to convince him/her that you're playing doctor and that the can of whipped cream is "medicine."
C. You shrug and ask him/her to shut the door on the way out.

4. Your significant other says he/she loves you. You:

- A. Repeat the statement without missing a beat.

- B. Have your mouth full and instead say the words "rubber baby buggy bumpers" to appease him/her.
C. Dry heave.

5. You come up with a nickname for your significant other. It happens to be:

- A. Pookey Bear
B. Schnookums
C. Hey, you

If you answered mostly A, you're a hopeless romantic, but you might be smothering your beloved. So back off, psycho.

If you answered mostly B, you're trying to be sensitive and caring, but it's just not really working out. He/she probably will find out you're a fake sooner or later.

If you answered mostly C, you shouldn't be in a relationship. You're a self-centered megalomaniac who can't think of anyone but yourself. The world will become a horrible place if you reproduce.

Lecture series expands opportunities

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This year the K-State and Manhattan communities will be able to go to more than just a lecture when they participate in the UFM's Lou Douglas Lecture series.

They'll also have the chance to chat online with guest speakers and take part in a variety of lecture discussions — all in celebration of the series' 25th anniversary.

The series, founded to honor former political science professor Lou Douglas, brings in four to five guest speakers annually to discuss topics on human rights, social justice, world peace and international development.

"We have had long-standing rock support for this series," Olivia Collins, lecture series coordinator, said.

"People that helped establish the series are still with us as patrons."

The lecture series' popularity over the last 25 years has grown with help from both the guest speakers and the community, Collins said.

This year more events are planned in celebration of the series' 25th anniversary.

In addition to four guest speakers, UFM officials are hosting Lou's Book Club, a group that will discuss books by the speakers, Linda Teener, UFM executive director, said.

There also will be morning-after discussion groups as well as a lecture chat room, which will allow community members to communicate with the guest lecturers via Internet.

A schedule of these events can be found in UFM's catalog or online.

"We felt it was a good time to do some additional events and activities to hopefully increase awareness of the lecture series and to get the word out to a wider audience, to a new audience," Collins said.

The lecture series has also teamed up with K-State's Kansas Campus Compact, a group that highlights the importance of community service and political involvement "for college students, to showcase The People Speak: A Month of Community Dialogue."

Ben Procter, office intern for Kansas Campus Compact, said The People Speak is a national program where people in the community can come together to discuss pertinent topics.

The People Speak will work with the lecture series Sept. 15 to Oct. 15.

During this time, the K-State forensics team will debate and have a moderated discussion over America's role in the world, highlighted by two of the lecture series topics, Procter said.

Did you know?

Lou Douglas Lecture 25th anniversary schedule

■ Tuesday, Sept. 14: Jack DuVall "Power by the People: Ending the World's Nightmare of Oppression and Violence." DuVall is the executive producer of the Emmy-nominated PBS series, "A Force More Powerful."

■ All lectures will be at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

■ Additional lecture events are noted at UFM's Web site, www.ksu.edu/ufm

"These discussions are sort of tied together with the lectures. For example, the first lecture is on nonviolence and so clearly non-violence or the use of force is one issue in America," Procter said.

"We hope that it gives students and community members just an opportunity to interact and talk about important issues during this election year."

Governors' offices targeted by letters

Officials intercept letters sent from Nevada state prison

By Bob Lewis
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — Letters rigged to ignite when opened and bound for the governor's offices in Virginia and West Virginia were intercepted Monday, officials said. Governor's offices in at least 16 other states got similar letters last week.

The letter that arrived in Richmond never threatened Gov. Mark R. Warner, said Bill Leighty, the governor's chief of staff. The letter, addressed to "executive chambers" in the state Capitol, was uncovered at a central postage-handling facility, Leighty said.

The letter to West Virginia Gov. Bob Wise, addressed to "WVA Governor," made it to his office before it was intercepted by a staffer, Wise said.

Like the letters received last week, both bore a return address from Nevada's maximum-security Ely State Prison.

"It's a sad reminder that we live in a dangerous world," Warner said during a break in the Southern Governors Association conference, being held in Richmond.

At least three of the 16 letters received last week caught fire, but no one was hurt.

Federal and state authorities have narrowed their investigation to a single person of interest, according to Glen Whorton, assistant director for the Nevada Corrections Department.

Whorton said Saturday it does not appear that any of the letters contained any writings, only a blank sheet with a match or match head rigged to ignite when the paper was opened.

FBI Agent Todd Palmer in Las Vegas said authorities have yet to open any of the other envelopes that were intercepted, and lab analysis of the letters was expected to take a few days. He added that agents have yet to establish a motive.

Letters were sent to governors' offices last week in Alaska, Arizona, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Massachusetts, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming. In addition to the governors, Nevada's corrections director received a booby-trapped letter.

The Montana Capitol was partly evacuated Thursday when the match burned the letter opened there, but there was no further damage.

All mail bound for Virginia's executive offices on the third floor of the state Capitol is routed through an offsite receiving facility to protect the governor and his staff.

"We've done it for this very reason," Leighty said.

TO THE POINT Cell tower plans conflict with university goals

Cell phone companies have contacted K-State time and again to try and get cell phone towers placed on campus.

Props to the university for not falling into the trap.

It is not in K-State's mission statement to help companies succeed by providing the land for their use.

It has been said, however, that it is K-State's policy not to allow any construction that detracts from the motif of the buildings and the campus layout.

If it were considered to put the towers up on campus, it would no doubt take away some of the beauty for which K-State's campus is known.

While the radio tower located on Denison Avenue and the power plant on campus may detract from the beauty, they are the cost of education and having pride for our university as a research institution.

Allowing companies to build on campus would only allow cell phone companies to minimize their costs while maximizing their profits.

Officials said that building the towers on campus would cause extra troubles in finding the zoning requirements, as well as not serving the area any better than it currently is.

The towers would be a service to all Manhattan residents if built off of campus and would not detract from the purpose of the university, foremost, and secondly the beauty it entails.

Columnists sound off on availability of contraceptive pills

Last December, an FDA-appointed advisory panel of scientists, doctors and other assorted pharmaceutical brainiacs voted 23-4 to make emergency contraceptives available over-the-counter.

JEREMY PARKER

Despite this expert endorsement, conservative groups such as the Concerned Women for America (whose mission is "to bring Biblical principles into all levels of public policy") got their collective panties in a bundle.

As a result, these ladies and other bellyaching boneheads put enough pressure on the FDA to derail the train to Commonsenseville, USA.

Plan B, the most widely used method of Emergency Contraception, is unfortunately, one of the best-kept medical secrets in America.

When taken up to five days after unprotected sex, E.C. is up to 90 percent effective in preventing an unwanted pregnancy from occurring.

The pill works by delaying ovulation until all the potentially embryo-making sperm have stopped swimming. But time is of the essence.

Plan B's effectiveness depends solely on how quickly a woman takes it, and that's why it should be immediately accessible to anyone who needs it.

Women who have been raped or who have made a mistake don't have time to wait for a doctor's appointment. They don't have time to get stuck in traffic on the way to the proselytizing pharmacist who refuses to fill their prescription, as in Denton, Texas, last winter.

Unfortunately, the people who oppose EC will stop at nothing to keep it off pharmacy shelves.

They present numerous claims, all of which are fraught with illogical reasoning and are easily debunkable.

One thing they like to claim is that teenagers won't be responsible enough to take EC without a doctor's supervision.

They imply that teens won't realize that it's meant to be taken only in extreme cases, and that they'll just hoard stockpiles and pop the pills like they were Skittles.

Okay, let's pause for a second. If a teenager wouldn't be responsible enough to read the directions on a medicine packet, do you think they'd be responsible enough to raise a child?

Opponents claim teens will use EC as a substitute for daily contraceptives, and this would be hazardous since it doesn't protect against sexually transmitted diseases.

This is obviously bogus. One dose of EC is nearly $30. A 12-pack of condoms is roughly six bucks. Which would you choose?

But more than anything, EC opponents like dropping the A-bomb, abortion.

You see, in very rare cases, EC can impair a fertilized egg's implantation in the uterine lining. Recently, EC opponents — usually made up of pro-life groups — have latched onto this extremely rare chance and insinuated to the uninformed public that EC is nothing more than an abortion pill.

Make no mistake; despite what pro-life groups would like you to think, they're two completely different things.

RU-486 induces a miscarriage if you're pregnant. Emergency contraception keeps you from becoming pregnant in the first place.

If, however, you do take EC after you're pregnant, the pill will have no effect on your pregnancy.

But wait a minute. Something doesn't add up.

Why would someone who claims to be against abortions try so hard to limit access to something that would — undeniably — prevent hundreds of thousands of real abortions every year?

It's quite obvious. They don't like consequence-free sex before marriage, and they certainly don't like scientific advances, which make it possible.

So they make up phony claims and spread misinformation that plays on the public's fears. And that's dangerous, neglectful and despicable.

If you've had unprotected sex or have been raped within the last five days, Plan # B is available at Lafene, Walgreen's or online at www.get-the-pill.com.

But keep in mind that if you want EC, you'll need a prescription. Anything else would make too much sense.

Jeremy is a senior in music composition. Please send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

On July 21, Graham MacLennan attended memorial services for his wife in the same chapel that they had been wed two years prior.

CHAZ STEIMEL

MacLennan's wife, Dr. Lyndsay Grant, had been admitted to the hospital for severe abdominal pain, where she eventually died, due to severe internal bleeding.

Lyndsay Grant had been a victim of an ectopic pregnancy.

According to The Glasgow Herald, an ectopic pregnancy happens when the embryo ruptures in the fallopian tubes, leading to internal bleeding and possible death of mother and baby.

Usually, only one in 80 pregnancies are ectopic. However, certain drugs today actually can increase the chance of ectopic pregnancy, thus increasing the danger to mothers and their unborn children.

Drugs commonly known as morning-after pills, including one known as Plan B, have been proven to increase the chances of such a pregnancy.

Emergency contraceptives are essentially a large dose of the birth control pills that have been around for decades.

Currently, any woman can get a prescription for EC. In some states she can even get the prescription prior to sexual activity, allowing almost immediate access to the drug after sex.

This past spring, the Federal Drug Administration rejected an application to sell Plan B over-the-counter.

Immediately after the Plan B rejection, reports across the nation quickly accused the FDA of making the decision based on election year political pressures instead of scientific research.

To conclude the FDA buckled under political pressure is to undersell the hard work of many policy makers.

The decision to make sure EC remained behind the counter was one founded on facts and with the intention to protect our nation's health.

EC, while effective in preventing pregnancies, increases health risks for our society.

Ectopic pregnancy is just one example; another is reliance on morning-after pills instead of other forms of contraception, which could lead to a rise of STDs.

The Center for Disease Control estimates there already are almost 600,000 new cases of Chlamydia each year.

While there are several studies that claim EC will not increase STDs, the Boston Globe reported that officials and scientists involved in the decision to ban over-the-counter sales concluded that the risk of increasing STD's was simply too great.

Another concern was how over-the-counter Plan B would change our society.

For example, we can turn to Latin American countries, where the morning-after-pill is sold over-the-counter. El Tiempo, a Colombian newspaper, reports that girls as young as 13 use these drugs regularly, and the earlier they start, the more severe the consequences.

The FDA already heavily regulates and requires annual examinations for prescriptions of birth control pills.

Allowing over-the-counter emergency contraceptive sales would be the equivalent of requiring a prescription for a 200 mg dose of codeine, but not for an 800 mg dose.

Even now, we are beginning to learn some of the widespread health problems that long-term use of oral contraceptives have created.

It may very well be 20 or 30 years before we fully understand the long-term consequences of EC.

By moving morning-after pills into the aisles of our food stores and gas stations, we would make a drug that can do immense harm widely available.

For Graham MacLennan, ectopic pregnancy ruined his young marriage.

With over the counter sales, society may learn the hard way that the abuse of new technology can have devastating consequences.

Philanthropy benefits all

Do you feel alone? Do you greet every day with an inward shudder at the empty hours ahead?

If so, stop reading this column and seek professional help. Dude, you've got problems. Weird, frightening problems I would mock if I weren't so creeped out.

If all you have is a nagging internal emptiness, and you've already tried filling it with pie, then I have the solution for you — philanthropy, or, roughly translated, "man love."

I know you're thinking, "why should I care about other people, it's not like I'm them." I agree; my specific goals of philanthropy are generally confounded by my larger objective of misanthropy.

But there comes a time in every person's life when he says, "fellow man, you don't like me, and I don't like you, but I need something on my resume besides 'Dillon's Plus Card Member,' so prepare for some mutually disdainful man love."

Remember, pie wasn't working, so it's time for drastic measures.

The types of philanthropy out there are varied, and in lieu of actually researching them, I instead will thinly disguise a personal anecdote and declare it representative of all cases.

Because, really, all philanthropy is just like volunteering at Muscular Dystrophy Association Camp. This is a camp where volunteers come and help a kid with muscular dystrophy have a week of fun.

What is muscular dystrophy, you ask?

To find that out, I went to the Australian MDA Web site, because terminal, degenerative diseases are funnier to read about when read with an Australian accent. But, crikie, was it complicated.

Next stop: kidshealth.org, medical information clearinghouse for kids who like to play doctor. At the home page, today's "Hot Topics" are "cutting," "mononucleosis," and "is my penis normal?"

Finally, after a slight personal detour (it's supposed to look like that?), I arrived at "Muscular Dystrophy."

It's a genetic disease that causes a steady degeneration of one's muscular tissue. Many of the kids, especially older ones, have to use a wheelchair for mobility.

As a volunteer, I was quick to note that having a wheelchair in no way suggests a sedentary nature, especially since many have "power wheelchairs."

The power wheelchair is basically a race car with roughly the same chassis as the M-1 Abrams.

As a volunteer at the younger camp, with kids under 13 or so years of age, I finally learned an answer to the age-old question, "why are people born with legs, and not some sort of automatically powered wheel system?"

Little kids and high octane racing machines of death aren't exactly the best combo.

One of the excitable little campers in a power chair busted a hole in the wall of our cabin. Of course, he wasn't trying to do this, bless his tender little heart. He was trying to take a counselor out at the shins with his chair's foot rest, because, yunno, that would've been funny.

But really, this camp is a great place, where dreams can come true and where the kids don't have to suffer from unfair stigmatization for their disability.

The kids at camp also get a chance to have the spotlight on them for once at the camp talent show. One little kid, he couldn't have been but eight years old, did a stand-up comedy routine. His shtick of post-modern meta-jokes was hilarious.

A sample:
"What did the ice cream man give to the guy? ...Ice cream!"

"A spaceman floated around in space and then into the sun and burned up."

"God created the Earth and then did a bunch of other good stuff."

His stuff was so good I'm going to pay him the ultimate compliment from one humorist to another: steal his material and subtly work it in with mine.

Seriously, though, if you're looking for a fulfilling piece of philanthropy, try MDA Camp.

You'll change a kid's life, as he will change yours. I'd like to see a pie do that.

Emergency preparedness improves

Staff Editorial
THE ORACLE (U. SOUTH FLORIDA)

(U-WIRE) TAMPA, Fla. — If path projections for Hurricane Ivan hold true, the University of South Florida can let out a collective sigh of relief. But not only is the news about Ivan's course change positive, changes implemented in the way in which the university handled the looming crisis and the flow of information were much better than previous instances.

Last week, when USF President Judy Genshaft decided to close the university due to Hurricane Frances' arrival, the information was buried deep in the school's Web site. Aside from a small link on the corner of the page, the site remained unchanged even after the decision to close USF was made, and students had to click through several pages in order to find out classes were canceled.

Students calling a toll-free hotline were told to "check back later," with no indication about when the decision would be made.

This time, however, the main Web page itself offered all the information students needed: "All campuses of USF will be open for normal operations on Monday, Sept. 13," read the message next to a satellite image of the hurricane.

More detailed emergency preparedness information was available on other pages, but USF did the responsible thing by putting the most pertinent information front and center.

The message was not only visible without much hassle, it was also posted much earlier than previously.

When Frances ripped through the state with clear aim at the Tampa Bay region, USF made its decision to close the campus Tuesday at about 4 p.m. on Monday. Local media apparently was not informed right away, which further delayed getting the word out to students and faculty.

This Sunday, the university sent an announcement via e-mail to local news agencies before 11 a.m., giving students who rely on local news media enough time to become informed.

While we can only hope that we will be spared by possible future hurricanes, it appears USF has learned from past mistakes and was swift in implementing needed changes.

Candidates rev up for Heisman

Let's make a comparison between Darren Sproles and a Ferrari.

Both are sleek, flashy, able to stop on a dime, explosive off the start and very fast.

They also share something else in common. If you leave them in the garage, you might as well be driving a Ford Escort.

Last Saturday, Sproles was garaged — unable to get the door open because there always were Fresno State Bulldogs blocking the exit.

Without the fear of any passing game and an offensive line that made Sproles' 11 carries for 37 yards well earned, he was never able to turn the ignition on and shift into high gear.

"We realized that he (Sproles) was a good player from watching film," said Fresno State defensive back Richard Marshall, who finished with one tackle and an interception. "We realized that if we stopped him it would be no contest, because we know that the only person they have is Sproles. If we stopped him, the game was ours."

The Bulldogs did not just take the game, but they also handed the Wildcats their worst defeat since losing to Nebraska by 26 points, five years ago.

K-State was held to 180 yards on offense, the first time it had been held under 200 yards since Colorado allowed 197 yards of Wildcat offense in 1999.

For their efforts, the Wildcats went from No. 13 in the Associated Press poll to No. 26, out of the Top 25. The Bulldogs, on the other hand, jumped from un-ranked to No. 19 and put a dent in Sproles' chase for the Heisman trophy.

It was the West Coast's first chance to see the Heisman hype that was Darren Sproles on national television.

It was his chance to pull some West Coast votes from Matt Leinart of USC, but it didn't happen. Instead Sproles turned in his lowest regular season rushing total since 2001.

While Sproles had to put it into reverse, second gear and neutral in order to get out of his own backfield, other top Heisman hopefuls put up decent numbers, and their teams won.

Cedric Benson of Texas rushed for 188 yards on 29 carries in the Longhorns win over Arkansas. Benson scored two touchdowns, one rushing and the other a 13-yard reception. In two games, Benson has nine fewer carries than Sproles, two more touchdowns and 111 more yards.

Leinart led the No. 1 Trojans to a dominating 49-0 win over Colorado State. Leinart completed nearly 65 percent of his passes and threw for two more touchdowns, moving his season total to five without an interception.

Last year's Heisman winner, Jason White of Oklahoma, completed 14 of 18 passes for 257 yards and two touchdowns in the Sooners' 63-13 win over Houston.

White's season stats are nearly equal to Leinart, as both jump out as the early favorites for the award.

There is still hope for Sproles.

In two games, K-State's opponent on Saturday, Louisiana-Lafayette, has given up an average of 240 yards rushing per game. It will take another 200-yard effort for Sproles to get back into the race.

The only way it will happen, though, is if the offensive line clears the road and the quarterbacks take the keys to the Ferrari and don't hit any speed bumps or crash it.

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the fall semester in full swing, UFM Community Learning Center is offering sports-related credit and non-credit classes to students.

Among the classes offered for credit this fall is scuba diving.

Scuba diving is held at 6 p.m. on Mondays at the Natatorium and is taught by Jeff Wilson.

Wilson said most of his classes are usually full, but not this year.

"We teach two classes per semester in the fall and spring, and one class during the summer," he said. "We normally have a full class of about 10 students per class, but this year we only have seven. We get about 40 to 50 students in total in a given year."

Wilson is originally from Pennsylvania and taught for four years before moving to Manhattan. "I originally got into scuba diving through my parents," Wilson said. "I moved out here, and I'm currently a research chemist with the Department of Agriculture."

Wilson, who has been scuba diving for 35 years and has taught for 20 years at K-State, said many students take the class because they plan on learning the skill for future vacations.

"Many people who take the class plan on traveling to the Caribbean or South Pacific," he said. "There's really not anywhere in Kansas to scuba dive."

Kristen White, fifth-year senior in graphic design, is taking the class for the first time and said she plans on scuba diving while visiting Hawaii.

"I've been to Hawaii before and went snorkeling and really wanted to learn how to scuba dive," White said. "I'm also taking this class because I had 11 hours and needed 12."

Jason Meeker, senior in arts and recreational management, also is enrolled in the class for the first time. Meeker said he always wanted to take a scuba diving class and is taking it because it's required for his major.

"When I was in junior high, my dad took a scuba diving class, and I was always really interested in it," Meeker said.

Linda Teener, UFM director, said although the class has begun, students can enroll in scuba diving in November.

Teener said other UFM classes are

"There are still other classes, which are still open for students looking to add some more classes," Teener said. "Students can register for the class until the first day or until it's full."

Charlene Brownson, community outreach coordinator, said UFM's efforts go beyond K-State.

"Classes are held all over the place in the community," she said. "We've actually expanded to the Salina campus as well, with scuba diving and golf offered to students in Salina."

Volleyball | Lastra receives player of week honors

Freshman Angie Lastra has rewritten the record books again.

Monday, league offices announced Lastra as Big 12 Volleyball Player of the Week, making the freshman the first-ever libero to earn the honor.

Lastra

Lastra averaged 5.69 digs per game in three matches at this past weekend's Diet Coke Invitational in Minneapolis, Minn.

The Puerto Rico native set a K-State five-match record against new No. 1 Minnesota with 36 digs. Lastra added seven service aces over the weekend to go along with two other 25-plus dig performances.

Lastra leads the Wildcats in digs and service aces on the season.

She is the second straight Wildcat to be named conference player of the week, as senior outside hitter Valeria Heijas took the honor last week.

MLB | Baseball owners shell out cash for Bush campaign

Baseball owners once passed up a chance to hire former colleague George W. Bush as the sport's commissioner, but now they're working hard to keep Bush at bat in the White House.

More than a dozen current and former owners and family members are among the president's top re-election fund-raisers, an Associated Press review found. Seven are Bush "Rangers," each raising at least $200,000, and six are "Pioneers" who have brought in $100,000 or more.

The Bush campaign also has received direct contributions from owners and executives of more than half of the sport's 30 teams, the AP analysis of Federal Election Commission reports found.

Those include $2,000 contributions from owners George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees, Fred Wilpon of the New York Mets, Carl Pohlad of the Minnesota Twins, Peter Magowan of the San Francisco Giants and Michael Ilitch of the Detroit Tigers.

Bush also has picked up contributions from players and coaches — including a manager he once fired. Bobby Valentine, axed by Bush as manager of the Texas Rangers in 1992, gave the president the maximum $4,000 this year. Valentine said he's not surprised Bush has support from baseball owners.

With the benefit of family connections, Bush helped put together a group of investors to buy the Texas Rangers and then became its managing general partner from 1989 to 1994. There was talk back then that he might succeed Fay Vincent as commissioner, but the job went to Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig.

CFB | Younger Vick pleads no contest to charges

Suspended Virginia Tech quarterback Marcus Vick pleaded no contest Monday to a misdemeanor charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor after a night of drinking with underage girls.

Vick, younger brother of Atlanta Falcons quarterback Michael Vick, received a suspended 30-day jail sentence, was fined $100 and ordered to perform 24 hours of community service.

The judge ordered Vick to stay away from the teenage girls.

"Marcus has and does apologize for hurting so many people," defense lawyer Marc Long said. "I believe this is a life-changing experience for Marcus Vick."

Vick was arrested in February with teammates Mike Imoh and Brenden Hill after an encounter with 14- and 15-year-old girls at the quarterback's apartment in Blacksburg.

Tech suspended Vick for this season and said he could possibly be readmitted in the spring after completing a drug education and counseling program. Any more criminal, athletic or university violations would result in permanent dismissal.

Long said Vick has told him he plans to re-enroll at Tech this spring. Tech spokesman Larry Hinker said Monday that Vick's status at the school remains unchanged.

Members self-support local roller hockey club

By Zachary Payne
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At first glance, some may think they only play hockey. However, in reality it is much more.

Students who participate in the K-State roller hockey club are devoting time and money to play the sport they love.

The club team participates in the Great Plains Region of the National Collegiate Roller Hockey Association.

Senior and president of the club Travis Truesdell said it comes down to the sheer enjoyment of competition.

"The teams that we play against are really good, most of those guys have been playing for their whole lives, and it is awesome that we can go out there and hang with them," he said.

Faculty adviser and coach Jerry Remsbecker said the team, which returns eight players from last season, can be successful.

"I feel I have a good solid core of players, who if they work hard, can have a great season," he said.

"The guys work hard, and any recognition they can get out of it is much appreciated."

The major obstacle facing the club this season will not be opposing teams, but raising adequate funds to pay for all club expenses.

"To be a part of it takes a lot of commitment from everyone and a lot of passion. We figured it up, and it probably costs each of us around $1,000 a year," Trues-

"We figured it up, and it probably costs each of us around $1,000 a year."

Travis Truesdell
CLUB PRESIDENT

dell said.

Why are costs so high?

The club team, consisting of 16 players and two coaches, must travel to St. Louis for their games.

They also pay for traveling expenses including fuel, hotel rooms and meals.

Those expenses do not include the league dues and the money needed for every practice session in Junction City.

Each individual player must pay $100 to be on the team, and the team must also pay $100 for every practice session.

The Student Governing Association provides the club with some funding.

However, league dues have gone up this season, and funding has gone down.

Remsbecker said there were several ways the club attempts to raise funds, including raffles and setting up chairs for the football games. Alumni have also donated to the club.

Despite the commitment, Remsbecker said all of the time and energy club membership requires is well worth it.

"This club is the best thing that I do at K-State — I enjoy the heck out of it," he said.

Swedish bands deliver

"Kiss & Tell"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Sweden is known for many things: neutrality, beautiful buxom blonde women, etc., but it is not known for giving us groundbreaking or even good music ("Ace of Base," anyone?).

All that has changed in the past years is the revival of garage rock, punk and new wave. For those paying attention, two excellent bands from Sweden have released solid records within the past few months.

One band is the Hives, a quintet dressed in matching black and white suits and featuring members with names like Howlin' Pelle Almqvist, Chris Dangerous, and Dr. Matt Destruction. The other is Sahara Hotnights, an all female quartet that dresses stylishly and plays music that harkens back to the heyday of new wave grunge bands such as Blondie, the Go-Gos, and Pat Benatar.

The Hives' last proper release, "Veni Vidi Vicious," showed us a band that played jerky Devo-esque garage rock with an ear for hooks and lyrics that walked a fine line between brutally smart and just plain dumb.

The Hives' latest album, "Tyrannosaurus Hives" shows us a band that has tightened up their sound to create a better record. What we are given is 30 minutes of music that is over before you can even think of catching your breath, but that stays with you long after the CD stops spinning.

The record sprints out of the gates with "Abra Cadaver," a powerful song that is barely a minute and a half long.

It only gets better from there.

The first single "Walk Idiot Walk" shows the band at their best, controlling their hyper sound in one of the best songs the band has committed to record. It has a killer hook, singable chorus and it shows a 'Evil' sequel disastrous

"Resident Evil: Apocalypse"

Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

In "Resident Evil: Apocalypse," Alice (Milla Jovovich), picks up where she left off in the first "Resident Evil," awaking to find Raccoon City a ravaged mess and the undead walking the streets.

The evil commercial entity, the Umbrella Corporation, has been engineering biological weapons, and the dreaded T-virus, which transforms its victims into lifeless zombies, has been spreading through the city.

Key figures of the city, mainly Umbrella scientists, have been evacuated from the city as it is quarantined due to the virus.

However, Alice, along with a few other uninfected people, need to rescue a scientist's daughter to escape before the outbreak is covered up by a tactical nuclear device.

Included in this group is the vicious yet sultry Jill Valentine (Sienna Guillory) and Carlos Olivera (Oded Fehr) who are members of an elite group called S.T.A.R.S., Special Tactics and Rescue Services.

The movie starts off strong, playing on the spookiness of zombies stumbling around corners and people turning into zombies after being bitten by the undead.

One of the more tense and action packed scenes occurs in the Ravens' Gate Cathedral, where mutant creatures are lurking in the shadows and crawling on walls, while packs of the undead are trying to tear down the doors. Catching a glimpse of the creatures hanging in the rafters as you hear them moaning is enough to give you goosebumps.

But the Umbrella Corporation has another biological weapon/ace up its sleeve with project Nemesis, a gigantic, mutated S.T.A.R.S. member from the first movie. He is essentially indestructible and totes a rail-gun and a rocket launcher.

Along with the overwhelming amount of action and adventure, there is a surprising amount of humor with one-liners, most of which comes from L.J. (Mike Epps).

Debut director Alexander Witt creates a fun yet creepy world by borrowing Toronto from the polite Canadians and transforming it into Raccoon City. One feels the big-brother presence of the overwhelming Umbrella Corporation, even as it is being destroyed by zombies and shot up by groups of S.T.A.R.S.

There's enough gun-fighting and blood to keep any action movie or video-game buff satisfied, but people seeking intriguing plots and superb acting will be moaning more than any zombie could. But what more can you really expect?

Witt, who has worked on movies such as "Daredevil" and "XXX," tries to flush out more from the story than there is. Give Witt credit for trying to make a zombie action movie more cerebral. Nonetheless, it comes off as confusing.

For instance, the goliath Nemesis, who is a mutant/robot bad-ass, seems to have a bit of internal conflict when fighting Alice. An audience's gut reaction would simply be: Why? And this is where the movie falls into a tailspin as it shamelessly sets up for a third "Resident Evil" movie.

If you want to see a fun, state-of-the-art, action movie with great effects and explosions, by all means check out "Resident Evil: Apocalypse." It's fun and exciting, but when you start to wonder where the movie is heading, run out of the theater and don't look back.

Oprah gives cars to audience

Talk show host Oprah Winfrey celebrated the premiere of her 19th season Monday by surprising each of her 276 audience members with a new car.

"We're calling this our wildest dream season, because this year on the Oprah show, no dream is too wild, no surprise too impossible to pull off," Winfrey said.

Making sure the audience was kept in suspense, Winfrey opened the show by calling 11 audience members onto the stage. She gave each of them a car — a Pontiac G6.

She then had gift boxes distributed to the rest of the audience and said one of the boxes contained keys to a twelfth car. But when the audience members opened the boxes, each had a set of keys.

"Get Away From Me"

Album review by Matt Groneman

Put vaudeville, a Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, a smoky jazz piano and political angst in a blender and what do you get?

Try also adding PETA, Tin Pan Alley, funk, techno, rap and a sense of humor and you get Nellie McKay's debut album, entitled "Get Away From Me."

Musically, McKay is more diverse than all but a few elite artists. She effortlessly moves between and mixes genres from Norah Jones-esque jazz to socially conscious rap to show tunes.

The 19-year-old singer-songwriter got her start playing piano in New York bars while in college.

She released her debut album on Columbia Records, a label famous for releasing the earliest recordings of such seminal acts as Bob Dylan, Bessie Smith and Bruce Springsteen.

Columbia does not disappoint with this discovery.

The cover features our heroine striking a chorus-line pose with a parental advisory label tagging close behind her.

The album's title is a play on Norah Jones' "Come Away With Me." McKay has beef with Jones for not being edgy.

"Get Away From Me" is also one of the only double-album debuts ever released. This shows a good deal of faith on Columbia's part, especially when the music could have fit on one disc.

Literally, McKay has been compared to Eminem. This may be a bit of a stretch, though McKay does sing about slitting men's throats.

Many of the songs on the album are venomous attacks on the men, but whether essentializing the post-sensitive male in "It's A Pose" or replacing him with a pet in "The Dog Song," McKay criticizes the men with such wit and intelligence that she never comes off as irrational or sexist.

Other songs ironically present a position that McKay criticizes though exaggeration. In "Won't U Please B Nice," McKay takes on the role of a housewife who threatens to cause harm to her husband if he doesn't vote conservative.

Similarly, "Clonie" finds McKay singing a love song to her clone, showing disdain for cloning through lyrics while the vocal stays sugary-sweet.

With a mixture of gorgeous melodies, complex textures and insightful yet incisive lyrics, Nellie McKay is one of the most talented people in music today. Keep looking for more from this unique and talented teen.

Putin announces anti-terror policies

Critics assail plan as an authoritarian end to local autonomy

By Mara Bellaby
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Responding to a spate of deadly terror attacks, President Vladimir Putin announced a series of anti-terror initiatives Monday that would strengthen the Kremlin's grip on every layer of Russian political life.

Putin told cabinet members and security officials convened in special session that the future of Russia was at stake and called for creation of a powerful anti-terror agency.

"The organizers and perpetrators of the terror attack are aiming at the disintegration of the state, the breakup of Russia," he said. "We need a single organization capable of not only dealing with terror attacks but also working to avert them, destroy criminals in their hideouts and, if necessary, abroad."

Despite the plans for the new anti-terrorism agency, the proposals were short on security measures, focusing instead on electoral changes, including the elimination of popularly elected governors and an overhaul of the way Russians elect their parliament — a measure likely to increase the control of the pro-Kremlin faction.

Critics called the measures a blow to democracy, and warned that Putin's reliance on top-down control ultimately could weaken the nation by driving those in power further from the citizens they rule.

Some critics also suggested that Putin's decision to focus on electoral changes was a sign he lacks practical ideas about protecting Russia after a series of stunning terror attacks blamed on Chechen rebels, climaxing in the school siege that killed more than 330 people.

Putin said he would propose legislation abolishing the election of local governors by popular vote. Instead they would be nominated by the president and confirmed by local legislatures — removing local autonomy.

Putin explained his actions as necessary to streamline and strengthen the executive branch to make it more capable of combating terror.

But his critics immediately assailed the proposal as a self-destructive effort that could fuel dissent in the provinces.

"Today, all the power agencies that are supposed to fight terrorism are subordinated directly to the president. It's incomprehensible why on top of that he has to name governors," Sergei Mitrokhin, a leading member of the liberal Yabloko faction, told Russia's Ekho Moskvy radio. "It shows that the president doesn't know what to do, he's at a loss."

Since taking office in 1999, Putin has worked constantly to rein in independent-minded governors. He already has tossed them out of Russia's upper house of parliament and made them subservient to the seven regional envoys he appointed.

Sergei Markov, a political analyst with close ties to the Kremlin, said the president's move against the governors could help curb corruption that has flourished in some regions.

"At the same time, it means a lowering of (their) general political authority and a serious lowering of political pluralism," Markov told Ekho Moskvy radio.

In another move aimed at strengthening the federal authorities, Putin recommended eliminating the individual races that now fill half of the seats in the national parliament and have the entire lower house filled by parties on a proportional basis.

Putin said the move would help foster dialogue by expanding the clout of political parties, but his opponents warned that it would further increase the clout of the Kremlin-controlled parliament factions that already have an overwhelming majority in the State Duma.

Vladimir Ryzhkov, one of the few opposition deputies in the State Duma, scorned the president's political proposals and said if they were approved, "the next Duma will be simply virtual, it will consist of just marionette party lists and won't enjoy any authority."

A new structure called the Public Chamber would strengthen public oversight of the government and the actions of law enforcement agencies, Putin said.

Although Putin has been criticized for strengthening his own powers in the past, three weeks of terrorist violence and the deaths of 430 people have led to increased support among the Russian people for measures to combat terrorism.

Putin said official corruption that helped terrorists — such as the issuing of documents "leading to grave consequences," should be punished with particular severity. He also signaled a government crackdown on Islamic groups could be planned, proposing that extremist organizations should be outlawed.

Putin named one of his closest confidants, cabinet chief of staff Dmitry Kozak, to represent him in the southern district that includes the Caucasus.

"The next Duma will be simply virtual, it will consist of just marionette party lists and won't enjoy any authority."

OPPOSING DEPUTY
STATE OF DUMA

The Russian president said that terrorism is rooted in the low living standards in the North Caucasus.

"This is a rich fertile ground for the growth of extremist propaganda and the recruitment of new supporters of terror," Putin said. "The North Caucasus is a key strategic region for Russia. It is a victim of terrorism and also a springboard for it."

REVIEW | Swedish garage rock revival sure to please audience

band slowly building and releasing their trademark energy in a three-minute single.

Other album highlights are the fuzzed-out hook on "B is for Brutus," along with its hilarious chorus and the unbelievably catchy string section and atmosphere created by the song "Diabolic Scheme."

There really is not a weak track on this album, one that lives up to its prehistoric moniker.

Not to be outdone by the boys, Sahara Hotnights' second album, "Kiss & Tell," shows the girls embracing the clothes, keyboards, and kitsch of 80's pop-punk and new wave.

Lead singer Maria Andersson's emotive voice conveys anger, sass and even sadness.

This combines well for an album that is 35 minutes of ballad-free energetic rock with choruses that are perfectly shoutable and hooks that are wonderfully danceable.

Both records are examples of the garage rock revival done right, and if Sweden can release more bands such as these then maybe I can forgive them for giving us "Ace of Base."

Maybe.

Coastal residents plan evacuations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Rather than roll the dice on where 160-mph Hurricane Ivan might strike, Gulf Coast residents from Florida's panhandle all the way to the bayous of Louisiana spent Monday boarding their houses, tying up their boats and making plans to evacuate.

"I'm getting the hell out of here. This thing's too big," charter boat captain Jerry Weber said as he steered his 41-foot vessel up the Apalachicola River. "It doesn't matter where it comes ashore, not at this size."

The hard-to-predict Category 5 storm, one of the most powerful hurricanes ever to hit the Caribbean, killed at least 68 people in a devastating run through Barbados, Grenada, Jamaica and the Cayman Islands. The storm was headed toward Cuba on Monday.

Emergency officials in several Florida counties were expected to decide Monday whether to order evacuations from fishing villages and beach communities in advance of the storm. Already, the military bases in the region flew some 275 aircraft out of the area.

At 5 p.m. EDT, Ivan was centered 30 miles south of the western tip of Cuba, and was headed toward the northwest at near 9 mph. It had also grown, with hurricane-force winds extending 115 miles from the eye.

Although some forecasters predicted some weakening over the cooler waters of the north-eastern Gulf of Mexico, National Hurricane Center director Max Mayfield said Ivan would still be "very formidable."

On Pensacola Beach, Mark Sigler and his son stacked sandbags across the driveway of their steel-reinforced dome house that is supposedly designed to withstand hurricane-force winds.

They were not sticking around to find out.

"It's stupid to stay unless you like camping in a disaster area," he said.

At times along its wobbly path, forecasters had predicted Ivan could make direct hits on either the Florida Keys or populous South Florida, only to see it veer west and sidestep both areas.

The last time Florida was hit by three hurricanes in a single season was 1964.

Cedar Key, an island in an area where the Florida peninsula turns into the Panhandle, has been either in the path or in the evacuation zone for the two previous storms and has not been ruled out as a target for Ivan.

At Fishbonz Chowder House, one of only two restaurants open in Cedar Key, paramedic Michel DuMont said she was not going to take her plywood down until after Ivan ran its course.

"How can you overreact to a Category 5?" DuMont said. "Frances was ugly, but Ivan is mean."

COMMUNITY COLLEGES | Students take advantage of junior college and summer course options

"Community colleges are gaining ground all over the state," said Ferguson.

Now, with 19 community colleges in Kansas, state colleges are starting to worry.

Ferguson said since 2002, state colleges have created campaigns to increase tuition for their schools to help create some sort of academic edge.

"A lot of people believe that the Board of Regents controls tuition," Ferguson said. "But actually, every school has a huge influence over tuition increases every year."

Schools such as K-State and the University of Kansas have increased tuition a lot by standards within the state.

"These academic institutions, however, want to provide the best classrooms and faculty," said Ferguson.

"To them, it gives their school a name, it gives them an edge over their junior college counterparts."

Paul Richards, senior in electrical engineering, said that going to a junior college was one of the smarter moves in his college career.

"I was offered a full ride to go to a junior college," Richards said.

"Although the free education did play a huge role into my college decisions, I had plenty of other reasons to choose a junior college."

Richards said a junior college is a smooth transition for students who are not fully prepared for a full-fledged college experience.

"Scared - I was scared of a lot of things," said Richards. "I was worried about taking the big tests, huge lecture classes, and financial debt."

"I was also closer to family."

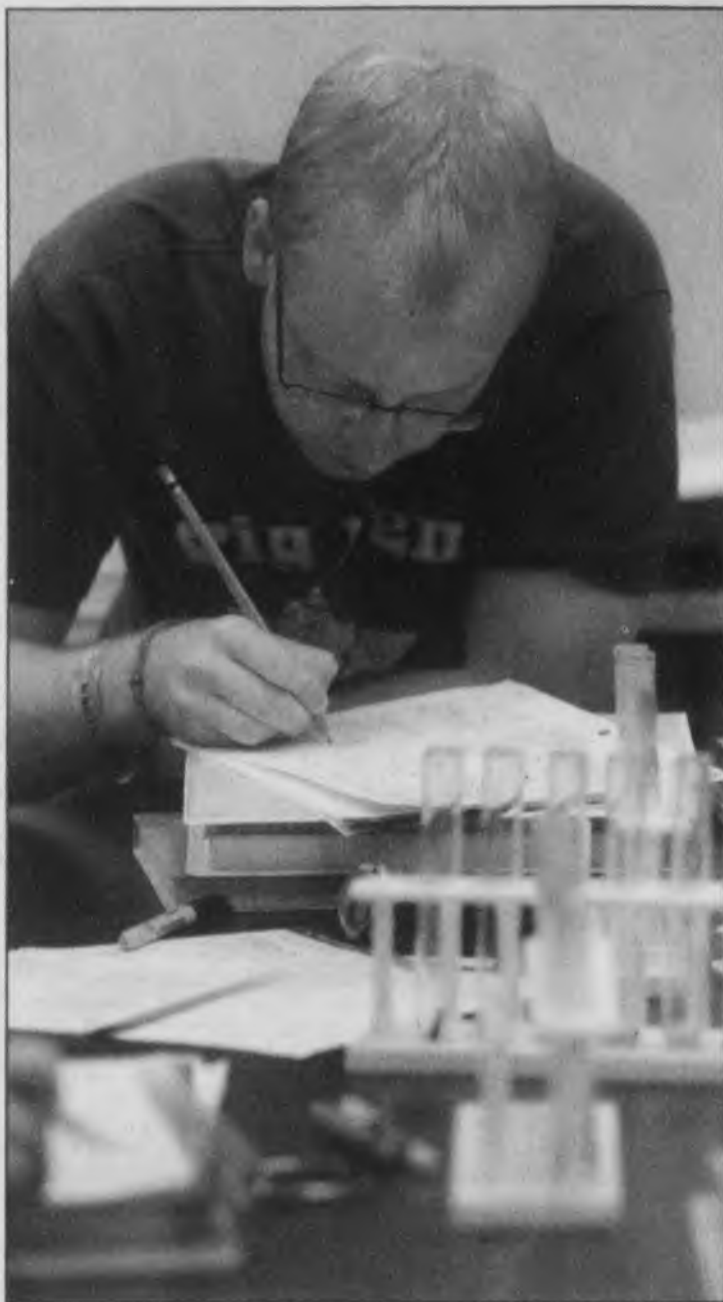

"A larger reason for me to choose to go to a junior college was because I was undecided on a major," said Richards.

"I just didn't want to waste thousands of dollars on a major I wasn't sure of, and I discovered what I wanted to do at junior college - engineering."

As of August 2003, the Registrar's office reported 2,320 students who transferred to the university.

Overall, 108 were from Kansas community colleges.

Ferguson said the numbers were consistent with trends all over the state.

"There are a growing number of students interested in community colleges, but eventually, those students may make it to the universities," he said.

Another academic trend at K-State is summer school enrollment.

Mike Matthews, junior in English and pre-law, took summer courses this year. He was rather satisfied with the experience.

"I took some classes just to catch up with others in my majors," Matthews said.

"I know that by taking them now, I will save more by eliminating a semester off of my academic terms here at K-State."

The classroom experience is quite different during the summer, Matthews said.

Summer courses at K-State are completely different then during the school year, Matthews said.

"The classes are so condensed that they are shorter."

"Also, professors only have to focus on 20 students as opposed to hundreds," he said.

"You are guaranteed more direct access to the teacher, and I believe that helped my grades this summer."

incident, readers who called the Times truly believed that that was how a news organization was run.

"What these incidents did do was to form the misperception that the media doesn't give a damn about inaccuracies," he said.

However, Sulzberger said he believes the news media is concerned about its audience and society.

"I have come to understand that editors and reporters are great optimists and incurable romantics," Sulzberger said. "We understand that when the media is wreckless for truth, we have to rebuild respect for our industry."

Sulzberger became publisher of the newspaper in 1992 and was named chairman of the New York Times Company in 1997. Under his leadership, the New York Times has received 27 Pulitzer Prizes.

He is married to Gail Gregg, Topeka native and a 1972 graduate of K-State.

Prior to Sulzberger's speech, protesters from Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka met outside McCain to express their concerns about the effects the media has on today's society.

The group included Shirley Phelps-Roper, daughter of evangelist Fred Phelps.

"They have powerful influences on the hearts and minds of the populous," Phelps-Roper said. "They've set a tone in this country that's based on the lie that it's okay to be gay."

multiple promotional methods.

KSDB Program Director Andrew Latham said while student organizations haven't advertised much with the radio station in the past, he believes they would use the grant.

"They see us as something free," Latham said. "They just don't want to spend the money."

Latham said there has been a rise recently in organizations looking into promoting events on the station.

"Our involvement with student organizations is growing very rapidly," he said.

Gayle Spencer, OSAS coordinator, said the idea of giving the station a lump sum at the beginning of the year and returning unused funds would be an "accounting nightmare," and her office could not undertake such an initiative.

Lucas Haag, at-large member of the committee, said the proposal also was flawed because, since all $50,000 is included in the operating budget, it relies on full usage by students.

"There are going to be a lot of budgeting issues with this," said Haag, senior in agriculture technology management. "I don't know how you could possibly budget for this and have a lot of faith in that $50,000."

Burns said he didn't see the proposal working out.

"This idea of trading off advertising is simply not going to work," he said.

The committee decided to move along in the proposal, neither rejecting nor approving the proposal.

After putting the underwriting grant aside, the committee discussed the budget in general.

The station also is asking for an increase of $34,000 for their operations budget, an increase of $22,000 for their repair and replacement budget, and more than $58,000 for the construction of a new 24-hour newsroom.

Hundreds of organizations scheduled to attend Career Fair next week

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Companies, graduate schools and organizations spanning the country will attend the annual Career Fair at K-State.

The event, which takes place from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 21 and 22 at Bramlage Coliseum, will allow students the first opportunity to meet with potential employers, said Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services.

"We're trying to make it easier to make those connections," she said.

"We do this to bring employers and other organizations to campus, so students can easily see what's out there."

If you go
Annual K-State Career Fair
When: 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 21 and 22
Where: Bramlage Coliseum
How much: Free

Keller said the fair fills up the entire Bramlage floor with more than 200 companies, graduate schools and organizations. She said this is the eleventh year for the event.

"It's kind of one of the pivotal events for the fall semester," Keller said. "It's a chance for students to get their résumé together."

The Career Fair is not just for those looking to make contacts for a job, she said. Students can attend to see what employers expect, so all grade levels can benefit from the fair.

"The graduating seniors feel the greatest urgency, but we really encourage freshmen, sophomores, juniors to go," Keller said. "It's not too early to see what employers are looking for."

Keller said students benefit from the career fair.

"We know that college students meet employers, and many times it does end up in jobs or internships," she said.

The day after the Career Fair some companies will stay to interview students interested in their company, she said. A list of companies at the fair is available on the CES Web site, www.ksu.edu/ces.

Danielle Bega-Silva, senior, said she will likely attend the fair on Wednesday.

"I'm a social work major, and we've been told we should go," she said.

"I already went online to check out the different companies, but I didn't know what each company does. I'm just kind of checking it out."

Bega-Silva said she isn't going to look for an employer but will see what employers look for in social workers.

After speaking with friends from other schools, Silva said the Career Fair is a great opportunity given by K-State.

"I think it's cool that K-State does this, because I have friends that go to other colleges that when they leave are like, 'Oh well, bye,'" she said. "Not everyone takes advantage of this like they should, but at least it's still there."

On-campus jobs and work-study positions available to students

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For more information

It may seem difficult to attain a job while in college, but students rarely realize how many employment opportunities are offered on campus.

If a student is looking for a job in their department, Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said most departments list employment opportunities on the CES Web site, www.ksu.edu/ces.

Brantley listed many of the on-campus opportunities, including receptionists, research/faculty assistants, food service, athletic department and jobs in various places in the K-State Student Union. She said the responsibilities in these jobs can range anywhere from setting up for events on campus to serving food at campus cafeterias.

"Employers on campus are looking for students that will have commitment," Brantley said.

"The best time to apply for an on-campus job is at the beginning of the semester, but students shouldn't give up hope, because positions usually open up throughout the year."

Brantley also said the work-study program is available to students who qualify for aid.

Federal College Work Study Web site:
www.ksu.edu/sfa/collegeworkstudy.htm

Career and Employment Services:
www.ksu.edu/ces/

According to peer financial advisor Chris Binson, work study wages are 70 percent funded by the government, not the college or department.

"Campus employers want work-study students, and students will still earn as much money, but it will just be calculated into work study," Binson said.

Larry Moeder, director of admissions in Student Financial Assistance, said the major benefit for students is that more employers on campus are looking for work-study students, so it is easier for them to find jobs. Moeder said this was because it causes substantial savings for the employer.

There are also several other benefits to being in the work-study program.

"If students are working under the federal work-study program, the earnings don't go on next year's financial aid income," he said.

"It also makes sense that state and federal taxes will not be taken out of students' paychecks, because the government is doing the funding."

The luck of the jobless

Jobseekers get advice on landing offers, but in the end, success happens by chance

Congratulations, for the career fair.

JAMES HURLA

The final ingredient to a successful job hunt is rarely found in any books and is not pushed strongly by Career and Employment Services.

What you need is pure, dumb luck. It's one of the easiest things to utilize, and when you finally take advantage of it, your only thought is "I should've thought about that sooner."

So rub your lucky horseshoe and nail that rabbit's foot to your Irish friend. You're going to need luck throughout the application and interviewing process.

Remember, luck can work for you or against you, so you want to treat it like a tender lover, without that weird foot thing you do.

Now, let's get a job.

GETTING READY

Wake up at least 15 minutes before you're supposed to be at the career fair. If you have a ride, you may cut this time to 10 minutes.

Everything about your appearance will affect how potential employers perceive you, so it's important you blow them away with your planning.

First, be sure to wear lots of cologne or perfume, to show employers you understand the importance of making your presence felt. However, you want to be sure to wear an off-brand to show employers you aren't frivolous with money.

If luck is on your side, the bacon grease from your McMuffin will not stain your résumés.

If luck is against you, your spilled orange juice will smear the crayon you used to write your résumé.

FIRST IMPRESSION

After your appearance convinces employers you are a potential vice president, you actually have to talk to them.

This is where most people blow the interview.

Reach in your pocket and rub your furry little good-luck charm (the rabbit's foot), take a deep breath and approach the employer. Introduce yourself.

When you realize you just handed your résumé to another applicant, compose yourself, rub, breathe and try again.

With a little luck, you won't mention your inability to work with others, nor will you reference venereal diseases in any way.

Luck has saved you once again. See, this is easy.

You're almost there, but there's one more step before you get the job.

SELL YOURSELF

This is different than the way you sold yourself sophomore year to get "textbook money." This is convincing your potential employer that you are the right person for the job.

Convince the employer you are hard-working, dedicated, intelligent and a huge fan of his/her alma mater.

If he buys your crap, luck is definitely traveling with you.

SEAL THE DEAL

This is where all the good fortune could come back to bite you. If bad luck strikes your alarm clock, you could be late on your first day.

Bosses tend to dislike that.

You could get a flat tire, get probed by aliens or have a really bad hangover - all things beyond your control. Be careful not to take recent good luck for granted.

There are innumerable tips and tricks for finding a job that's right for you.

You have to get out there and do the work, but ultimately, with a little luck, you'll find a job where you are appreciated and where you appreciate the work.

But it doesn't matter much either way.

It's only a matter of time before you realize it'd be tons easier just to win the lottery.

James is a senior in print journalism and public relations who already has his post-graduation job lined up. Suckers. Please send comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

Gargiulo Inc.

The nation's largest fresh tomato grower and shipper, is inviting all interested students to come to the Career Fair September 22, to visit with Chris Davis, General Manager of Packing Operations at Gargiulo. Chris is a 1990 K-State graduate of the College of Agriculture.

We have operations in Naples, Immokalee, and Quincy, Florida; Oxnard and Firebaugh, California; and on the south coast of Puerto Rico. We produce tomatoes 52 weeks a year in one or several locations at a time. At least one out of every 10 tomatoes eaten in the United States comes from Gargiulo operations.

Several graduates of Kansas State have greatly influenced the growth and success of Gargiulo, and we hope to continue that success with the same formula. We are looking for people with a strong work ethic, leadership skills, and the ability to think and solve problems. Self confidence, good communication skills, and the ability to learn quickly are some of the keys to rapid success with our company.

Gargiulo is offering management positions in farm management, packaging, logistics management, and opportunities exist in California and Florida operations.

We are interested in talking to all majors interested in a career in the produce industry, both for this year's graduation, and those a few years from graduation.

Résumés crucial for securing a job

Presenting oneself on paper and in person vital to impressing employers

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Résumés and interviews are two very important aspects when applying for that dream job.

Karolyn Kitchener, program specialist for Manhattan Workforce Center, said a résumé should be a brief explanation of job skills.

"It's known that it only takes seven seconds for an employer to view a résumé," she said.

Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said it is important that a résumé showcases a student's abilities.

"If they're a freshman in college or a sophomore and they have never worked, they can put skills they have, activities they are in and volunteer projects they've done," she said.

Kitchener said a student's résumé should focus on them, but there are certain things that shouldn't be included.

"Do not put any personal information on a résumé," she said. "Only include your name address and phone number. You should also never use 'I.'"

Grade point average is optional, Brantley said.

"If it is over 2.5 it is encouraged, but if it is below that, I wouldn't recommend a student to include it," she said.

The résumé is only one part of the job application process. If a student is selected for an interview, they should be prepared, Kitchener said.

"Before you go to the interview, you need to learn something about the company and know the kind of job skills and information that the employer is looking for," she said.

Kitchener said students should dress appropriately for an interview, as well.

- Include duties and skills that pertain to the job
- Résumés should be about one page in length
- Include separate pages for a cover letter and a reference page
- Use nice paper with mild colors
- Make sure the envelope matches the résumé paper

"Dress according to what you see in the office before you apply," she said.

If students were fired in the past, Kitchener said students should explain the circumstances of termination.

"Speak positively of your former employers and coworkers, and if you were fired, you need to briefly tell them what happened," she said.

"If it was your fault you need to tell them that this is something that shouldn't happen again."

Some employers have started to ask behavioral type questions during interviews, Brantley said.

"The employer will ask you a question such as 'tell me about a time when you held a leadership position,'" she said.

"They may also ask you about a particular situation and the action you did as a result."

Employment services available to students

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Career and Employment Services serve students as a part of K-State's mission statement.

Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said it has always been K-State's mission to prepare students for employment after graduation.

Keller said all of the 20 employees at CES work diligently to help students succeed and reach out and help as many students as possible.

"I've been very impressed with the staff. They are all very committed to helping. There is only so much we can do for a student a week away from graduation, but we do our best and urge people to take advantage of our programs early," Keller said.

Keller said CES employees prepare presentations for classes and organizational meetings.

CES conducts résumé building workshops, mock interviews, a part time opportunities fair and several other ways on campus to help students get a job.

Career and Employment Services also has service opportunities on their Web site at www.ksu.edu/ces.

CES's Web site has a job search for both part- and full-time opportunities, a Wildcat Mentor Network and a new emphasis on full-time access to services from CES.

Keller said the Wildcat Mentor Network has had a growing emphasis on involving K-State alumnae in the job search.

"It helps show students some of the lesser-known jobs, some that may not have been seen at the Career Fair and are owned by our K-State alums," Keller said.

The part- and full-time job opportunity listing on the Web site has proved to be popular, Keller said.

"We've gotten calls from employers within hours to pull jobs — it seems to be a good service to students, and we've heard some interesting testimonials from it as well," Keller said.

Keller said in the past year, she has seen an increased number of students who set up individual appointments, as well as students sending résumés to be critiqued via e-mail.

"We do what we can with the resources we have, but must encourage students to get in here early to get an early start on the services they'll need," Keller said.

Graduate schools offer another alternative to searching for jobs

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the economy continues to dip and the job market remains lackluster, an increasing number of graduates from K-State and across the nation are looking towards graduate school as an alternative to entering the work force.

Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said while job placement statistics for K-State graduates are still very promising, there is an increase in the number of students looking to graduate school rather than testing the job market.

"I guess if we looked at this year compared to '02-03 grads, there was maybe a slight trend in more students going onto graduate school," Day Keller said.

Assistant Dean of the Graduate School Carol Shanklin said many students opt for graduate school if they feel the market does not offer sufficient opportunities in their field of choice.

Shanklin said choosing graduate school over entering the workforce isn't always necessary.

"It's very discipline specific whether it's to the student's benefit to pursue a graduate degree," she said. "In some cases, having an advanced degree does make you more competitive."

Some fields, Shanklin said, value job-related experience more than further education.

"What students need to do when considering the option of work or graduate school is explore what the job opportunities are," she said.

Shanklin said students should look at people who have worked in their fields of interest and evaluate their experiences.

In addition, she said students who do decide to go to graduate school should select their courses to suit the skill sets needed for their desired field.

Joe Aistrup, head of the political science department, said the reasons behind the trend towards graduate school are not cut and dry.

"There are multiple reasons, and no one reason is the right answer for everybody," Aistrup said.

He said three main reasons are a decrease in the job market for students graduating with bachelor's of art degrees, a decline in the relative quality of job offers, or a perception of graduate school as a way to improve graduates' positions once they enter the job market.

"Since a lot of people know they'll have to go back to school anyway somewhere down the road, some of them think, 'Why not just start off with it?'"

Aistrup said graduate degrees can be very helpful to students.

He said degrees such as the sciences and social sciences re beneficial pursuits for graduates.

"In my field of political science, the pros definitely outweigh the cons," Aistrup said. "If you are interested in government position, you are able to start much higher in the civil service ladder with a master's degree or some other type of graduate degree, like a law degree."

Day Keller said despite the increase in students attending graduate school, job placement for recent K-State graduates is on par with benchmarks from other institutions.

However, not all students have become employed in degree-related or career-oriented fields.

"Almost consistently, year after year, regardless of the job markets, we are looking at about 10 percent of K-State graduates still looking six months after graduation," Day Keller said.

"I think that is a very reasonable kind of figure."

Workshop to provide tips for interviewing

Preparation is key to a successful interview

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Career and Employment Services is offering an opportunity for students to learn about the interview process with an interview workshop on Sept. 13.

"Many students do not walk into the interview prepared, said Kerri Day Keller, Career and Employment Services director.

"We just want to give them the knowledge of what they need to know," Keller said.

Afton Smith, sophomore in sociology, said she would like to know more about how to ace interviews.

"Sometimes I wonder if I know the right things, like how to conduct myself, how to answer things correctly and what exactly to wear," she said.

Keller said the workshop will be in a classroom setting. Students will learn the different types of interviews, typical interview questions, and how to leave a good impression.

"Over 1,200 students have gone to our workshops in the past," she said.

"We are hoping for more students who are interested to learn something they probably need to know more about."

There are several things students do not prepare for when they go into the interview, Keller said.

"Students need to know a little bit about their employer, and especially about the position they are competing for," she said.

"Students should also know a little bit about themselves," said Keller. "You would be surprised to know how many students don't think about their personality or major milestones in their lives."

Career and Employment

Services also will offer a behavior workshop later this year. This workshop will teach students more about proper interview etiquette and behavior.

"You can walk into the interview and say you're happy to be there, but when you're carrying a frown, it is obvious," Keller said.

Students unable to attend the behavior interview workshop can get tapes from the Career and Employment Services office.

"In terms of the interview setting, it's about your tone of voice, your verbal, your body language," said Keller.

"It's your total package of how you are communicating your message."

"We hope students leave the workshop knowing what to do to ace the interview," she said.

CAT Answers system at Hale offers aid for library questions

By Brad Kurtz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are reams of information housed inside the walls of Hale Library, but for some, getting to that information can be a difficult undertaking.

Luckily for those who don't know where to start looking, there's CAT Answers.

Beth Turtle, science librarian and co-coordinator of CAT Answers, said there are several ways for people to contact a librarian.

"Students, faculty and staff can get in touch with a librarian by telephone, in person, and now, virtually — with CAT Answers," she said.

CAT Answers is an online information service that allows students, staff, and faculty to communicate with library staff in real-time over the Internet.

This service is available to all current K-State students, faculty and staff of Kansas State University, according to the CAT Answers Web site.

The site also said CAT Answers can help with class assignments, provide guidance on researching a topic and answer questions about library services and resources.

Tara Baillargeon, social sciences librarian and one of KSU's 13 operators, said this service is to the advantage of students.

"Basically we really want to reach out to students," Baillargeon said. "Anytime they need help where a librarian could answer their question, it's a perfectly appropriate time to use CAT Answers. For us, there's no such thing as a dumb question."

Those who are interested in using CAT Answers can do so very easily, Marcia Stockham, education librarian and co-coordinator of CAT Answers.

"First, they need to go to the Ask a Librarian page," she said. "Then, users need to click the CAT Answers link."

From there, the next step will differ depending on whether the service is being accessed from a home computer or a library computer.

"If they are using a home computer, users will need to download a small plug-in first," Stockham said. "The Soldiers return to Fort Riley by the hundreds

Courtney Wooldridge, 7, saw her father Tuesday for the first time in a year.

She said although she was excited, she didn't brag to many people.

"I told my teacher," Courtney said. Lucas, Courtney's 3-year-old brother, only nodded when asked if he missed his dad.

Anja Wooldridge, Courtney and Lucas' mother, said she waited in anticipation for her husband's return, but didn't make the children too excited.

"I didn't want the kids to be too overwhelmed waiting for their dad to return. The past few days, though, we've all been waiting in anticipation," Anja said.

Sgt. Robert Wooldridge said he was very grateful to be back at home safely.

"Mission accomplished," Robert said.

At a redeployment ceremony Tuesday at Fort Riley, 250 soldiers returned at noon and another 130 returned at a scheduled 9:30 p.m. ceremony.

Spc. Toby Bauman saw his wife, Lisa, for the first time in seven months, and his daughter, Nadya, in person for the first time.

"I've seen pictures of her, but it's a whole other story to actually hold her," Toby said of Nadya.

Lisa said her time alone and pregnant was nerve-wracking.

"I did what I had to do," Lisa said.

Sgt. Charles Blackman returned Tuesday after being gone for seven months. He was injured while in Iraq prior to that, but was shipped out again.

"It's my job," Blackman said.

Blackman's wife, Kristin, and daughter, Sonja, met him in Hangar 417 at Fort Riley.

"We got here a little late," Kristin said, "but driving here was really hard, realizing that he'd be here."

Deb Skidmore, deputy public affairs officer at Fort Riley, said more than 800 soldiers returned since Sept. 10.

Skidmore said 3,500 are expected to return by October.

She said redeployment ceremonies are hard to predict, and calls are made within 24 hours of their return.

"Once they are safe in the air and the wheels are up, they let us know,"

Car bombing, shootings leave 59 dead in Iraq

By Kim Housego
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Guerrillas bombed a Baghdad shopping street full of police recruits and fired on a police van north of the capital Tuesday in attacks that killed at least 59 people and struck at the heart of the U.S. strategy for fighting Iraq's escalating insurgency.

The car bombing and shooting — the latest in violence that has killed nearly 150 people in three days — were part of an increasingly brazen and coordinated campaign to bring the battle to Baghdad, sowing chaos in the center of authority for Prime Minister Iyad Allawi and his American allies.

Insurgents appear to have only grown deadlier since Allawi's interim government took power in June, despite U.S. claims that Iraqi security forces are showing more resolve against insurgents.

The mounting attacks aim to wreck the centerpiece of the U.S. plan for defeating the militants: building a strong Iraqi security force able to bring some calm before elections slated for January. Doing so is also a key prerequisite for any withdrawal of American troops.

Ft. Riley soldier dead, 1 injured in shooting

CLAY CENTER, Kan. — A soldier from Fort Riley was killed and another person was in critical condition following a shooting at a rural residence west of the military installation, officials said Tuesday.

The Clay County Sheriff's Department said the shooting took place overnight. Sam Robinson, a spokeswoman for Fort Riley, said four soldiers and a spouse were involved in the shooting. Identities were not released pending notification of family.

Robinson said the soldiers were all members of the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry of the 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, which has about 800 soldiers currently in Iraq. The unit is serving its second tour in Iraq, but she said it was unclear if the soldiers involved in the shooting had been deployed or were part of the rear detachment that remains at Fort Riley.

"We're treating this just like any other soldier death," Robinson said.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation also is involved, and Robinson said Fort Riley's criminal investigation department is working with state and local investigators.

Clay Center is located about 30 miles from Fort Riley.

About 3,300 soldiers from Fort Riley are serving in Iraq.

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Cancer study at U. Hawaii focuses on celery, sprouts

HONOLULU — Facilitators of the third and final portion of a smoker feeding study on campus are looking for participants.

The Cancer Research Center of Hawaii paid volunteers in the past three years to eat free food in an attempt to test how eating certain fruits and vegetables can lessen cancer risks.

"We are studying the effects certain foods have on contributing to carcinogens in smokers," said Al Tachibana, the manager of the study. "It may become a factor in preventing certain forms of cancer."

Foods studied this semester are celery and broccoli sprouts.

The study begins with a two-week period in which participants are given snacks and three meals a day from Paradise Palms Cafe. Participants are given a two-week break followed by another two-week testing period. They will not be allowed to consume outside food, alcohol or caffeine during the testing periods and will be asked to eat the provided test vegetables, which contain a protective compound suspected to prevent the development of carcinogens in the body.

Kristine Cuthrell, project coordinator for the CRCH, already has found evidence that onions and grapefruit juice, which were tested last year, could help fight cancer.

"We found it decreases the activity of an enzyme that causes a carcinogen to develop," she said.

The study showed that participants detoxified and excreted 42 percent more potentially carcinogenic compounds.

"It's a small piece of the puzzle," Cuthrell said, "but it's a good piece."

Participants must be 18 to 70 years old, of Asian or Pacific Island ancestry, smoke at least 10 cigarettes a day and not be on any medications.

Dwight Yoshimoto, a 1975 University of Hawaii at Manoa alumnus, participated in the feeding study over the summer.

"I did it for the money but also to support the cancer study," he said. "It was pretty easy, but you had to be disciplined. You couldn't get off the diet."

"The hardest part was not getting any vegetables in your meals," said Kelvin Cheung, a travel industry management senior.

In addition to getting free food, participants will be paid $600 over the course of the study.

SPEECH CODES LIMIT LIBERTY

LINCOLN, Neb. — Congress shall not abridge the freedom of speech, but the UNL Student Code of Conduct can.

University of Nebraska-Lincoln students can carry picket signs, but not indoors. They can hold a group demonstration, but not if it blocks traffic flow.

Political groups can distribute propaganda at Memorial Stadium, but not in residence halls.

UNL administrators promote the free exchange of ideas, Student Judicial Affairs Director Matt Hecker said, but the university's First Amendment commitment does not give students unlimited freedom of expression.

The code of conduct, for example, forbids expression that "materially and substantially disrupts the normal operations of the university."

"The right of free speech ends when it interrupts classrooms," Hecker explained.

He said that does not mean students can't respectfully disagree with a professor's opinion. But, he said, if a student simply broke up a class by shouting at an instructor or a fellow student, he or she would violate the rules.

Sgt. Jerry Plessel with University Police said university administrators draw up the free speech rules, and police officers are responsible for enforcement.

The difference between a legitimate argument and a fight that disturbs the peace, though, can be difficult to identify, he said.

"It's a fine line," he said, "and it's taken on an individual basis."

Hecker said Judicial Affairs' workers typically deal with the harassment side of campus free speech issues. But when it comes to political or opinion speech, he said, it's not what people say — it's how they say it.

"The code of conduct violations wouldn't be content," he said, "they would be time, place or style."

In some places, Hecker said, people can reasonably expect more peace than in others. In residence halls, for example, students are entitled to more privacy and should not be subject to unnecessary outside disruptions.

But in most public places, free speech is fair game, he added.

At UNL, the main stage for ideological combat is the Nebraska Union Plaza, Unions Director Daryl Swanson said.

"The Union Plaza is thought of as a free speech forum," he said. "I'm proud of that."

With the deluge of flyers and sporadic appearances of "fire-and-brimstone" preachers, students have come to appreciate the plaza as an arena of expression.

In fact, Swanson said he would like to see demonstrators use the space. People are not bothered by the distribution of flyers inside the union as long as they don't block traffic, he added.

No large demonstration, though, has invaded the union since the early 1970s, he said.

More than 30 years have passed since then, and that kind of organized political fury has disappeared from campus, Swanson said.

Most days, Plessel said, freedom of speech disputes usually erupt when one person's expression butts heads with another's freedoms or rights, like personal privacy or the right not to be threatened.

"We take the First Amendment seriously," he said. "It just depends on the avenue they take."

Goss promises to shed partisanship as CIA chief

By Katherine Pfleger Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Bush's nominee to head the CIA promised Tuesday to shed his political past and provide precise, objective and independent intelligence to the president and Congress. But he also cautioned it may take longer than the past CIA director's estimate to hire and train all the operatives needed worldwide to combat terrorism and other threats.

"I have made a commitment to nonpartisanship," retiring Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla., told the Senate Intelligence Committee at his confirmation hearing. He conceded that during his 16 years in Congress he may "at times" have engaged in debate with too much vigor.

"Rest assured, however, I understand completely the difference in obligations the position of (director of central intelligence) carries with it and that which the role of a congressman carries," said Goss, who formerly chaired the House Intelligence Committee.

If confirmed, Goss would take over the agency just months after the CIA's last director, George Tenet, shocked some on the Sept. 11 commission by saying it would take five years to install the kind of clandestine service needed to deal with international terrorism. Tenet blamed the situation on tight budgets after the Cold War.

Goss, however, said Tuesday it would take more than five years to train and place all the clandestine operatives the CIA needs. "I don't believe five is enough," Goss said. "It's a long build-out, a long haul. It's been started."

In his testimony, Goss also outlined a series of commonly cited priorities for the U.S. intelligence community. They included improving human intelligence and analytic capabilities, expanding intelligence sharing with state and local law enforcement agencies and enhancing foreign language capabilities.

A former Army intelligence officer, Goss would assume at a tumultuous time the helm of the CIA and the dual role as head of the 14 other agencies in the U.S. intelligence community.

At the Sept. 11 commission's recommendation, Congress and the White House are considering separating Goss' would-be position into two jobs — a CIA director and a national intelligence director. The commission said the latter position should be empowered with budget and personnel authority over all of the nation's spy network.

Goss has said he believes the authority to control budgets for foreign intelligence should be consolidated in a central office. But if confirmed, he said Tuesday, he will "play the cards that are dealt to me on this subject."

Bush has endorsed giving the new national intelligence director budgetary authority, but not all of the powers the commission suggested. Democratic presidential nominee John Kerry has endorsed adopting the commission's 40-plus recommendations in their entirety.

Even as Goss focused on substantive intelligence issues Tuesday, Democrats repeatedly returned to sometimes terse exchanges about whether Goss could be an independent and nonpolitical CIA chief.

The panel's top Democrat, Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, admonished Goss for his criticism of Kerry, including a March op-ed piece he co-authored titled, "Need Intelligence? Don't Ask John Kerry." Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., said that Goss, as chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence from 1996 until August, was insufficiently committed to intelligence reform.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., also asked Goss about comments he made to the Associated Press about the prison abuse scandal in Iraq. During a May interview, Goss called ongoing Senate investigations "a circus."

"What you're saying by that comment is certainly a lack of respect not only for this committee, but this body," Feinstein said. "How can there be mutual respect?"

Goss said the comment was directed toward the "media frenzy" that was going on over the pictures of abuse at the now-infamous Abu Ghraib prison outside Baghdad.

"It was not made as a serious comment. It was not meant as a serious comment. It was not reported as a serious comment," he said.

While Goss has vocal critics in the Senate, no one so far has said publicly they will vote against him. Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., has indicated he wants the Senate to vote on the nomination as soon as next week.

At Tuesday's 4 1/2-hour hearing, Goss also backed away from a controversial provision he included in an intelligence reform bill in June to loosen long-standing restrictions on the agency's ability to operate inside the United States.

He said he had been trying to start a debate on an important issue — the blurring of lines between foreign and domestic intelligence. As the CIA's director, he said, he would come to policy-makers for guidance on intelligence and law enforcement capabilities.

TO THE POINT Soldiers' work worthy of praise and respect

With thousands of soldiers returning to Fort Riley this week and more returning by October, we should note the sacrifices that soldiers and military families make for the safety of our country and the world.

These people have left their children, spouses and entire lives behind to accomplish the goals we as a nation have set. After a year or more of being deployed overseas, and with the realization that they could be deployed again, our soldiers must begin to pick up the pieces and readjust to life outside the combat zone.

While military service can be very rewarding, those rewards are often intangible. Our soldiers are not currently receiving combat pay and have withstood attempts to cut benefits to them and their families. We should respect the enlisted members of our community and remember that we are the ones who have asked them to give up so much.

They dropped everything and went when we needed them, and it's our duty to honor that and give back whenever possible, whether it's buying a soldier a beer in Aggieville, sending a care package to a military family, or writing your elected officials to protest attempts to cut benefits. They defend and support us, and we should do the same for them.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

As September rolled around, I was surprised when I realized that my second wedding anniversary is next month. Most of my classmates can't believe it, either.

When you get to college, people start noticing wedding and engagement rings. When people see mine, their reaction is usually one of astonishment.

It may be because I am easily mistaken for a 17 year-old. It may be that the idea of marriage at this point in life scares many college students.

A lot of students (or a lot of those students' parents) think they should wait until after graduation to get married.

And they have lots of reasons: financial stability, stress, wedding expenses. But in actuality, being a married student works out pretty well.

For example, having a spouse allows you to have a constant support source. This is good for me, because I tend to freak out a lot. It's genetic.

My husband is there to calm me down, or if I'm worrying unnecessarily, to tell me to stop being an obsessive freak (which I'll admit I need sometimes).

The difference between a spouse and a girlfriend/boyfriend is that spouses tend to be more committed to you and your mental well being. They have to live with you, after all.

A spouse is someone to talk to all the time and ask how your day was.

Of course, on the opposite side of the spectrum, you will have someone who (hopefully) understands when you just want to be left the hell alone. Although, I must stress that this works best when you own more than one television.

As a married couple, you also know each other well enough to form your own little two member secret society.

Certain words, phrases and looks have meanings that no one else gets but the two of you. Who doesn't love an inside joke?

In addition, it's more difficult to annoy each other. Although, I'll admit there are times I want to throw my shoe at the back of my husband's head (I haven't — yet).

And one of the best parts is that your spouse is stuck with you in a good way.

SHANNA HAJEK

You can snort when you laugh, and they'll think it's cute. You can go into an extended air-drum solo to a Journey song, and they'll think it's hysterical.

I play a mean air-drum solo.

You never have to worry about your spouse being late with their half of the rent. You don't have to keep secret the fact that you're pissed off at them for not taking out the garbage.

Then there's the obvious bonus that you can sleep with your roommate, and there's no "walk of shame" to endure the next morning.

Don't get me wrong though, it's not all la-di-da-isn't-life-grand all the time.

There will be fights — mostly over money. There will be times you are too busy for one another and you or your spouse will feel neglected.

Taking care of each other when sick will be a necessity, not a favor. And it's not the "let's play naughty nurse" kind of care.

It's the "can you go to the store and get me some orange juice, but first get me another blanket?" kind.

But you have someone with whom to quote "Seinfeld" and "Simpsons" dialogue. And someone to put your freezing cold feet on, whether they like it or not. And someone to shove awake in the middle of the night when you have an awful dream.

So it's cool. It's work, but it's cool. And it's worth it not to wait until graduation.

Manhattan not lacking in attractions, boredom a lousy excuse

Of all the dumb claims I've ever heard, saying that there's nothing to do in Manhattan is among the worst.

People complain that there's no Starbucks or good mini-golf course or other things that would make Manhattan as good as other places.

Some people get the idea in their heads that there's a vast clip-the-wings conspiracy keeping all these fun things at bay, and that the government must act immediately to bring whatever is wanted to us this instant.

Or that the beer companies are pulling strings so that people have nothing to do but drink.

We need to learn to be grateful for what we have.

I grew up within 40 miles of Manhattan in a lovely, little place that will always hold a special place in my heart.

A common complaint among parents and students alike was that there was nothing to do in the little town with fewer than 3,000 people.

Kids whined because they were bored and parents whined because they had to put up with their children's whining about being bored.

When kids got their driver's licenses, they drove to other towns that had stuff to do each weekend. Places like, oh, I don't know, Manhattan.

Heck, I drove up here all the time, too. Now, I'm living here, and I'm completely surrounded by entertainment, but all I hear about is how people are "so bored." The irony could stun an electric eel.

The facts are clear — people who think this town is boring are just looking for an excuse to drink. Few things make as good a reason to drink as having nothing else to do.

Let's be honest, you guys really just want to sit around and drink. Admit it.

As for all the businesses people want to have in Manhattan, that's just an issue of capitalism. Starbucks and other businesses won't come here unless there's a profit to be made.

"If you build it, they will come" is the mentality many have taken back in my hometown, and they have tried building things to make the town better. A community wellness center is under construction, and a skate park was put in not too long ago for the kids to enjoy.

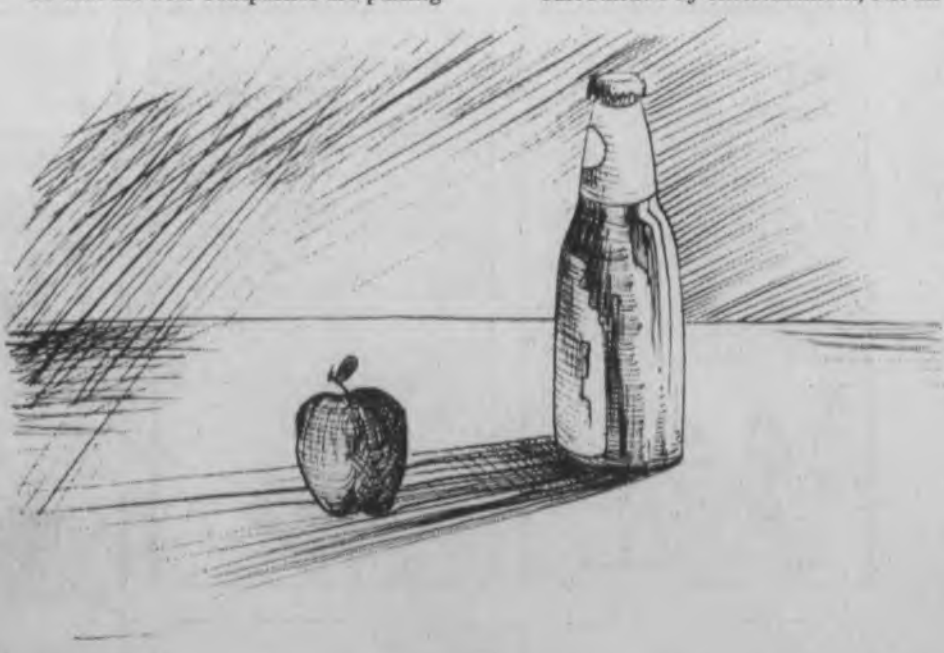

Except, I have yet to see a single soul utilizing the skate park during any of my visits home. A friend of mine saw a few kids on it, but they were just sitting around, drinking.

What I'm trying to say is that people who want some service or good brought here by force are just complaining for the sake of complaining. And although some students find this town boring, do they need more stuff to neglect while they drink themselves silly?

Manhattan has five entertainment theaters, pool halls, bowling, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Wildcat Creek, golf courses, the natatorium, half a dozen art galleries and endless parks and trails. There is no excuse for not taking advantage of these and many more activities sponsored by the university.

And if you're still sure you can't find something to do, maybe try picking a fight at a frat. That way at least I won't have to listen to your whining.

PERSPECTIVES

Smog harms children

MINNESOTA DAILY
U. MINNESOTA

MINNEAPOLIS — Researchers at the University of Southern California published a study last week detailing the heavy toll dirty air takes on the still-developing lungs of children.

The findings suggest that the smog settled over the nation's largest cities will leave many urban kids with significantly diminished lung capacity throughout adulthood.

Those results are a sober reminder that an economy built around free-flowing oil, big cars and lax environmental enforcement is compromising public health.

The upcoming election is a welcome opportunity to tilt the country toward conservation policies and the development of alternative energy sources.

The links between air pollution and respiratory ailments such as asthma have long been established.

Now researchers have determined that children in heavily polluted areas are at risk of entering adulthood with lung capacities lower than 80 percent.

That leaves them highly susceptible to colds, flu, pneumonia and even heart disease later in life.

The study blames nitrogen dioxides and fine particulate matter from coal-burning power plants and gas-guzzling cars for retarding lung development.

Nitrogen dioxides also help to form ground-level ozone, today's biggest source of smog. Cleaning up this mess should be a no-brainer.

Air pollution limits are among the most cost-effective regulations policymakers can find, with small investments made today reaping a windfall of savings tomorrow.

That's not likely to happen when serious environmental concerns are treated like political irritations to be finessed with empty promises.

The "Clear Skies" initiative unveiled by President George W. Bush in his 2003 State of the Union address actually loosens limits on nitrogen dioxides, sulfur dioxide and other dangerous toxins.

The administration also has gutted regulations aimed at forcing the dirtiest power plants to install new pollution-control technology.

Those moves leave no doubts about the Bush administration's priorities: cheaper oil, fewer regulations and economic growth at all costs.

The price tag for the Bush brand of environmentalism will be around for some time to come.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Marching band should build positive image

Editor,

The K-State football players and their staff personify class and pride, even after a tough loss like the one we faced this past weekend, although there is one aspect of the program that is out of touch with what is going on and doesn't represent the K-State for which I am proud.

For the past three years, I have departed from the pre-game festivities early so I can sit in the row directly behind the band.

The K-State marching band this past weekend, at the very least, embarrassed themselves, if not the entire university.

There is a time and place to provoke the opposing team and to have fun antagonizing the visiting sideline; when you are down by 24 points in a painful non-conference home loss is not the most adequate of times.

Or after we scored our final touchdown to make it 21-45, when many of the humorous bandies started yelling at the Bulldogs to check out the score board, they were so excited they got to play the Wabash that they forgot to look and see who was winning.

Columnist should back claims with facts

Editor,

In reference to Jonas Hogg's "Ban the ban, not the gun," I would just like to say that I think it is great that you have opinionated columnists on your staff.

However, I do not think it is great that these opinion columnists offer no evidence to support their opinions. Insulting other journalists and those who don't care for guns is great, but what does all of it mean?

Could it mean that those who care for guns are unknowledgeable and quick to insult those who don't agree with them? I highly doubt it.

And why such an angry reaction to the government's attempt to protect their citizens? It's good that we can at least see them trying, isn't it?

If the ban did not reduce the crime rate, even more specifically crimes involving assault weapons, why don't you go ahead and show us these numbers so we don't just have to take your word for it? A single statistic from 1990 will simply not suffice.

And if I may say so, I truly think that it is people who can be bad, and guns only worsen the problem, not the other way around.

Hogg also claims that such laws only raise crime rates.

Where is the evidence to support such a notion?

And finally, don't insult James Brady.

Put yourself in his shoes and then think about whether or not you want someone to have an assault weapon in their arsenal, especially in the state of disrepute the world is in today.

With week 1 in the bag, fantasy football heats up

Week one of the National Football League has come and gone and finally, after weeks of trash talking among the fantasy football owners at the Collegian, we figured out who had the teams to beat and the teams that will be beat.

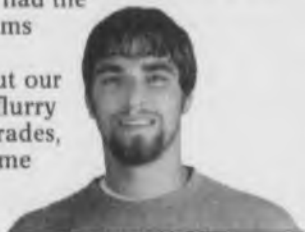

Since I last wrote about our league, there has been a flurry of action in the form of trades, acquisitions and team name changes.

Two teams in particular, "Go Hawkeyes" and "Anderson," were especially busy before the season got underway. Both teams got rid of their entire defenses and started from scratch, only to lose in the first week.

Maybe the overhaul wasn't such a good idea.

As far as trades go, our fearless sports editor may have made the bonehead move of the year.

Before the season started "The Wittiest man in Manhattan" traded away New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady and Cincinnati Bengals running back Rudi Johnson for Detroit Lions quarterback Joey Harrington and Buffalo Bills running back Travis Henry.

MATTHEW GIRARD

Let's look at the first week numbers and see how that turned out for him.

"The Wittiest" traded away Brady's 50.65 points for Harrington's 22.04 points.

The numbers don't lie, and I can't wait to see what Brady does to his former owner in week eight.

Luckily our sports editor squeaked out a win by two points.

Ok, so there has only been one name change in our league, but I found it humorous.

At one point, one of the larger Kansas City Chiefs' fans in the league - who has an obsession with Scott Fujita - named his team the "Scott Fujita All-Stars" and had Fujita on his team. Unfortunately, by the time week one rolled around, our "large chief" needed a running back and had to release Fujita.

Distraught from having to let go his favorite obsession, our "large chief" renamed his team "99 Problems" in honor of Brooklyn's finest, Jay-Z.

The big winner of week one was the lone woman of the league, who had Minnesota Vikings quarterback Daunte Culpepper. Culpepper threw five touchdowns, helping her to an 86-point victory. She now sits at the top of the league by 12 points.

I, "The Commish," had a great opening weekend, with Philadelphia Eagles quarterback Donovan McNabb throwing four touchdowns for my team and leading me to a two-point win over "Summer's Eve."

My only disappointment was Indianapolis Colts tight end Marcus Pollard. He scored a whopping zero fantasy points, so I had to make some changes and brought in Eagles tight-ends L.J. Smith and Chad Lewis.

That brings my total of Eagles receivers to three. I know eventually teams will shut down Terrell Owens, so McNabb will have to throw to my guys.

I'm a genius.

So, to all the winners of week one, I'm coming after you. To the losers, I hope I don't leave any foot prints on you as I ascend to the top.

WCBB | Ohlde in running for NCAA Woman of the Year

Though her days as a dominating center for the Wildcats are behind her, Nicole Ohlde's impression on college athletics still is being felt.

The NCAA has announced Ohlde as the NCAA's Woman of the Year for the state of Kansas.

Ohlde

Ohlde is one of 52 athletes representing the 50 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico who are eligible for the national NCAA Woman of the Year award.

Today, the field of 52 will be narrowed to 10 finalists.

The award honors female student-athletes who have completed their athletic eligibility and have shown leadership in athletics, the classroom and in the community.

A two-time first team All-American and two-time Big 12 Conference Player of the Year with K-State, Ohlde now starts for the WNBA's Minnesota Lynx in her first professional season.

Ohlde currently ranks third among rookies in scoring and rebounding.

MLB | Teams debate responsibility for incident

The Oakland Athletics and Texas Rangers disagreed over who's to blame for an altercation in the stands that led to the arrest of Rangers reliever Frank Francisco after he threw a chair that hit a woman and broke her nose.

David Rinetti, A's vice president of stadium operations, said Tuesday a review of the ninth-inning fracas the night before showed the fans' behavior wasn't over the line according to baseball's rules of conduct that are posted at every ballpark entrance.

Yet Rangers manager Buck Showalter was quick to point to previous problems the Rangers have had in the Oakland Coliseum. He claimed the Rangers had asked for more security in the area, but Rinetti said neither he nor his security staff had been approached with such a request.

Still, the A's beefed up security for Tuesday night's game and the remainder of the series, and probably for the rest of the season.

Showalter said before the game he was satisfied with the extra security presence and didn't want to rehash the incident. He apologized for the organization.

Francisco was apparently back at the team's hotel in San Francisco and wasn't expected at the ballpark Tuesday, though his name still appeared on the lineup card.

Francisco was arrested Tuesday morning on a charge of aggravated battery after he threw a chair into the right-field box seats and hit two spectators in the head during the 7-6, 10-inning loss.

The injured woman, identified by her lawyer Tuesday as Jennifer Bueno, 41, of Livermore, wants Francisco to be prosecuted. A civil suit is also a likely possibility, since she'll need medical treatment, lawyer Gary Gwilliam said.

CFB | Incognito parts ways with Nebraska

Richie Incognito's career at Nebraska is over.

The offensive lineman, who was suspended from the football team Sept. 1, is no longer a student at the university after withdrawing from his classes Tuesday, the registrar's office said.

In a short interview with The Associated Press, Incognito was vague about his plans.

"Right now nothing is for sure," Incognito said. "I don't want to put anything in jeopardy by saying something. I'll say something about this eventually." Incognito told Lincoln television station KLNK that he planned to transfer.

After practice Tuesday Callahan said he had released Incognito from his scholarship and that he is now free to pursue a transfer to another university.

Incognito would be ineligible to play at a Division I-A program until next season.

Incognito, a 6-foot-3, 300-pound junior from Glendale, Ariz., was a first-team All-Big 12 selection last year by the AP.

Incognito was suspended indefinitely for what Callahan called repeated violations of team rules.

Cats start Big 12 play tonight in Colorado

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State begins its defense of the Big 12 title at 8 tonight against Colorado in Boulder, Colo.

The match will be the No. 16 Cats' first conference test this season after K-State went 5-3 during its non-conference schedule. All the Wildcats' losses came versus top-15 teams, including a very close five-game loss against No. 1 Minnesota last Friday.

Senior setter Gabby Guerre said the team's early-season improvement will form the foundation for the rest of the year.

"We've been able to string a lot more success together and cut down on our errors," she said.

K-State heads into the game with the past two Big 12 Players of the Week in senior outside hitter Valeria Hejjas and freshman libero Angie Lastra - the first libero to receive the honor.

Lastra received the recognition for her play in last week's Diet Coke Invitational, where she averaged 5.69 digs per game for three matches and set a new five-match game school record with 36 digs against Minnesota.

The Cats face a Colorado team (5-2) returning five starters from last year's squad and come into the match after winning the Colorado Invitational.

Guerre said playing on the road in Colorado always is a challenge.

"I'm always really tired when I play out in Boulder, because the air is so thin," she said.

Coach Suzie Fritz said beginning conference play will help the team get into a solid weekly rhythm.

"We are ready for a more consistent playing schedule with the Wednesday-Saturday routine," she said.

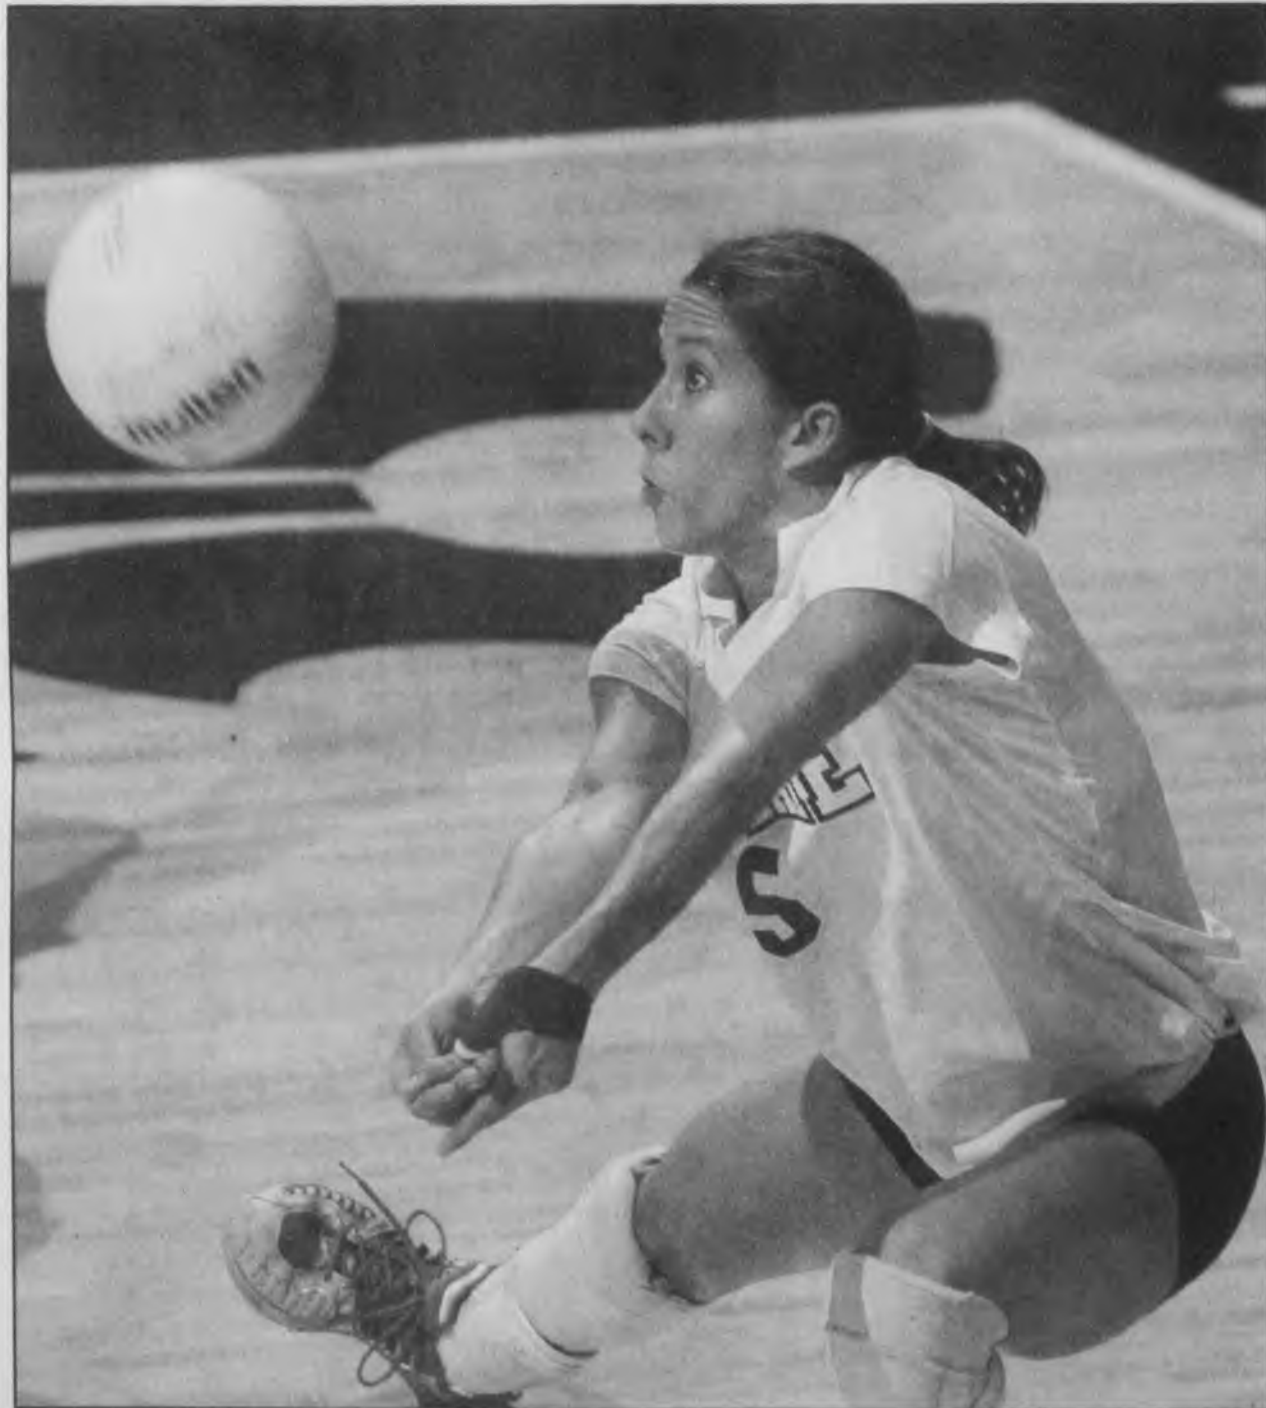

If there is an area K-State still needs to improve in, it is starting games strong, Guerre said.

"I think we need to work on keeping our intensity level the same for the whole match," she said. "We start out kind of slow and we finish great with in each game of the match, but we start sluggish and we need to start a little higher."

The Cats must correct that and other weakness now with conference play under way, Guerre said.

"I think the difficulty of (the conference) is that you can't ever relax," she said. "Everybody's good in this conference."

"You can't afford to have a bad day."

Snyder makes changes to depth chart

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After his team's worst non-conference defeat since the 1991 season, Coach Bill Snyder has made several depth chart changes, as K-State looks to bounce back this weekend against Louisiana-Lafayette.

The Wildcats (1-1) will finish their non-conference season Saturday before heading into the Big 12 Conference schedule Oct. 2 at Texas A&M. The 45-21 loss to the Fresno State Bulldogs knocked the Wildcats out of the Associated Press Top 25 Poll for the first time since November 2003.

The Ragin' Cajuns (1-1) also came off of a loss heading into Saturday's game, after a 24-20 defeat at the hands of Louisiana Tech.

The game will mark the second time the two schools have met, with K-State winning the first meeting 34-6 in 1994 in Manhattan.

Kickoff is scheduled for 1:10 p.m. at KSU Stadium.

MEIER TO START AS QUARTERBACK

Despite injuries and limited playing time against Fresno State, sophomore quarter Dylan Meier is expected to start on Saturday.

"Dylan will practice with us, and we'll see how it goes and what the progress is there, and if he practices fine and doesn't have any setbacks, I would imagine he will be the starter Saturday," Snyder said at Tuesday's weekly press conference.

Although Meier did not see much action against Fresno State, he did manage to throw for 91 yards and a touchdown before being injured his throwing hand.

"I just haven't had the ball really bounce in my way," Meier said. "I'm a firm believer in karma, and I thought I had lots of positive karma, but it's just one of those things. I'm just trying to get my body back healthy."

LINEBACKERS HURTING

Junior linebacker Ted Sims will miss his third straight game of the season against Louisiana-Lafayette due to injury.

"It appears that he will not play this weekend," Snyder said.

Consistent with his long-running policy, Snyder has not disclosed specifics of the injury. It is rumored to involve the lower leg or foot.

The Wildcat defense also will be without senior linebacker Maurice Thurmond after he sustained an injury early in the Fresno State game.

The injury to Thurmond will cause more shuffling of the linebackers, with sophomore Brandon Archer and junior Marvin Simmons listed as starters on the latest depth chart alongside junior Matt Butler.

MOVING ON UP

Snyder made more depth chart changes after Monday's practice.

Senior wide receiver Antoine Polite moved into a starting spot ahead of sophomore Yamon Figurs, sophomore strong safety Maurice Mack now will start over senior Marcus Patton, and freshman punter Tim Reyer will get the nod over junior Jesse Martinez.

"Any changes that took place are there for a reason, and the reasons could be varied," Snyder said. "The commonality is someone either performed well or someone didn't perform well enough, and it's time to get someone who has been closing the gap the opportunity to see if they can take over the spot. We wouldn't move a youngster up if he didn't deserve it, and we wouldn't move a youngster down if he didn't deserve it."

Mack said he was excited to be No. 1 on the depth chart, but just wants to help his team. "It feels pretty good, but as of right now I'm just trying to help the team get better, because we have a lot of issues," Mack said.

Women's golf places fourth at season opener

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team wrapped up its season opener Tuesday, finishing in fourth place out of 18 teams at the Ptarmigan/Ram Fall Classic in Fort Collins, Colo.

After three rounds - two on Monday and one Tuesday - the Wildcats completed the tournament with a collective score of 907. Sophomore Helene Robert led the team with a score of 217, tying for fifth place in the individual bracket.

Colorado State University was victorious in its home tournament with an overall score of 876. The University of Colorado and San Jose State tied for second place, both teams shooting 902.

Monday, with K-State in third place behind CSU and SJS, Coach Kristi Knight said the players - especially the younger ones - played two solid rounds of golf.

"The girls didn't get too high or too low. There were no emotional swings," Knight said. "We really need to work on making birdies on the par-fives, though."

On Tuesday, Robert had a solid performance, complete with four birdies.

"Helene made good course management decisions," Knight said in a release. "She was always on fairways and greens. She appreciated par, showing maturity from last season."

The Wildcats will play next at the Jeannine McHaney Invitational Sept. 24 to 26 in Lubbock, Texas.

K-State individual scores:

Tied-5th Helene Robert, 70-75-72-217
Tied-19th Kali Quick, 76-73-77-226
Tied-34th Kary Heffel, 74-74-83-231

Karaoke bars experience swings in participation levels

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyone can be a rock star in Manhattan.

Many local bars have started to feature karaoke in the evenings.

There is a burgeoning scene around Manhattan, and its popularity seems to be growing. Wayne Winfrey, of Mel's Tavern, said.

"It's really been a shot in the arm for Mel's on Tuesdays," Winfrey said. "Some Tuesdays are better than others, but they're all pretty good. It's really very popular."

The number of Manhattan residents and students who attend karaoke nights has slowed a bit at the beginning of the semester, but John Beddall of All Star DJ said he has seen this before and thinks the trend is about to reverse.

"During the summer at Kite's it was one in, one out," Beddall said. "It's slowed a bit at the beginning of the school year, but once the students get settled in they'll start coming out. Overall it's started to pick up."

Dan Meyer, graduate student in political science, said he's an avid karaoke singer. He also said he thinks attendance is growing.

"It's very cyclical," he said. "Right now we're experiencing an upswing."

In addition to Kite's and R.C. McGraw's, Mel's Tavern, Bobby T's and Bowinkle's also offer karaoke nights.

"Quite honestly, on Sunday nights, Kite's has the rowdiest crowd to perform for," he said. "But Thursday night at R.C. McGraw's is my personal favorite because of the quality of acoustics, and also because you're on an actual stage."

Meyer said he always has loved music, but said his interest in karaoke has grown along with advances in technology.

"I did a lot of music in high school, but the karaoke equipment back then was pretty poor, and all the music had that eighties synthesized sound to it, like it was done on a MIDI keyboard recorder," he said. "Now you feel like you're actually singing with a band, because the tracks are recorded with live musicians, and the quality is so much better."

There are numerous reasons why people attend karaoke nights as well. Kyle Perez, senior in animal science, said he likes singing and thinks it helps with dating, also.

"My favorite song is 'Amarillo by Morning' by George Strait," Perez said. "It helps with the girls, 'cause I kinda look like him, also."

Beddall said he thinks most people just like to let go and have a great time.

"Most of the people that come here just like to go wild and have a night of total release," Beddall said. "They can come out here and be rock stars for a few minutes."

Breaking Fall tour comes to Little Apple tonight

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time in a while, a rock concert tour is coming to Manhattan.

The Breaking Fall tour, which features four bands, will be stopping tonight at PJ's Restaurant and Pub.

The Breaking Fall tour includes the bands: The Dog and Everything Ludo, Anything but Joey and Upside.

"Last time we played in Manhattan was this past summer and the crowd was amazing. We can't wait to see what it's like with school in session," Ludo vocalist Tim Convy said.

Ryan Ashby, venue promoter for PJ's, said he has worked with all of the bands on the bill and was able to bring the tour to Manhattan.

"These are really professional, hard-working bands that have all been involved with the same touring circuit. They had played together before and really wanted to tour the country," Ashby said.

Augie Schmidt, bassist/vocalist for The Dog and Everything, said the bands had met before and decided to tour together.

"We all ran into each other on the touring circuit and really liked each other," Schmidt said. "We all share a similar philosophy about music and building up on your own. We decided to work together and put together a 28 city tour. It was a big group effort, and by combining our powers we made a super tour."

Everything is an edgy pop rock band from Chicago that just released a new album, "Sound Off" in July.

"We had been planning the tour for about six months," Schmidt said. "It worked out perfectly with our album being released for national distribution and the tour at about the same time. We usually do well in the states that border Illinois and by working with bands from other parts of the nation, we will all help each other get exposure."

Convy said Ludo, a rock band that writes pop songs, is working on material for a new record.

Ashby said people can expect a really energetic rock show on Wednesday.

"These bands are really talented artists who are about to be big, and this may be the last chance that people will have to see them like this," Ashby said.

Convy said fans can expect a very energetic and spontaneous show from Ludo.

"We love playing for college students," Schmidt said. "If they are fans of music they will find at least one aspect of our music to appreciate and connect with. We have great fan response from college age kids. They tend to be honest and finicky. They are really listening, and there is something there deeper that they tend to connect with."

Ashby said this is a good opportunity for the Manhattan music scene.

"This is a great opportunity for students to get involved because they should support and expand upon the local music scene," Ashby said. "If they are willing to go to shows like this, then better things will come in the future."

Phil Spector wins delay in murder case

Music producer Phil Spector and his new lawyer said Tuesday they need more time to prepare for his murder case and won a delay in scheduling the preliminary hearing.

Superior Court Judge Carlos Uranga, after meeting with lawyers, said the date will be set Dec. 16.

Spector is charged with the shooting of actress Lana Clarkson in his home on Feb. 3, 2003.

Los Angeles County district attorney's spokeswoman Sandi Gibbons said prosecutors did not oppose the delay and the trend for delays in high-profile cases is to be expected.

"The district attorney is used to having cases like this move like a herd of turtles," Gibbons said.

New York attorney Bruce Cutler, who recently took over Spector's defense, told reporters he hoped to restore his client's name to what it was before February 2003.

'Apprentice' toy will be produced by Mattel

Reality TV might be real after all. The toy designed by the winning team on last week's premiere of NBC's "The Apprentice 2" will be produced by Mattel. On the show, two gender-divided teams competed to create a toy that tested well for 6-year-old boys.

The women's team came up with the idea of a remote-controlled car with interchangeable parts that can be crashed and easily put back together. A prototype was designed overnight by Mattel and met with approval from young boys who tested the car.

Sara Rosales of Mattel told the Associated Press Tuesday the toy company hadn't planned to produce a toy from Donald Trump's reality show. "We had no expectations. We were planning on simply showcasing our brand."

Named Morph Machines, the toy (tweaked slightly to have a sleeker style) will hit shelves in early 2005 with a retail price of $30, Mattel said.

Music professor awarded for his compositions

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Music professor Craig Weston doesn't just teach students.

Weston recently received an award from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for his musical compositions. The awards are presented to composers who write compositions of a "unique prestige value."

Weston said the music he writes "tends to defy categorization."

"You could go to downtown performances in bigger cities to hear pieces like I write - very contemporary," he said. "There is also a very different crowd - not the people who would go to the symphony."

Weston started composing music about 20 years ago when he became interested in it during high school.

Upcoming performances of Craig Weston's compositions

Oct. 19 "The River Brigid and Forgot" performed by the KSU Symphony Orchestra 7:30 McCain Auditorium

Nov. 30 "Still On the Antipodes" bass clarinet and percussion ensemble 7:30 McCain Auditorium

To hear sound files of Craig Weston's music go to <http://www.personal.ksu.edu/nweston>.

"When I was a teenager, my main interest in music was jazz," he said.

What he liked most about jazz was the ability to improvise, which made him interested in composing, he said. "Since then my connection to jazz is indirect and complicated. My music doesn't sound like jazz."

Jackie Fassler-Kerstetter, professor of horn and music history, said Weston is also an excellent teacher.

"Back when he gave his interview-lecture to a music theory class, most of us faculty were blown away at the quality of his lecture," she said. "It inspired us to go out and be better teachers."

Fassler-Kerstetter said the award that Weston received reflects highly on him and the entire music department.

"One could compare Craig's receiving this award to having an article published in a refereed journal," she said.

Paul Hunt, head of the Department of Music, said the award itself is very prestigious.

"The thing about composers is they never know for sure when exactly things will come to them," he said. "I know there will be other opportunities to come towards him."

Speaker advocates nonviolence

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Citizens in oppressed nations should practice nonviolent actions as a means to achieving liberation, a peace activist said during Tuesday night's Lou Douglas lecture in Forum Hall.

Jack DuVall, president and founder of the International Center on Nonviolent Conflict, presented, "Power by the people: Ending the world's nightmare of oppression and violence."

He was the first Lou Douglas speaker for the 25th year for the series.

DuVall, producer and co-author of "A Force More Powerful," said the best way for terrorism to fail is to stop the demand for it.

"To expedite that failure, the vulnerabilities of terrorists should be discovered and targeted, and what is most vulnerable is their ideas," he said.

"We can continue to rely mainly on a military strategy to reduce the supply of terrorists, and try to liquidate the market that way, hoping our tactics don't backfire."

Or we can work to shrink the demand."

DuVall often quoted Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln categorized slavery as a tyrannical principle where a person or group used a group of people for personal benefit, DuVall said.

"Today three-quarters of the world's nations are ruled by their people who have given their consent to governments they chose," he said. "But the civil war of ideas that Lincoln framed is not over, and the tyrannical principle now threatens life and liberty once more."

"Since the time of Lincoln, there is not a single case in which a violent movement has collapsed an authoritarian regime and replaced it with a government based on the consent of the people," DuVall said.

"This is how oppression will vanish, and with it, the hallucination of violence as a path to power."

Bill Dorsett, Manhattan resident, said he believed DuVall made some good points.

"I think I might go buy the book," he said. "I think the nonviolent struggles and the support of it is very crucial."

Ivan forces mass evacuations

By Doug Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS - More than 1.2 million people in metropolitan New Orleans were warned to get out Tuesday as 140-mph Hurricane Ivan churned toward the Gulf Coast, threatening to submerge this below-sea-level city in what could be the most disastrous storm to hit in nearly 40 years.

Residents streamed inland in bumper-to-bumper traffic in an agonizingly slow exodus amid dire warnings that Ivan could overwhelm New Orleans with up to 20 feet of filthy, chemical-polluted water. About three-quarters of a million more people along the coast in Florida, Mississippi and Alabama were also told to evacuate.

Forecasters said Ivan, a killer blamed for at least 68 deaths in the Caribbean, could reach 160 mph and strengthen to Category 5, the highest level, by the time it blows ashore as early as Thursday somewhere along the Gulf Coast.

"Hopefully the house will still be here when we get back," said Tara Chandra, a doctor at Tulane University in New Orleans who packed up his car, moved plants indoors and tried to book a Houston hotel room. Chandra said he wanted to ride out the storm, but his wife wanted to evacuate. "All the news reports are kind of freaking her out."

At nearly 200 miles wide, Ivan could cause significant damage no matter where it strikes.

Officials ordered or strongly urged an estimated 1.9 million people to flee in a 330-mile danger zone stretching across four states, from Morgan City and New Orleans in Louisiana to St. Marks in the Florida Panhandle.

"I beg people on the coast: Do not ride this storm out," Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour said, urging people in other parts of the state to open their homes to relatives, friends and co-workers.

As of 5 p.m., Ivan was about 370 miles southeast of the mouth of the Mississippi River, moving northwest at about 9 mph.

New Orleans, the nation's largest city below sea level, is particularly vulnerable to flooding, and Mayor Ray Nagin was among the first to urge residents to get out while they can. The city's Louis Armstrong Airport was ordered closed Tuesday night.

Up to 10 feet below sea level in spots, New Orleans sits between the nearly half-mile-wide Mississippi River and Rhode Island-size Lake Pontchartrain, relying on a system of levees, canals and huge pumps to keep dry.

The city has not taken a major direct hit since Betsy in 1965, when an 8- to 10-foot storm surge submerged parts of the city in 7 feet of water. Betsy was blamed for 74 deaths in Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida.

Experts said Ivan could be worse, sending water pouring over the levees, flooding to the rooftops and turning streets into a toxic brew of raw sewage, gas and chemicals from nearby refineries.

The mayor said that he would "aggressively recommend" people evacuate, but that it would be difficult to order them to do so, because at least 100,000 in the city rely on public transportation and would have no way to leave. In addition, he said 10,000 people were in town for conventions, and there was nowhere for many of them to go except high floors in their hotels.

By midday Tuesday, traffic on Interstate 10, the major hurricane route out of New Orleans, was at a near standstill, and state police turned the interstate west of the city into a one-way route out. U.S. Highway 59, the old major route between New Orleans and Baton Rouge, also was jammed.

In the French Quarter, businesses put up plywood and closed their shutters. A few people were still hanging out at Cafe du Monde, a favorite spot for French roast coffee and beignets, and a man playing a trombone outside had a box full of tips.

"They said get out, but I can't change my flight, so I figure I might as well enjoy myself," said George Senton, of Newark, N.J., who listened to the music. "At least I'll have had some good coffee and some good music before it gets me."

Tourist Dee Barkhart, a court reporter from Baltimore, was drinking Hurricane punches at Pat O'Brien's bar.

"I looked into earlier flights, but they were hundreds of dollars more and I wasn't sure I could switch flights," she said. "I figure I'm happier sitting here drinking hurricanes than sitting at the airport worrying about them."

But Barkhart's drinks would have to be for the road. The bar planned to close by nightfall.

Elsewhere along the Gulf Coast, thousands of residents, gamblers and tourists crowded northbound roads. Motels were booked as far north as Jackson, Miss., and Montgomery, Ala.

Mississippi regulators ordered a dozen casinos along the state's 75-mile-long coast to close at noon Tuesday, but many gamblers pumped coins into the slot machines right up to closing.

"I don't worry about what's going to happen tomorrow. We can't control it anyway," said Ed Bak of Fairfield, Ohio, who dropped quarters into a machine at the President Casino.

In Alabama, Gov. Bob Riley ordered the evacuation of coastal resorts. "This is a serious storm that requires serious action to get people out of harm's way," he said.

Along Florida's Panhandle, the sounds of saws and drills filled the air as people put up boards to protect their homes and businesses.

"We are just hoping to still be here," said Matt Claxton, an assistant manager of a Perdido Key seafood restaurant as workers brought the patio furniture inside.

CAT ANSWERS | Librarians assist in cyber-search

instructions for downloading are on the page."

"The first time users access the service, it will ask for their name and e-mail address, Stockham said.

After the plug-in is installed, an icon will appear at the top of the browser screen. Clicking "Connect" will start the CAT Answers session.

The operator will get a ring, and a sign will appear saying, "A Librarian Will Be Right With You." The text chat session that follows is very similar to an instant messaging program.

Baillargeon said there are several advantages to using this program.

"Users can access help from a real person from anywhere," she said. "It's flexible, and the hours are so convenient."

Baillargeon also said an interesting and helpful feature of the service is the ability of the librarian to actually participate with the user in a search.

"If a user is in the middle of an online search and is having trouble finding something, the operator can actually take over and direct the search from the user's screen," she said.

The only real disadvantage of the service is that a librarian isn't actually physically present, Baillargeon said.

"Some people like to see an actual person there to answer their questions," she said. "And some of the more in-depth questions are easier to answer in person. But the advantages of this service far outweigh the disadvantages."

Turtle said that CAT Answers is part of a collaborative effort between K-State and KU, and sometimes K-State or KU operators could be working.

According to Stockham, this makes the program more versatile.

"It allows us to offer more coverage because we wouldn't be able to do a program like this by ourselves," she said.

Turtle agreed, and said that — due to the number of distance students on both campuses — CAT Answers is an inclusive service.

"We thought it would be a very good service for distance students," she said. "These students have full access to library services, but aren't always able or don't know how to use it."

Even though the program offers a lot of benefits to students and faculty alike, it's hard to tell if it will be a success, Baillargeon said.

"The problem is that people don't know about it," she said. "It certainly has the potential to be a success, but as it is, we've yet to see its potential. We really want to get the word out and let people know about this service."

Students and faculty are encouraged to take full advantage of the CAT Answers service, Stockham said.

The library will be assessing the program's success at the end of the semester.

TROOPS | Media, family support system share info

Skidmore said.

Skidmore said the media is used widely to distribute information about redeployment ceremonies, but the family support system on base is used to contact families.

"I can get six phone calls in one night about the same thing, but I don't care — it's great to have them back," Skidmore said.

First Brigade Commander Buck Conner addressed the group in the hangar before families were reunited. He said the men and women who returned with him served their country despite hardships.

"They fought everyday to bring Iraqis hope where hope hadn't been for 35 years," Conner said.

"Each member of the brigade paid for their citizenship every day they were in Iraq."

Conner said the first thing he would do was to take a shower, but looked forward to sleeping in a bed, having dinner with his family and taking a trip to San Francisco, Calif., with his wife, Janice.

"I am looking forward to using a porcelain bathroom," said Connor. "It will be used luxuriously throughout the next few days."

IRAQ | Militant group claims responsibility for blast

The Tawhid and Jihad group, headed by Jordanian militant Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, posted a Web statement claiming responsibility for Tuesday's car bombing. The al-Qaeda-linked group launched a surprise assault in Baghdad on Sunday, killing dozens, and boasted it had the upper hand in the fight against the Americans.

Tuesday evening, another loud explosion rocked Baghdad near the Green Zone, where Iraq's interim government and the U.S. embassy are located.

There was no immediate word on the cause.

The morning car bombing was the deadliest single attack in Baghdad in six months, wrecking buildings and cars on central Haifa Street, leaving charred bodies and hurling body parts, shoes and debris into nearby trees and homes.

Army ROTC unites cadets with squadron during training

By Kristi Hurla
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Army ROTC members did more than jog during their drill Tuesday afternoon behind the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Squads pulled a Humvee with a rope, crossed on a rope bridge and pitched tents — all timed events.

The events, which also included a care package, range and re-supply ammunition drills, aimed to unite cadets of the ROTC program with the rest of their squadron, said Nick Painton, ROTC captain and senior in economics.

"The whole point of the drill is to identify with the rest of the team and gain confidence while working with the group," Painton said.

At the fire station on Denison Avenue, members rappelled down the tower, and across the street they practiced a grenade throwing drill.

The rappelling tower is the best example of gaining confidence working with the team, Painton said.

"The whole squad is affected if someone is unable to do their part," Painton said.

Angela Rokey, cadet sergeant and junior in electronic journalism, said she had not rappelled down a building before, but had done so on trees.

Rokey said the rappelling drill was easier than she had expected, but saw it as a good team-building activity.

"There wasn't as much slack in the rope as I had hoped for, but these guys are good at instructing and giving support," Rokey said.

Painton said the rappelling drill is good for not only team-building, but to prepare students for the camp between their junior and senior years.

"They have to know how to do this at camp," Painton said.

Noah Pruett, cadet second lieutenant and senior in finance, said the Humvee activity was the most physically challenging of the day.

"We did have the fastest time recorded today, though we chose a method and stuck to it, and it seemed to work," Pruett said.

K-State forms partnership with University of Baghdad

By Lauren Wolf
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's College of Agriculture recently joined in an effort to help rebuild Iraq.

President Jon Wefald and Fred Cholic, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of K-State Research and Extension, recently signed a five-year agreement to share and communicate information with the University of Baghdad's agriculture college.

University of Baghdad officials had visited K-State and met with representatives from the colleges of agriculture and veterinary medicine.

"We were contacted in early June by Major Kathi McDiffett, who is a 1986 K-State College of Agriculture graduate, and she asked if we would consider a two to three week visit later in the summer," Steven Graham, assistant to the dean, said.

American troops noticed the university's lack of adequate classrooms, computer labs and dormitories, and they offered to help the university in any way that they could, Graham said.

"They were in a 20-year gap for technology and information, and they requested assistance with rebuilding their potential. It is also helpful to us, because wheat and other cereals were originally produced in Iraq, so they can help us with research on ancestors of the grains that we produce," Graham said.

The initial contract will serve as an umbrella agreement that provides updated information to the university and help them with research technology. The two universities hope to have K-State faculty travel to Baghdad to teach students.

"We are building toward collaborative research between the two universities, but our main focus right now is to strengthen their research capacity and interact with them through more visits by their faculty," Provost Duane Nellis said.

University jet co-piloted by K-State Salina students

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With new opportunities taking flight, K-State-Salina remains an integral part of K-State academics.

With a fleet of 39 airplanes and five more on the way, the College of Technology and Aviation offers experience found at few other institutions, Dean Dennis Kulman said.

The five new planes, which will arrive in April, have glass cockpits, he said. The glass cockpits have more information displayed on digital screen with few dials, whereas older planes have many.

"It's the cutting-edge technology," Kulman said. "This gives our students the step ahead of the other institutions."

The new planes are Skyhawks model 172S, which is an updated version of the 15 172R models K-State has, he said.

"The big thing is technology is moving at a rapid pace. Aviation is like the rest of the world in the changing technology," Kulman said. "Most of the large corporations are using what we call glass cockpits, instead of having the traditional dials."

Most students in the program are training to go into corporation piloting, he said.

The new planes are not the only corporate-gear flying in which students are trained. Students get the chance to co-pilot the university's jet, Kulman said.

The jet, which is stored at Salina, seats five and can be used for all university function, Charles Reagan, associate to the president, said.

The jet, along with the King Air Turbo, which is also used for university travels, are necessary, he said.

Suspects sought in robbery near Umberger Hall

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Police Department officials are looking for two male suspects from an armed robbery that took place early Wednesday morning.

The investigation is pending, said K-State Police Capt. Troy Lane.

The two suspects were described by the victim as between 18 and 30 years of age.

The first, seen with a gun, was described as a white male, 5 feet 8 inches to 5 feet 10 inches tall, 160 to 180 pounds, clean shaven with short blond hair and last seen wearing a blue T-shirt and jeans.

The second is described as a white male, 5 feet 8 inches to 5 feet 10 inches tall, about 200 pounds and last seen wearing a tie-dye T-shirt, a brown and tan hat and jeans.

Campus police received and responded to the call at 12:45 a.m. The victim described the robbery as happening while he was walking to his car, parked in the lot north of Umberger Hall.

Lane said there is no video surveillance footage of the robbery.

The victim reported that one suspect was sitting inside the car, and the other confronted him and threatened him with a gun, asking for his wallet.

The suspects left on foot toward Dole Hall, the victim told police.

Lane said he urges students to use the escort services offered by K-State Police.

"We will ask the officers to keep an extra eye on the parking lot but still plan to keep the campus safe," Lane said.

Two Fort Riley soldiers charged with murder

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Two soldiers were charged with first-degree murder Wednesday for the shooting death of a fellow Fort Riley soldier who recently has returned from his second tour of duty in Iraq.

Officials in Clay County charged Sgts. Aaron Stanley, 22, of Bismarck, N.D., and Eric Colvin, 23, of Papillion, Neb., in connection with the Monday night murder of Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif. The shooting took place at a home west of Clay Center, about 30 miles from Fort Riley.

Werner had returned to Fort Riley about a month ago for surgery on a hand that was injured during a game of football in Iraq. He was married and had won the Army Achievement Medal for his service.

A hearing was set for Nov. 3 for Stanley and Colvin in Clay Center. In addition, the two were charged with attempted first-degree murder for the shooting of Spec. Christopher Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo., who is in critical condition in a Wichita hospital.

Stanley also faces eight unrelated drug charges filed June 15 in Pottawatomie County. A court date is scheduled Oct. 7.

Local government enjoys increase in sales tax revenues

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local governing agencies have found themselves basking in an unexpected increase of sales tax revenue, even though tax rates haven't been altered.

Bernie Hayen, finance director for the City of Manhattan, said the city has seen an increase of nearly 10 percent as compared to the same time last year.

"We are becoming more of a regional shopping center," Hayen said.

He said with the arrival of new businesses like Home Depot and Target, as well as the new Wal-Mart Supercenter, more people are coming to Manhattan to shop.

Lyle Butler, president and CEO of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the boost comes not only from the increased attraction of regional shoppers, but also from local shoppers deciding not to travel to larger markets such as Topeka or Kansas City.

"Local residents who used to drive to specifically Topeka to do some of their shopping are staying home and shopping here locally," Butler said. "That also benefits existing businesses that have been here a long time."

Butler said when people travel to other communities, they tend to visit more than one establishment.

David Darling, community development economist for K-State Research and Extension, said the rise is a local anomaly and not indicative of a statewide trend.

"Collections on the state wide level are pretty much flat," Darling said. "Actually, that is better than the last two years or three years."

He said it is important to consider what is stimulating the change.

"What's stimulating change is the creation of new retail environments, and if sales tax is responding, then one has to connect the two," Darling said. "If it's built in Manhattan, they will come."

Darling said he did not believe such a level of growth would be sustainable.

"What normally happens is you have a stimulus response, and then things get back into equilibrium," Darling said. "From a percent increase perspective, things will level out."

Hayen said more new businesses are continuing to locate in Manhattan, which could some-

South Carolina swimmer charged with peeping

THE GAMECOCK
U. SOUTH CAROLINA

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Police have charged a former member of University of South Carolina's swimming and diving team with spying on women as they showered in the Strom Thurmond Wellness & Fitness Center and the Blatt P.E. Center.

According to the arrest warrant, an unidentified victim picked Mateusz Marek Kacprzak, a first-year geophysics student from Bacewicz, Poland, out of a photograph line-up last week.

Kacprzak, who was attending USC on a swimming scholarship, then admitted to the crimes.

USC Sports Information Director Kerry Tharp said swimming and diving team coaches dismissed Kacprzak from the team Tuesday after he was arrested at about 2:30 p.m.

Kacprzak could not be reached for comment Tuesday night.

Kacprzak has been charged with peeping, a misdemeanor, and he posted bond at a hearing before a Richland County magistrate Tuesday afternoon.

USC police responded to four reports of a peeping Tom in the women's locker rooms at the Strom and the Blatt during a three-week period in late August and early September, USC spokesman Russ McKinney said.

Congress passes $82 million suicide prevention bill

DAILY MISSISSIPPIAN
U. MISSISSIPPI

OXFORD, Miss. — Congress passed a suicide-prevention bill on Thursday to identify and treat students at a high risk of committing suicide, but it's unclear how or if the University of Mississippi or local schools can use the money from the bill.

The Smith Bill authorized $82 million over three years to be distributed to states, colleges and universities to identify and treat young adults who are at risk of committing suicide.

States will see $60 million, while $22 million will go to colleges and universities.

According to the American Psychiatric Association's Web site, "Suicide is the second leading cause of death among young people ages 15 to 19 years."

While counselors at the UM Counseling Center and high school counselors at Oxford and Lafayette, Miss., high schools are currently unaware of how the bill will affect their current suicide prevention programs, they are aware of the importance of improving prevention programs in all schools.

Though the university has made no plans to use any of the Smith Bill money, Mark Showalter, director of the UM Counseling Center, said the center could always use more funding.

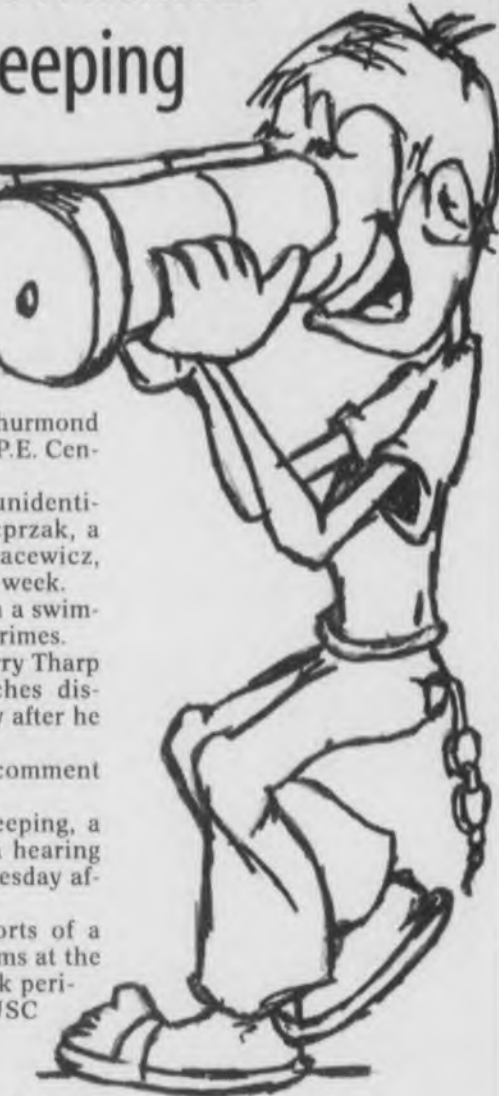

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

"More funding could help provide more counselors or help to pay our people at a higher level," Showalter said. "Also, any kind of increase in funding will allow us to increase our services."

First Lady addresses Pennsylvania women at conference

DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN
U. PENNSYLVANIA

PHILADELPHIA — The women of Pennsylvania were greeted Tuesday by a high-profile guest at the Governor's Conference for Women at the Pennsylvania Convention Center.

First Lady Laura Bush, who was not listed as a guest on many event advertisements, delivered the opening and closing remarks to a crowd of almost 3,000.

The conference, designed to empower and advise women in many aspects of life, was sponsored by Gov. Ed Rendell, who has frequently mentioned his support for the educational and professional strides women have made in the state.

The three conference sessions featured seven differently themed tracks. Panelists came from a wide variety of fields, ranging from the clergy to topflight business.

"I think it serves to heighten the profile of a lot of issues that are of concern to women," Bush said. "Things that women care about are being addressed."

Students may have noticed money missing after receiving their Federal Stafford Loan check.

Larry Moeder, K-State director of financial aid, said this is because of the loan's origination and guarantee fee.

"It's not something that K-State takes out of the check; it's something that the provider of the loans take out," he said. "It's just the Federal Stafford Loan program that has that provision. It is a federal requirement."

According to the 1993 amendment to the Higher Education Act of 1965, loan guarantors are permitted to charge a guarantee fee of up to 1 percent.

Martha Holler, spokeswoman for Sallie Mae, said a guarantor is normally a state agency or a non-profit agency. One of the nation's largest guarantors is USA Funds, she said.

This money is held in reserve by the guarantors to reimburse lenders in case a borrower fails to repay the loan, states www.usafunds.org.

Holler said the 3-percent origination fee is sent to the U.S. Department of Education.

"It helps cover the costs of the program, because they are offering an interest rate to students that is below the market cost," she said.

Stafford loans, including subsidized, non-subsidized and parent loans, are the only federal loan that collects these fees, Holler said.

"There is a consolidation loan that is still a federal guaranteed student loan where students can combine all of their loans in to one after they graduate," she said. "With this loan, students don't have to pay another origination and guarantee fee, so there is no double jeopardy."

The percentage of the origination and guarantee fees is determined by the federal government, Holler said. Whether the percentage changes is up to them, she said.

Sallie Mae, along with other organizations like College Parents of America and the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators, have made some recommendations to Congress about ways they would like the fees collected, Holler said.

"We would like the origination fees reviewed and possibly waived for needier students," she said.

Holler said this would be part of the re-authorization of the Higher Education Act, which is expected to happen in 2005.

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 faces more cuts

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 is facing $1.75 million in budget cuts for the next school year.

"The numbers are far worse than I thought," Nancy Knopp, Board of Education member, said at Wednesday night's board meeting.

The cuts were caused by a decrease in enrollment. The district's enrollment is down 171 students, and the district could possibly be down another 30 from last year's enrollment by Sept. 20, she said.

The board discussed a few options for making the cuts.

"I think a school closure is going to have to be part of the equation," Knopp said.

The board is considering closing four elementary schools in the district, including Ogden, Lee, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson. The district was forced to close two schools, Bluemont and Eugene Field, in 2002.

Another possibility the board discussed is making cuts in academics and activities without closing a school. Board member Dorothy Soldan, K-State assistant professor and director of the Center for Economic Education, disagreed with this plan.

"Do we really want to trade quality programming with less schools for less quality with more schools?" Soldan said.

The board also discussed moving sixth graders out of the elementary schools — where they are now — and into the middle schools, which they have been considering since last spring.

The board asked the administration to present information at their next meeting about the structural and programming of the four elementary schools being considered for closure. The board then will decide whether to close a school and which school to close.

The next meeting is 6:30 p.m. Oct. 6 at the Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave.

TO THE POINT Partnership with Iraqi school benefits K-State

Sometimes the best way to help yourself is through aiding others.

Such is the case with the recent agreement signed between K-State and the University of Baghdad.

As part of the effort, the universities will share data pertaining to their respective agriculture colleges, as well as K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

The technology and information provided to the University of Baghdad will help alleviate what one K-State official referred to as a "20-year gap" for the Iraqi university.

At the same time, the opportunities for K-State faculty to travel abroad, provide guest lectures and attend seminars have the potential to be great experiences for all involved.

Iraq's unique history also may provide K-State researchers in the College of Agriculture some insight into studies with wheat, which originated in Iraq.

This five-year agreement provides a substantial link for K-State to offer its help to an institution in need, and it opens a channel of communication between two societies struggling to achieve peace and prosperity following the end of Saddam Hussein's regime.

Wonderful Wiz

There's no place like hometown's Oz Museum

Looking for something fun to do this weekend? Get in your car and head fourteen miles east down Highway 24.

There you'll find my hometown of Wamego, which is similar to the 80's hit TV show "Cheers" — they're both places where "everybody knows your name," and most people are drunk.

Despite once being known as home to perhaps the largest LSD factory in the world, Wamego obviously has been hard at work these past dozen or so years to turn a quaint little township into a highly reputed city, not to mention the tourism capital of the world.

With local sightseeing delights such as McDonalds and Dollar General, and attractions like the city park duck pond, people are breaking down Wamego's door to get in on this intense, action-packed thrill ride.

And now that Wamego has gained the world famous Wizard of Oz Museum, the fun only continues.

If you decide to head over to Wamego, I recommend stopping at the Oz Museum first, as it is quite an entertaining and popular exhibition.

With its ruby slippers and flying monkeys, The Wizard of Oz Museum has become so popular it's made Wamego the center of the universe. People are coming by the thousands. Well, maybe not thousands, but people definitely are coming.

This massive turnout is due to the fact no human being can resist learning more about Dorothy and her mangy dog, including me.

Yes folks, I actually decided to head over to Wamego, pay my $7 and see the wonderful Wizard of Oz Museum.

However, I should tell everyone that I had been staring at a blank wall in my room for three hours and was on the verge of being comatose, so I was pretty much up for anything.

Anyway, it turns out the Oz Museum has the same effect painter Bob Ross has on me, which is the ability to quickly ease me into a gentle sleep.

The museum consists of Wizard of Oz toys, memorabilia from the film and a handful of life-size mannequins that I'm going to be having nightmares about for the next several months.

All in all though, hardcore Wizard of Oz fans should love this place.

CHANCE YORK

I can't imagine anyone being a hardcore Wizard of Oz fan, but I guess we should all appreciate this magnificent Kansas achievement anyway, even us young college types.

If you're bored out of your mind, the Wizard of Oz Museum is located at 511 Lincoln Ave., and is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from 12 to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Not-so-great debate for Bush, Kerry

Editor's note: The following took place in the columnist's fantasy world and is not based on actual interviews.

Last week I had the opportunity to sit down with both presidential candidates and ask some tough questions. Here's the transcript from our discussion:

GRANT REICHERT

Me: Welcome, President Bush and Senator Kerry. I'm glad both of you could take the time away from your busy schedules to have this chat.

Me: First you, Kerry. Have you stopped beating your wife?

Kerry: Huh, what? Yes... I mean no... I never...

Me: You never stopped? Monster! Have you not a modicum of humanity? May bums spit on you and children come at you with sharpened crayons!

Me: And you, Bush, do you want our economy to have more jobs or less jobs? MORE JOBS, or less jobs. MORE... or less.

Bush: Umm... well, you see, the thing, the thing is... umm...

Me: cough more cough

Bush: More.

Me: God bless you, sir, and all of your progeny.

Me: Next, Kerry, aterroristapeasersayswhat?

Kerry: Pardon moi, monsieur?

Me: Curse you and your insufferable Frenchness! Moving on, in this next activity, you will each get to answer a question from your critics but with only one word. Mr. Bush, president, sir, you are first. Are your critics a bunch of lying bastards with not a single thread of moral fiber running through their corrupt-ed bodies?

Bush: Yes.

Me: Excellent, sir. God bless you and the ground on which you walk.

Me: Kerry, you're next. You are a flip-flopper, and I don't trust you with the leadership of our nation during a time of war. In our next activity, each of you will use the —

Kerry: —Wait... umm, don't I get a word, a word to respond?

Me: By my count, that was 10 words, one of them a disingenuous contraction, another, a lexically ambiguous "umm." Have you no shame, sir?

Bush: Yes.

Me: Uh... I was talking to Kerry, but thank you for that enlightened response. I am indebted to your wisdom.

Me: Okay, next activity. See those three buildings on the hill? The one in the middle is a wretched hive of terrorist scum and villainy. The other two contain our German and French allies. Here Kerry, you first, take the rocket launcher. Remember, your allies are on either side, and this launcher is notoriously inaccurate.

Kerry: Unilaterally fire this arm-based missile launcher? What would the United Nations say if they saw me? I require resolutions! I require coalitions! I cannot fire this tube-shaped projectile gun!

Me: Fair enough. Now, Bush, take the rocket launcher. Now, I want you to picture yourself.

— BOOOOM! —

Me: YAAH! Wow! You, like, totally destroyed the terrorists! It was, just, BOOM! And then, I mean, wow! And how did you know that the rocket launcher pulled hard to the left?

Bush: Pulled to the what now? I'm hungry.

Me: Well, don't worry sir, our time is about up. Do you have any concluding remarks?

Kerry: Vietnam, Vietnam, Vietnam!

Me: — I wasn't talking to you. Mr. President, sir?

Bush: Uhhhh... nope.

Me: Are you sure?

Bush: Oh wait, underestimate, strategy, nuke-yuler.

Me: Brilliant. Thanks sir! Well that's all for this debate. See you guys later. Umm... Bush, that's the closet. Kerry? What are you waiting for, a U.N. resolution? Get the hell outta here.

Kerry: Teresa said I'm not to come home until 5. That's when the pool cleaner leaves. He doesn't do a very good job.

Me: Whatever. I'm leaving, and I counted the number of napkins on the table, so don't even think about it.

PERSPECTIVES

Quality, cost of textbooks questionable under rental plan

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
U. MASSACHUSETTS-AMHERST

AMHERST, Mass. — Every year it seems that the cost of books becomes an increasingly large problem for students who are doing their best to get by.

Finally, this issue is being addressed. The contract the university has with eFollett, our current textbook provider, will expire this upcoming summer and the Student Government Association has proposed a system that would focus more on students' needs. Implementing a textbook rental system, as they have suggested, would drastically cut back on the amount of money each student must spend in a semester.

As part of their plan, students would have a supplemental fee ranging from $100 to $150 added to their bill, which would then allow them access to the textbook rental center where theoretically all of their books would be available for the entire semester.

The proposal is definitely a step in the right direction, focusing the University's attention on the needs of those for whom it is supposed to exist. However, the concept seems too good to be true, and there are many things to discuss before any action can be taken.

The first issue to take into consideration would be the condition of rented textbooks. Currently, the books available used books have only been previously owned by a minimal amount of people and are generally in good condition. But in a system where the books are changing hands every semester, if not several times a semester, how will we be guaranteed that our books will remain in usable condition?

Another concern is the supplemental fee. If it is automatically added to all of our bills, and all of our textbooks really are available, then it certainly will be an improvement. But in order to assure that students will not have to spend additional money on books that aren't available, a system will have to be in place that will assure students they can get their books when they need them. Making the fee optional for students would at least allow for the freedom to purchase our books on our own if we so choose.

There are many details that will need to be worked out, and many kinks that will arise in the beginning if such a system is ever approved. But one thing is certain: it is a necessary step to putting the students at this university first.

We should not have to continue spending over a thousand dollars a year on the tools with which we learn, just so an outside, independent source can reap the benefits.

TO THE EDITOR

Tower designs not all bad

Editor,

With reference to Tuesday's editorial and story on cell phone towers, we should not be so quick to suggest commercial 'traps' and 'pimples' when referencing cell phone company attempts to put towers on campus.

Certainly, erecting set projects are unacceptable. But these companies have been known to often build systems that conceal their working apparatus behind 'bell tower' like structures. Negotiating a good looking campus addition might be a better solution than calling this helpful piece of American commerce nasty little names.

Robert J. Strawn
1551 WILLIAMSBURG COURT

Oversight needed to ensure appropriate use of funding

DAILY MISSISSIPPIAN
U. MISSISSIPPI

OXFORD, Miss. — Nobody really likes to talk about suicide, but if rates are to drop, we must.

Recently, the United States Senate passed a bill allotting $82 million over three years to states and Indian tribes to create youth suicide prevention and intervention programs.

The bill comes with many good intentions behind it. Its sponsor, Gordon Smith (R-Oregon), wants to honor his 21-year-old son, Garrett Smith, a manic depressive who killed himself last fall.

As pure as the motives may be, $82 million doesn't seem to be the most efficient spending plan. Uses for the money have been vaguely mapped out. A much more detailed plan should be given before simply throwing this money into the wind.

While schools, counselors and universities are, for the most part, trustworthy, a sum as large as $82 million should be strictly regulated.

When it comes to preventing suicide, freeing up the money seems to be an easier task than deterring people from the act.

Because each case of suicide is different, there is no one solution to the problem. Yet, no one can argue that it's a problem to be ignored.

According to www.medicinenet.com, suicide rates for 10 to 14 year olds increased 109 percent from 1980 to 1997.

Since then, it has become the second leading cause of death among 15 to 19 year olds, according to the American Psychiatric Association's Web site.

Since the money is already there, local groups responsible for suicide prevention and intervention programs should apply for their share.

The university, Oxford and Lafayette County are not exempt from suicide's grip. If the money can help refine programs to spot suicidal tendencies, hire more counselors or other uses, this area should get its share, as well.

Ultimately, though, money cannot erase the deep problems that plague those who are thinking of killing themselves.

It's up to friends and family to spot the warning signs in a person. It's not rocket science. It just takes time, awareness and caring. People contemplating suicide generally reach out for help, but sometimes that can go unnoticed.

Mid-major schools deserve BCS parity

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Can you hear it? What started out as a faint tap has grown into an all-out banging on the door of college football's Bowl Championship Series.

Several new guests have shown up to college football's party, and they are intent on getting in — even if they have to embarrass a few teams along the way.

It's time to open our eyes and look around the college football landscape. Believe it or not, the so called "lesser" mid-major conferences have some really good teams, and they are making themselves known in grand fashion.

A team from a mid-major conference needs to be allowed into the BCS party, to help further parity and the state of college football.

Wildcat players will tell you a mid-major can hold its own.

K-State has been the victim of an ambush by a mid-major team the past two seasons.

Marshall, a team from the Mid-American Conference, snuck into Manhattan last year and stole a 27-20 win from the claws of the eventual Big 12 Champions.

More recently, Western Athletic Conference member Fresno State dished out a 45-21 whooping on K-State last Saturday that announced the Bulldogs meant business.

But K-State is not the only BCS conference school to get stung by a team from a mid-major conference.

Ask Texas A&M or Arizona what they think of Utah from the Mountain West Conference. The Aggies were mercilessly pounded 41-21 in their season opener by Utah, and Mike Stoops' Wildcats were held to a mere six points in a loss to Utah last Saturday.

The point of all this is simple. Teams like Utah and Fresno State, ranked 15th and 19th respectively in this week's Associated Press Top 25, are proving their worth week in and week out and are deserving of a BCS bowl if they continue their early-season successes.

I think it would do college football a great deal of good if a team such as Utah or Fresno State made it into a BCS bowl game. Let them showcase their programs on the biggest stage college football can provide.

A BCS bowl can be a fantastic reward for these programs.

BCS bowls dish out millions of dollars to their participants and would offer a rare opportunity for mid-major teams to play the top schools from conferences such as the Big 12, SEC, Pac 10, ACC or Big 10. If a mid-major team made it to a BCS bowl and won, they no longer would have to fight for the respect they deserved all along.

The BCS has made some rule changes this year, making it possible for a mid-major team to get in. The chances are slim because of media bias and lack of exposure, but there is a chance a team like Utah even Boise State could slip into the BCS.

To get in, they would have to finish in the top 12 of the final BCS standings to even be considered. However, if by chance a mid-major makes it into the top 8 of the final standings, their ticket is punched and they are guaranteed an at-large berth.

The creation of a fifth BCS bowl game to be played starting next year will also increase the odds of a mid-major being included in the festivities.

I can hear the knocking at the door, and I am ready to let some new guests in. The party could use some new faces.

Wildcat volleyball buffaloes in Boulder

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 16 volleyball team's defense of its Big 12 title met a roadblock last night, as the Wildcats lost to Colorado in three straight games, 30-23, 30-28, 30-26.

The game marked the first K-State loss to Colorado since the 2001 season — Suzie Fritz's first year as head coach. It also was the first time the Wildcats had been swept by a conference opponent since Nebraska beat K-State 3-0 on Nov. 10, 2002.

Fritz said afterwards she was disappointed with her team's preparation.

"We were not prepared at all from a coaching and player standpoint for what Colorado brought tonight," Fritz said. "We spent the entire game trying to become prepared."

The Wildcats (5-4) fell behind 5-0 in game one and never fully recovered. K-State hit a dismal .105 in the opening game, while committing nine attack errors. Meanwhile the Buffaloes blistered K-State, hitting .324.

Colorado (6-2) was paced in the match by outside hitter Allie Griffin, tallying 17 kills on .314 hitting. For the match, Colorado hit .297 to K-State's .138.

Fritz said whenever Colorado needed a kill, it turned to Griffin and K-State had no answer.

"She is a very good player," Fritz said. "She was hitting over, around, and underneath us all night."

K-State's performance was marred by an inability to maintain any momentum. K-State's largest run of the night was four points, while Colorado had runs of 9-3, 10-1 and 9-5.

Fritz said there is no excuse for the way her team played, even though her players might be tired from eight matches in 13 days.

"We never got into any rhythm, and we won't make any excuses, but we might have some issues with fatigue," she said. "We are just trying to become the best team we can be, and we didn't get any better tonight."

Youthful leadership, hard work define men's soccer club

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you go
Men's soccer club

Athletes know listening to their coach can be challenging at times, but imagine having someone your own age calling the shots.

Brian Siegel, senior in criminology and member of the men's club soccer team, knows this feeling all too well.

Siegel looks to one of his peers, club president Jeffrey White, for leadership and encouragement despite their close friendship.

Siegel said White was voted as president of the club for his leadership and play on the field. "He is facing the challenge of making more serious practices, making sure people are present and not getting lazy," he said.

White, a senior in criminology, is accustomed to obstacles.

Having played the game of soccer all his life, White said he knew he wanted to continue to play in college to keep some competition in his life.

However, his ambition for sports dealt him a turn for the worse when he had to undergo surgery last year after dislocating his knee in an indoor soccer game.

"It was hard. I didn't get to play soccer at all last year. I didn't get to travel or anything like that," he said. "However, despite the fact that I couldn't be there, everyone was really encouraging."

With the beginning of the season, White's knee is healed, and he decided an injury is not going to prevent him from getting back on the field.

"I just had to come back this year and play," he said. "It's like brushing your hair every day; you just have to do it."

Coming back for his senior year, he said he is excited to not only be back in the game, but to be president of the club.

"I accepted the position of being president because it will help get me more into the future as far as what managing and organization will be like," he said.

Cody Davis, senior in animal science, and other members of the men's soccer club run warmups prior to practice at Memorial Stadium. The club plays teams from schools such as Wichita State University and the University of Kansas.

"It's tough on occasion, though, not to be able to have all of your best friends starting the game, but everyone is really cool and understanding about it."

Club member Jose Pozuelo, senior in agricultural economics, said he agreed that everyone is very encouraging on the team under the leadership of White.

"The team is unique, because everyone is really supportive no matter if we win or lose. No matter how competitive it is, we are all there to enjoy the sport and have as much fun as we can," Pozuelo said.

White said that same attitude of friendship and bonding seems to carry out throughout the team and adds to the team's success.

The club plays in a division including the University of Kansas, Wichita State University, Emporia State University, Central Missouri State University and other schools in the Big 12 Conference.

The team has a record of 2-0-1 this season, with victories over KU and WSU, and a tie with the Jayhawks.

The team plays at 8 p.m. Friday at Memorial Stadium against Emporia State University. White encourages students to come to the games.

"Emporia State isn't the strongest team in the league, but it will be all right. It's not like we come out and just play games. Everyone on the team is part of the group, and that pays off on the field," he said.

Wednesday, the K-State men's basketball team kicked off preparations for its upcoming Canadian exhibition tour.

With the first of 10 practices at Bramlage Coliseum, the Wildcats got an early start on the season, as they prepare for their Oct. 8-12, four-game exhibition tour in Vancouver, British Columbia.

The NCAA allows 10 practices for teams participating in fall exhibition tours. K-State plans to spread its allotted practice sessions over the next three weeks.

The exhibition tour could come at no better time for the Wildcats, as Coach Jim Wooldridge will try to give an inexperienced backcourt vital experience. K-State lost its four top guards from last season, including the surprise transfer of point guard Dez Willingham.

NHL | Lockout official; outlook grim for resolution

The National Hockey League will lock out its players Thursday, starting a work stoppage that threatens to keep the sport off the ice for the entire 2004-05 season.

The long-expected decision was confirmed by NHL owners Wednesday following a meeting in New York. Management is demanding cost certainty, which players say would be tantamount to salary cap.

Even before the announcement, teams already had given commissioner Gary Bettman authority to cancel the season.

The sides have not met since a bargaining session last Thursday ended with the parties far apart, and there appears to be almost no chance the season will start as scheduled on Oct. 13.

Owners have contributed $300 million to a league work-stoppage fund to help get them through a lockout, and the union has retained licensing money to help its members.

Players vow to resist a salary cap and, with the positions entrenched, a long stoppage is likely, one that could wipe out the Stanley Cup final for the first time since 1919.

The 30 teams had been set to start opening training camps on Thursday, the day after the expiration of the current labor contract, first agreed to in 1995 and extended two years later through Sept. 15, 2004.

WCBB | Muslim Ex-Wildcat quits USF citing "distraction"

A University of South Florida women's basketball player who wanted to wear Islamic clothing on the court quit the team on Wednesday.

Last week, USF had asked the NCAA for an exemption to its uniform policy to allow Muslim convert Andrea Armstrong, 22, to wear long pants, a top with long sleeves and a scarf during games.

In a letter Wednesday to coach Jose Fernandez, Armstrong said she was leaving the team because she didn't want the uniform issue "to cause further distraction."

Armstrong first said last week that she had left the team and lost her athletic scholarship after Fernandez told her she could not wear religiously mandated clothing during practices or games.

In a meeting Friday with Armstrong, university officials and a representative of Council on American-Islamic Relations, officials agreed that the team would accommodate her Islamic attire and reinstate her scholarship.

But Fernandez said Armstrong requested a meeting with him Wednesday and left the team.

Armstrong, a senior, played one season with the Bulls after transferring from K-State.

World events enhance show's meaning

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though "Two Rooms," a K-State Theatre Production, is set in 1980s Beirut, Lebanon, cast members said its relevance has been underscored by such world events as the recent hostage situation in a Russian school.

"I think that people will leave, not necessarily sad, but more interested in the current political situation," Director Ginny Pape, senior in theater said. "This play is very relevant in today's political climate."

"It's not necessarily supposed to make people cry about the situation but want to do something and be more informed about the relationship the United States has with other countries."

"Two Rooms," which opens tonight in the Purple Masque Theatre, is the story of Michael and Lainie Wells, educators who have been living in Beirut. Michael, played by Nick Uthoff, senior in theater is taken hostage by terrorists, and Lainie, played by Kelly Wood, senior in theater, is forced to beg U.S. officials for his release.

The cast also includes Ray Cherenfant, freshman in theater, who plays a journalist and Alea Hale, sophomore in theater, who plays a government official.

The play is called "Two Rooms," because Lainie transforms Michael's office at their home in Washington to resemble the room he is held in as a hostage.

"Working on this show and then having that thing happen over in Russia, it hits pretty close to home," Wood said.

She said it's a weird parallel.

"I know this show is technically based on stuff that happened in the '80s. When they watch the news, they may look a little more closely," Wood said.

Handling such weighted issues is something new for both Uthoff and Wood.

However, Pape said they've been adjusting well.

"They've been doing a beautiful job," Pape said. "It's kind of fun to watch people who have been pigeon holed into a certain kind of role able to explore and do something different. It's good for them."

Wood said she is relishing the opportunity to work different acting muscles.

"I love doing this. I think it's a good stretch for me to play a role like this, since a lot of people don't see like this," Wood said.

Uthoff said he enjoyed having to look at this character differently than any other character and realizing how much work it takes.

"It's so mental," he said. "To try to play a person who is going through something this extreme, a 21-year-old college student has a hard time identifying with someone who is going through a hostage situation in Beirut, you have to look for a parallel in your life and tap into that."

"Usually I stick to the musical side of things, which I enjoy.

But I'd like to see that I learned more than just how to be a song and dance man," Uthoff said.

Uthoff spends the entire play in torn, blue-and-white pinstripe pants, a white T-shirt covered in bloody makeup, a blindfold and handcuffs. This is also the first time Uthoff doesn't talk to anyone else back stage.

"For this serious role I can't be that goofy guy," he said. "I gotta try to stay in that role the whole time or else I'll lose it."

The key to spicing up plain Ramen: more spice

Unfortunately, a common misconception about preparing a good meal is that it takes a lot of time and planning.

For those of you who love to eat tasty morsels but don't want to miss any of the current "Nip/Tuck" episode (I don't like to miss it either), I come bearing a message of hope.

You can eat cheaply and treat those starving taste buds of yours without having to drain your wallet on Hungry Man dinners or Taco Bell.

What is this miracle, you ask? I'll give you a hint.

It comes in small, plastic bags or Styrofoam cups.

Most of you can guess what I'm talking about right off the bat. But for those of you who have Dad's credit card and only eat at Wendy's (it's a safe bet that you haven't done much grocery shopping either), the answer is Ramen noodles.

I know what you're thinking. "Here he goes again about obscure foods I don't give a dimpled ass about, nor ever plan to eat." You're right, too, but I hope to change your tune.

Ramen is a pretty basic food-stuff. Its main ingredients are eggs, flour, salt, water and some random preservatives to ensure a shelf life of infinity (this is why your body is considered toxic waste when you die and your corpse must be buried in concrete).

It takes virtually no time to prepare either. All you have to do is boil a cup or two of water, and you're ready to go. If you're like me and can't even wait for that, try using hot tap water—it'll knock off a couple minutes.

The noodles typically taste like plastic. Fortunately, there is a bullion flavor packet that comes with it. You now have noodles that taste like plastic chicken. There are, however, wonderful things you can do to spice up your noodles.

One of the simplest ways to turn that boring bowl into a daring dish is to (add other spices, this isn't rocket science folks).

It's perfectly all right to try mixing and matching here. A packet of noodles will only set you back 10 cents, so if the rosemary and cayenne pepper you blend makes you want to spew, you can just get another one.

Once you've become a spice-master of mixes, you can progress to the level of taste-tude. Your preconceived notions of Ramen are restricting your thought process and holding you back. Try to think of this as though you're making goulash or casserole. The only thing that's different is the base ingredient.

One of the best ways to add volume and flavor to your noodles is to toss in some vegetables. You can use fresh veggies from the store or frozen packs. I prefer frozen, because they tend to be cheaper and come pre-cut and mixed, and all you have to do is throw them in the microwave while the water is heating up.

Meat is another item that can add character to your noodles and give whomever you're dining with a glimpse of who you really are. I like fresh kitten, because they're very tender and I can get them for free from the alley behind my house. If that's not your style, then chicken, beef, or seafood can be added.

Don't want to cook it? Don't worry, because you can purchase canned chicken, beef and seafood, and it's usually in the same aisle as the Ramen.

Now that you've got the information, you're an armed weapon, primed to attack the kitchen.

If you're in the mood for an Indian influenced meal, you can toss in some onion, eggplant and chickpeas with some curry and cumin.

If Chinese sounds good, just drop in some broccoli, celery, mushrooms and onions with some soy sauce and cayenne pepper.

If you just don't give a fiddler's fart and are sick of me telling you what to do, you can add whatever you want. See if I care.

Spielberg, Zemeckis talk video games

Filmmakers Steven Spielberg and Robert Zemeckis say students at the University of Southern California could change moviemaking by playing more video games.

The two Hollywood directors were at the campus on Tuesday to inaugurate a new Electronic Arts video game development lab at the university's school of cinema and television, where they detailed the coming fusion between games and film.

They said video games are getting closer to a storytelling art form — but not quite yet.

"I think the real indicator will be when somebody confesses that they cried at level 17," Spielberg said.

Both directors agreed that movies like "Spider-Man 2" and "The Matrix" series reflect the impact that gaming style has had on cinema.

Jim Carrey to receive film award

Jim Carrey will receive the American Film Institute's Star Award at the 2005 U.S. Comedy Arts Festival in February.

Carrey, winner of Golden Globes for "The Truman Show" in 1999 and "Man on the Moon" in 2000, will be honored in a career tribute hosted by Conan O'Brien of "Late Night With Conan O'Brien."

Previous Star Award winners include Albert Brooks, Billy Crystal, Rob Reiner, the Monty Python troupe, Steve Martin, Mike Myers and Diane Keaton, who was last year's recipient.

NYC renames street for "Law and Order"

The folks on NBC's "Law & Order" will go to work on a familiar street.

New York City, on Tuesday, renamed a short road that heads to Pier 62 on Manhattan's West Side "Law & Order Way" in honor of the show's 15th anniversary.

That's where the show's offices are located and many of its episodes shot. "New York City is as much a part of every 'Law & Order' ensemble as the actors," said Dick Wolf, series creator.

Madonna visits Israel on spiritual quest

Israel was abuzz with excitement Wednesday over the arrival of Madonna, its biggest celebrity visitor in years. The pop star came to the Holy Land on a spiritual quest, including visits to the graves of revered rabbinical sages.

Yet some were perplexed by the raunchy diva's interest in the esoteric Jewish mysticism called cabala or Kabbalah, and rabbis said she had no business studying holy texts.

Raised a Roman Catholic, Madonna has adopted the Hebrew name Esther, wears a red thread on her wrist to ward off the evil eye and reportedly refuses to perform on the Jewish Sabbath.

Beheaded bodies of 3 Iraqis discovered

By Kim Housego
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Security forces discovered three beheaded bodies Wednesday north of Baghdad, and a car bomb exploded in a town south of the capital, killing two people amid a surge of violence that has left more than 200 dead in the past four days.

The three bodies were found near Dijel, about 25 miles north of Baghdad, said Col. Adnan Abdul-Rahman of the Interior Ministry. They were all male and had tattoos, he said.

A U.S. military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the bodies appeared to be Iraqi nationals and that their hands were tied behind their backs.

The car bomb targeted a National Guard checkpoint in Suwayrah, about 40 miles south of Baghdad, Abdul-Rahman said. A national guardsman was one of the two dead, he said. Ten people were injured.

Meanwhile, militants released a Turkish man taken hostage in Iraq, according to a videotape obtained by Associated Press Television News.

Evacuations continue as Hurricane Ivan approaches

Damaging storm nearly 200 miles wide

By Mary Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Stragglers streamed toward higher ground Wednesday on highways turned into one-way evacuation routes, and surf waves started eroding beaches as Hurricane Ivan roared toward the Gulf Coast with 140 mph wind.

Nearly 200 miles wide, Ivan could cause significant damage no matter where it strikes, as hurricane-force wind extended up to 105 miles out from the center. Hurricane warnings were posted along a 300-mile stretch from Grand Isle, La., across coastal Mississippi and Alabama to Apalachicola, Fla.

"We're leaving today. All this is going under," said surfer Chuck Myers who was only taking pictures of the waves Wednesday morning at Gulf Shores. "We surfed it all day yesterday. It was glorious."

"This is a bad one, and people need to get out," Mobile, Ala., Mayor Mike Dow said Wednesday on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Fleeing to safety was not an option for some people, especially in New Orleans, the below-sea-level city where more than 1.2 million were urged to get out of the metropolitan area, warned that the city could be inundated with water up to 20 feet deep.

"They say evacuate, but they don't say how I'm supposed to do that," said Latonya Hill, who waited out the storm Tuesday sitting on her stoop. Hill, 57, lives on a disability check and money she picks up cleaning houses or baby sitting. "If I can't walk it or get there on the bus, I don't go. I don't got a car. My daughter don't either."

No shelters had been set up in the city because of concerns about flooding and capacity, Mayor Ray Nagin said.

Nagin insisted Wednesday that the evacuation from his city had been going smoothly. "Of course we are trying to

"They say evacuate, but they don't say how I'm supposed to do that."

Latonya Hill
NEW ORLEANS RESIDENT

move a large number of people out of our city," he said on NBC's "Today." "We experienced gridlock on the highways. But for the most part it's subsided."

Farther east, Interstate 65 in Alabama was turned into a northbound-only evacuation route Wednesday morning from the harbor city of Mobile to Montgomery.

Streets in Fort Walton Beach, Fla., were deserted Wednesday morning and businesses were boarded up. Streets along Mississippi's 75-mile coast were all but deserted and homes and businesses, including a number of gas stations, were boarded up.

At 8 a.m. EDT Wednesday, Ivan was centered about 180 miles south-southeast of the mouth of the Mississippi River and moving north-northwest at 12 mph. Forecasters said Ivan could bring a coastal storm surge of 10 to 16 feet, topped by large, battering waves.

Forecasters said Ivan, which killed at least 68 people in the Caribbean, could reach 160 mph and strengthen to a dangerous Category 5 by the time it blows ashore as early as Thursday somewhere along the Gulf Coast.

Everyone from New Orleans east to Apalachicola, Fla., should be worried because even the tiniest change in the storm track now could move the location of the storm's landfall by hundreds of miles, Hector Guerrero, a meteorologist at the National Hurricane Center, said Wednesday.

"Even a little jog could result in considerable change," he said.

"I beg people on the coast: Do not ride this storm out," Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour said, urging residents in other parts of the state to open their homes to relatives, friends and co-workers.

In Alabama, Mobile County Sheriff's Sgt. Steve Kirchharr said shelters were beginning to fill Wednesday morning with evacuees from coastal and low-lying areas.

He didn't expect the shelters to be filled until Wednesday "when tropical force winds start reaching the shore and people start panicking more than they are right now."

No major problems were reported Wednesday on Mississippi's U.S. 49, the four-lane route from the coast north to Jackson, although it had been bumper-to-bumper late into the night, said Gulfport police Lt. Ricky Chapman said. "Right now things are running pretty smooth, but it might pick up again" as evacuation holdouts reconsider, he said.

New Orleans, which sits largely below sea level, is particularly vulnerable to flooding, and Nagin was among the first to urge residents to get out while they can. The city's Louis Armstrong Airport was ordered closed Tuesday night.

Up to 10 feet below sea level in spots, New Orleans sits between the nearly half-mile-wide Mississippi River and Rhode Island-size Lake Pontchartrain, relying on a system of levees, canals and huge pumps to keep dry.

PLANE | University jet enhances travel capabilities

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Ron Trewyn, research vice provost, exits the campus jet after placing some of his belongings inside. The jet was picking up Trewyn and other passengers in Manhattan to take to Raleigh, N.C., and Washington, D.C.

"We are probably in the worst area for airline travel," Reagan said. "First you have to go to K.C. Then you have to go to someplace else you don't want to go, like Dallas or Chicago. It just takes all day. We just don't have good access."

"Especially on trips going to places where airline accessibility is minimal, it's needed."

Reagan said the jet is paid for by private donors, and whoever uses the plane is charged for the trip.

He said he occasionally pilots the jet, and there are about four or five other possible K-

State captains. Then, a student is always the pilot.

Janine Nunes, flight instructor and May 2002 graduate, said she has 75 hours of co-pilot time.

"We pretty much just treat it as a lab. It gets you out to more real-world experience," she said.

Nunes said the co-pilot mainly oversees the radio, but co-pilots also discuss other aspects with the captain.

"They'll go over all the planning together. They'll go out and check over the plane before the flight together," she said.

There are also times when students are allowed to fly the jet and turbo, she said.

Anytime the co-pilot and the captain are the only ones on board, the co-pilot gets to fly, she said.

"The co-pilot just flies over to Manhattan," she said. "There's actually sometimes where we have dropped someone off in New York, and the co-pilot gets to fly back."

Kuhlman said they try to get all students some experience with the jet, but they don't start out on them.

"The airplanes that we have our students typically start out in smaller planes," he said. "We try to expose them to a wide variety of planes."

VOLLEYBALL | Freshman libero posts 10 digs

One bright spot for the Wildcats was the play of freshman libero Angie Lastra. Lastra collected 10 digs for K-State and now has posted double figures in all nine of K-State's matches this season.

K-State is back in action against North Dakota State (1-7) at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The Bisons return nine letter-winners and three starters from last year's squad that finished 25-9. They are led by outside hitter Sheila Parrish and setter Emily Luensmann. Parrish is averaging 2.71 kills a game while Luensmann averages 8.3 assists.

Fritz said she will be looking for a quick rebound from her team despite potential fatigue issues.

"It will be difficult to play tomorrow night, but we knew that when we set our schedule up that way," Fritz said. "We've got to get back on the horse and try it again, so to speak."

"The best thing for us will be to play again and work on those things that we struggled with against Colorado."

MURDER | Two weapons found at crime scene

Authorities with the Clay County attorney and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation said the shooting took place between 10 p.m. and 11 p.m. Monday. KBI spokesman Kyle Smith said Stanley rented the home, and he was believed to have called police about the shooting.

Two weapons — a .308-caliber rifle and a .22-caliber handgun — were found at the scene and believed to be involved in the shooting, Smith said.

Fort Riley spokeswoman Sam Robinson confirmed that all four soldiers were assigned to the post and were members of the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division.

Werner deployed to Iraq in June with about 800 soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, which is serving its second tour of duty in Iraq. Robinson said Colvin, Hymer and Stanley were assigned to the unit's rear detachment that remained at Fort Riley. Details about Werner's assignment were not released.

Fort Riley is home to about 10,500 soldiers, of which more than 3,000 are in Iraq.

what continue the increase.

"Businesses such as Famous Dave's BBQ and possibly Pier 1 and things of that nature, I think, make it much better," he said.

Butler said other businesses such as a newer, larger Hastings Book Store and Hobby Lobby will continue to attract regional shoppers, as well as keep local shoppers at home.

In the end, he said, if Fort Riley and K-State continue to flourish, the local economy should continue to grow.

"It's not just students, but employees of the universities, soldiers and their families and the support staff of Fort Riley," Butler said.

"As long as they're stable or continue to grow then we will only continue to see more businesses and stores."

Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.

We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your CD, call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

Manhattan-Ogden superintendent retires

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The superintendent of the Manhattan-Ogden school district announced Thursday she will step down in July.

Sharol Little submitted her letter of retirement, which will be effective July 1, 2005.

"I am announcing my retirement now so that the Board has the adequate time they need to conduct a search and choose a replacement for the position of superintendent," Little said in a press release. "I think I have done the job I was asked to do when I came here.

"While these have not been easy financial times, there is much to celebrate. The achievement of our students has been outstanding, and that, after all, is why I am an educator."

Little listed proud accomplishments during her term as increasing student achievement under the No Child Left Behind Act, putting greater emphasis on safety and creating a diversity commission.

Little declined further comment.

She announced her retirement to school board members in executive session Wednesday night and then met with district administration Thursday morning to announce the decision.

Little was hired in July 2001. That November, the board voted to close Bluemont and Eugene Field elementary schools because of a sharp decline in enrollment.

In 2002, she was one of the authors of a proposal to regionalize school districts, which caused anger among small school district administrators.

She also was involved in a case before a Kansas court this year that declared the Legislature's school finance system unconstitutional. The lawsuit was filed while Little was the superintendent of Dodge City schools.

Organizations press standards of accountability

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of some student organizations are held to high standards and required to meet certain academic requirements.

Sarah Decke, adviser for the Association of Residence Halls, said there is a 2.0 GPA minimum requirement for executive board members in ARH.

"Students may also not be on disciplinary warning," she said. "It has happened in the past where someone has a 2.5, but they were on disciplinary action in their college because of the college's rules."

Decke said the students' grades are checked before running for office and at the beginning of every semester.

If students fall below the requirements, they are told in private, Decke said.

"We would have a conversation with the individual and ask them about their grades," she said. "We explain to them that their academics are a priority."

Students aren't required to publicly announce they are stepping down because of their grades, Decke said.

"They will write a letter to the board and the general lobby and explain they need to step down and focus on their academics," she said. "It's a tough call, and it's somewhat embarrassing for students."

Student Senate also has academic requirements.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said undergraduate students have a minimum of 2.0 GPA to run for office while graduate

Federal grant gives K-State $1.38 million to study bioterrorism

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The National Agricultural Biosecurity Center at K-State has received $1.38 million from the U.S. Department of Defense.

The two-year contract will fund "Situational Competency, Simulations and Lessons Learned for Food/Agricultural Bioterrorism," a project that will develop a database with reports of agriterrorism exercises and reports of how they were handled, said Assistant Director and Program Coordinator Mary Vanier.

There will be three parts to the project, Vanier said. The first part will be a searchable database.

"All reports of agro terrorism will go into the database and we will have various levels of access," she said. "Any group that might be required to respond to some kind of agricultural disaster, like the police, will be able to look at reports and see the lessons learned."

Vanier said the second part of the project will be creating a method of delivering information to veterinarians, county extension agents and livestock and crop producers.

An earth mover dumps a load of dirt into a truck to be moved Thursday afternoon during construction across from the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. The plans for the biosecurity building are in the beginning stages.

"This will include continuing education that would be important for recognizing exotic diseases," she said.

The third part of the project will be a web-accessible tool that will let users select the types of information they want to receive about agricultural events, Vanier said.

"This allows users to get information instantly in near, real time," she said. "If conditions are developing that might signal events, they are able to see this so they can respond."

Vanier said the project doesn't require a building itself but research that could help enhance the project may be performed in the Biosecurity Research Building that is being built on campus.

U.S. allies refute U.N. condemnations

By Robert Baar
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Major U.S. allies Thursday rejected a claim by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan that the war in Iraq was "illegal" because Washington and its coalition partners never got Security Council backing for the invasion.

Annan's comments undercut governments from Australia to Italy that supported the United States on Iraq, often in the face of widespread domestic opposition.

The U.N. chief told British Broadcasting Corp. radio on Wednesday that the U.S.-led invasion did not conform to the United Nations Charter, which lets nations take military action with explicit Security Council approval.

"From our point of view and from the Charter point of view, it was illegal," Annan said. He also raised concerns that persistent violence in Iraq puts in doubt the national elections scheduled for January.

Prime Minister Tony Blair's office disputed Annan's comments about the legitimacy of the war. It reiterated that the British attorney general, Lord Goldsmith, had found Britain was acting legally in supporting the military action, citing three U.N. resolutions that justified the use of force against Saddam Hussein's regime.

Britain was a leading supporter of the U.S.-led March 2003 invasion that ousted Saddam, a war that followed months of bitter debate in the 15-nation Security Council.

Bush didn't comment directly on Annan's remarks but said he had no regrets.

"I was hoping diplomacy would work," Bush said Thursday while campaigning in Minnesota. "Knowing what I know today even though we haven't found the stockpiles of weapons we thought were there, I'd still make the same decision. America and the world are safer with Saddam Hussein sitting in a prison cell."

Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi's government, which also supported the invasion, made no comment.

But Giuseppe Fioroni, a member of Italy's

Student Senate swears in 25 interns for academic year

Honor System changes name for inclusion

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The future leaders of Student Governing Association got their first taste of Student Senate on Thursday night.

The 25 Student Senate interns were sworn in by Senate Chair Eleri Griffin after a three-day interview process.

Tyson Moore, student senate vice-chair, said after 91 applicants underwent the interview process, 25 were selected.

In other business, Phil Anderson, director of the K-State Honor System, gave his annual report to the body.

Anderson announced the name had been changed from the K-State Undergraduate Honor System upon the inclusion of the Graduate School in February 2004.

"Essentially, the entire university has become a part of it, with the exception of Vet-Med," Anderson said.

He said the College of Veterinary Medicine, as a professional school, had an honor code of their own.

According to the report, the 2003-2004 academic year saw 90 Honor System violation reports submitted, involving 232 K-State undergraduate, graduate and distance education students.

In legislative action, the body passed an allocation bill to Community Cultural Harmony Week, allocating them $458.69 to help fund events for the week.

The bill passed unanimously on roll call after Sen. Bill Muir's motion to suspend the orders and pass the bill unanimously without a roll call vote failed.

Allocations to the Baptist Student Union, Christian Challenge and Phi Beta Lambda were referred to the allocations committee.

A bill amending SGA updating informal guidelines in SGA statutes regarding the Educational Opportunity Fund was referred to the Senate Operations committee.

Student Senate interns wait to be sworn in by Student Senate Chair Eleri Griffin on Thursday night. Twenty-five interns were selected from 91 applicants.

K-State-Salina Saferide runs 24/7

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not unlike Manhattan, the K-State-Salina campus has a SafeRide type program.

Unlike Manhattan, K-State-Salina has it for 24 hours 7 days a week.

Seth Short, former chairperson of the SafeRide committee at Salina, said the program is in its second year and has been 24/7 the entire time.

"It's more than just coming home from the bars or a party," he said. "We even have students that can get a ride to campus and then get SafeRide to go home."

Short said SafeRide runs during holidays also; Manhattan's doesn't. He said they hope to start running in the summer as well.

Salina's program has seen good response, he said.

"Last year we saw an increase in usage about each month," Short said.

Salina wants to provide the service whenever they need it, said Shana Meyer, adviser to Salina's student senate.

"We felt that if there is a need for a SafeRide, then students should have that options at all times," she said.

Meyer said there had been some discussion with Manhattan before either program had begun, but ultimately the idea was spurred from other colleges. She said there are other colleges in the area that have had similar programs as SafeRide.

"If other schools could make it work, then obviously we could also," she said.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president at Manhattan, said the Manhattan senate never really considered to run the program 24/7.

"It wouldn't have made sense when starting the program out," she said.

If Manhattan was to consider the 24/7 policy, the cost of SafeRide would greatly increase, Urkevich said.

"No one's felt comfortable of actually proposing something like that because of the cost," she said. "It would cost a lot more student privilege fees."

Council lays out security scenarios

By Katherine Pfleger Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Intelligence Council presented President Bush this summer with three pessimistic scenarios regarding the security situation in Iraq, including the possibility of a civil war there before the end of 2005.

In a highly classified National Intelligence Estimate, the council looked at the political, economic and security situation in the wartorn country and determined that — at best — a tenuous stability was possible, a U.S. official said late Wednesday, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

The document lays out a second scenario in which increased extremism and fragmentation in Iraqi society impede efforts to build a central government and adversely affect efforts to democratize the country.

In a third, worst-case scenario, the intelligence council contemplated "trend lines that would point to a civil war," the official said.

The potential conflict could be among the country's three main populations — the Sunnis, Shiites and Kurds.

It would be fair to call the document pessimistic, the official added.

But "the contents shouldn't come as a particular surprise to anyone who is following developments in Iraq. It encapsulates trends that are clearly apparent."

The intelligence estimate, which was prepared for Bush, considered the window of time between July and the end of 2005.

But the official noted that the document draws on intelligence community assessments from January 2003, before the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq and the subsequent deteriorating security situation there.

This latest assessment was initiated by the National Intelligence Council, a group of senior intelligence officials that provides long-term strategic thinking for the entire U.S. intelligence community.

It was completed in late August.

Acting CIA Director John McLaughlin and the leaders of the other intelligence agencies approved the intelligence document, which spans about 50 pages.

The estimate appears to differ from the public comments

"It's beyond pitiful, it's beyond embarrassing, it's now in the zone of dangerous,"

Sen. Chuck Hagel
R-NEB.

of Bush and his senior aides who speak more optimistically about the prospects for a peaceful and free Iraq.

"We're making progress on the ground," Bush said at his Texas ranch late last month.

"It states the obvious," White House press secretary Scott McClellan said on Air Force One as Bush flew to a day of campaigning in Minnesota.

"It talks about the scenarios and the different challenges we face." He said it did not reach any conclusions and left it up to policy-makers to act on the information.

A CIA spokesman declined to comment.

The document was first reported by The New York Times on its Web site Wednesday night.

In a conference call arranged by the John Kerry presidential campaign, Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., called on the White House to release the new assessment.

"The American people need to know the truth," he said Thursday.

It is the first formal assessment of Iraq since the October 2002 National Intelligence Estimate on the threat posed by fallen Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

A scathing review of that estimate released this summer by the Senate Intelligence Committee found widespread intelligence failures that led to faulty assumptions that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction.

Disclosure of the new National Intelligence Estimate on Iraq came the same day that Senate Republicans and Democrats denounced the Bush administration's slow progress in rebuilding Iraq, saying the risks of failure are great if it doesn't act with greater urgency.

"It's beyond pitiful, it's beyond embarrassing, it's now in the zone of dangerous," said

Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Nebr., referring to figures showing only about 6 percent of the reconstruction money approved by Congress last year has been spent.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee members vented their frustrations at a hearing during which State Department officials explained the administration's request to divert $3.46 billion in reconstruction funds to security and economic development.

The money was part of the $18.4 billion approved by Congress last year, mostly for public works projects.

The request comes as heavy fighting continues between U.S.-led forces and Iraqi insurgents, endangering prospects for elections scheduled for January.

"We know that the provision of adequate security up front is requisite to rapid progress on all other fronts," Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Ron Schlicher said.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said circumstances in Iraq have changed since last year.

"It's important that you have some flexibility," he said.

Hagel, Committee Chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind., and other committee members have long argued — even before the war — that administration plans for rebuilding Iraq were inadequate, and they were based on overly optimistic assumptions that Americans would be greeted as liberators.

But the criticism from the panel's top Republicans had an extra sting coming less than seven weeks before the U.S. presidential election in which Bush's handling of the war is a top issue.

"Our committee heard blindly optimistic people from the administration prior to the war and people outside the administration — what I call the 'dancing in the street crowd' — that we just simply will be greeted with open arms," Lugar said. "The nonsense of all of that is apparent. The lack of planning is apparent."

He said the need to shift the reconstruction funds was clear in July, but the administration was slow to make the request.

State Department officials stressed areas of progress in Iraq since the United States turned over political control of Iraq to an interim government June 28.

TO THE POINT Biosecurity research grant a responsibility

While it certainly is an honor that K-State was awarded a federal grant for biosecurity research, we must remember it also is a huge responsibility.

Our university has been charged with furthering our government's ability to protect its citizens.

K-State has been handed America's tax dollars, America's trust, and part of America's future.

Too often, federal money is spent wastefully and extravagantly, with little, if anything, to show as a result.

In today's budget crunch, we must remember every federal dollar spent at K-State is a dollar that might have gone toward fixing an inner city school.

Or to providing healthcare to the tens of millions of uninsured Americans.

Or repairing military equipment in Iraq.

Biosecurity is crucial to everyone, American and foreign.

We cannot let those who would harm our nation gain an edge over us in the battle to preserve our agricultural backbone and the lives of our people.

But fiscal responsibility also is crucial, and we should be careful to live up to the trust that was placed in us.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Affordable college tuition becoming a thing of the past

ABBY HILES

Four years ago, I remember looking at the cost of my tuition and complaining.

I couldn't believe how much more expensive it was for me to go to college here, as opposed to my friends from high school, who were going to the local junior college 13 miles down the road.

And back then, I was only paying $81 a credit hour.

Looking back, I want to kick myself. Especially when I think this semester I paid $137 a credit hour. That's right, seniors. Your tuition has gone up more than $50 a credit hour, or 69 percent, in four years.

I'll let that soak in as you run to the bathroom and purge yourself at the thought of all the money this university has taken from you.

There, you feel better?

Now, we K-Staters could complain about our annual 20-percent tuition hikes until we are blue (or rather, purple) in the face. But the fact is, we are still paying less than almost every other college I can think of.

For instance, my cousin, Matt, lives in New Jersey and their state school, Rutgers, will cost him more than $219 a credit hour. That's not counting fees, or the extra cash he has to shell out due to his engineering major, or room and board.

This month a biennial study by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education announced that affordability of universities and colleges throughout the United States has dropped from a grade of D to F.

According to www.CNN.com, the study, or report card, as it is called, "grades affordability in part by comparing net college costs with the average family income in each state."

Apparently, only three states ranked higher than a D in the report (California, Utah and Minnesota), and California ranked the highest with a B. This almost makes sense, considering that the study was including movie stars and celebrities in with the average income.

Now, I can handle Kansas receiving a grade of D or below. We live in a state of farmers and ranchers where their income is extremely variable from year to year.

With the steady annual increase of college tuition, I can understand where affording college is becoming more and more difficult to swing.

Take my hometown, for instance. More than half the adult population has jobs at local factories. Is it really plausible that two parents, making only $10 or $12 an hour, to afford college tuition for one child? Let alone two or three?

I didn't think so.

But do you want to know the real kicker?

When I was a freshman and the seniors were paying $81 a credit hour, they received the same $5,500 in financial aid that I am receiving now.

So while their refund checks (which pay for incidentals such as books, rent, etc.) were more than a thousand dollars a semester, mine came in at a massive $473 this year. Barely enough to buy my books. Thank you, K-State.

I suppose I shouldn't be complaining, though. As I said before, K-State is still one of the most inexpensive college options out there.

We have a great academic record, amazing sports teams, and of course, the incomparable Willie the Wildcat.

And we get all of that for the bargain price of $137 a credit hour.

It's funny, though... I seem to remember all of those same luxuries and amenities when I was a freshman and paying a whole lot less.

Cover up, teens: the modest look is coming back

A friend of mine used to have a neighbor who liked to mow his lawn in a Speedo.

Having him for a next-door neighbor definitely would inspire me to stay inside with the curtains closed.

While this isn't a problem that comes up often, lately everybody is showing off their favorite brand of undergarments (or lack of undergarments, midriffs etc.).

But that might be about to change.

On Sept. 9, the Kansas City Star reported that modesty is coming back into style.

Apparently, people are getting tired of the bare-all look — at last, a trend I was ahead of.

Actually, Vogue reported the trend this summer, but it seems not to have reached Manhattan in full force yet.

Perhaps it will this fall. The Seattle Times reports, "The fall fashion gods have deemed... the end of micro tees, thong-baring jeans and all the bare skin in-between."

Some say this trend is a direct result of the excess skin that's been showing lately. The Associated Press quotes Tina Wells, CEO of Buzz Marketing, as saying, "There is just sensory overload... The next big trend I see is kids are going to look like monks."

While that might be taking it a little far, I think it's high time that we started covering a bit more.

Do you really want your 100-year-old professor to know what brand of underwear you buy?

If so, maybe you'd better re-read Abby Hiles' column from last Friday about professor-student relationships.

Seriously, though, to use an extreme example, I would not exactly be inspired to respect someone who paraded around their lawn practically naked (and Speedos definitely count as practically naked).

Clothes send a message. If they didn't, why on earth would we care which colors and styles were popular?

If you're going to a job interview, you dress up, so your potential employer will think you are responsible enough for the job.

If you don't, you probably won't be hired, because the interviewer will think you are not really taking the job seriously.

The way you dress for an interview says something about you and the same thing applies to the clothes we wear on campus and anywhere else.

While we should be treated respectfully no matter what we wear, we should think about what messages we are sending by the way we dress.

We are much more than the sum of our parts.

The Seattle Times quotes 14-year-old Natasha Priess as saying lots of girls "let the clothes they wear judge who they are rather than who they are judge what clothes they wear." (I'm modest, but don't ever call me boring.)

Rather than just trying to fit in with the crowd, let's think about who we are and what we want to our clothes to say. If we find that our wardrobes don't live up to our personalities — hey, at least it's a good excuse to go shopping.

TO THE EDITOR

Community's support appreciated

Editor,

I would like to personally say thank you to the Editorial Board for Wednesday's editorial about our soldiers.

After a yearlong deployment in Iraq, my husband returned safely to Fort Riley this past weekend, and I couldn't be happier.

I am very proud of our soldiers and their accomplishments in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Unless you have experienced this for yourself, you cannot imagine how it feels to have your loved one away for 365 days. But what helps is knowing there are people like yourselves and this community that understand about these sacrifices our soldiers make. The support our troops and their families received from day one makes being "left behind" all the better.

So I would like to take this opportunity to say thank you to my wonderful friends and co-workers here in the physics department at K-State, for being very supportive of me while my husband was deployed and thank you to all the surrounding communities for not forgetting about our soldiers.

More schools provide Napster subscriptions

DAILY ORANGE SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — To counteract the problem of illegal music downloading, the university has put together a panel of students and faculty to come up with a solution. The group is entertaining the possibility of setting up a system similar to schools such as Cornell and Penn State. They provide students subscriptions to Napster.

Though the university is a long way from making a decision, putting together the panel to get the ball rolling is a step in the right direction. Students have grown accustomed to having free music at their fingertips, but they certainly don't want to receive a letter from the RIAA. Offering the option of Napster's current format or another service would be a nice compromise.

For both the record industry and colleges and universities with downloading issues, the problem with illegal file-sharing is one in which everyone concerned is trying to solve. People are going to try to make money on this, so there are going to be options out there for the university to consider. Just because other colleges have deals with companies like Napster doesn't mean that's the best way to go.

Napster's current format at colleges and universities usually involves a raise in the student fee coupled with a 99-cent charge if someone wishes to transfer a song from their hard drive to a CD or MP3 player. As for the student fee hike, it is acceptable because it will be for a tangible thing the student body can see put into action, but the charge-per-song idea is inherently flawed.

Students will definitely take advantage of the free service, but when it comes to transferring their music to more concrete formats, it is doubtful they will cough up the extra money when they can easily get it for free from services like Kazaa and WinMX. There's also the issue of downloading other copyrighted material, such as movies and television shows, which are not addressed by any of these plans.

At the moment, MP3 downloading is an institution that's here to stay. In the coming months, the university has the opportunity to address the problem and come up with a solution that is both beneficial to the students and the music industry. If the university keeps the student body informed and seeks out their opinions, as they seem to be doing, a viable solution can, and will, be reached.

College town needs improvement

Editor,

I am writing in response to Logan Adams' column, "Manhattan not lacking in attractions, boredom a lousy excuse."

While I sympathize with Adams about his small hometown, I feel that his opinion was not properly researched or validated.

Adams mentions alcohol consumption quite a few times in his article while leaving only a single paragraph dedicated to what activities are actually available in the Manhattan area, very few and vague examples at that.

Are the alcohol swigging students to be blamed for the lack of attractions around here? No, folks, the sad and underlying truth is that Manhattan, though it is prospering in business trade and college-football profits, actually is a pretty boring place when compared to other college towns.

Sure, we have a few golf courses and sports complexes, pool-halls and art galleries, but what other college town doesn't have these features?

Alcohol consumption amongst college students is not to be blamed for the lack of entertainment around here. I don't believe it should be ridiculed either, given the fact that Aggieville has been the only night-entertainment spot around here for a long time, aside from catching a movie.

Entertainment in Manhattan has taken a back seat to growing businesses and new college complexes. I hope when the enrollment rate at K-State drops, the City Commission will take some time off from making unnecessary improvements to the college and start improving this town.

Thomas Terzi
MANHATTAN

DAILY NEBRASKAN
UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA

LINCOLN, Neb. — Many of the Lost Boys of Sudan found better lives far from Africa. Their story of triumph, their collective childhood journey by foot through the horrors of war, is a powerful testimony to the strength of the human spirit.

Their survival embodies all that Americans love in a story about brave little boys: A happy ending.

But the prologue and epilogue to their story, Sudan, is again a matter of worldwide focus as world leaders debate whether or not the Sudanese government is using a brutal militia, Janjaweed, to fulfill a policy of genocide.

The current focus on possible genocide in Darfur, the recent atrocities of rape, the killings and the destruction of hundreds of villages that has displaced more than a million people, represents part of Sudanese history.

Sudan, after gaining its independence from the United Kingdom in 1956, had relative peace from 1972-82. The nation, dominated by Islamic governments for nearly half a century, has been caught in a vicious cycle of authoritarian regimes, civil war, drought and famine.

After a military coup in 1989, the United States terminated all economic assistance. The U.S. embassy in Khartoum was closed in February 1991. As civil war and drought displaced thousands of Sudanese, emergency aid and relief efforts from Britain, France and the United States were impeded or confiscated by the government.

Since 1983, two million people have died and more than four million people have been displaced by civil war, ethnic cleansing and famine.

When U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell turned to the international community and called the deaths in Sudan genocide, he sought United Nations intervention.

"Call it civil war. Call it ethnic cleansing. Call it genocide. Call it 'none of the above,'" Powell said. "The reality is the same. There are people in Darfur who desperately need the help of the international community."

But while the international community debates the proper vernacular for Sudan, people are dying of hunger, and others die at the cruel hands of a blood-thirsty militia. We believe two million deaths since 1983 under the leadership of the same Islamic-based authoritarian regime is genocide.

It was genocide when hundreds of little boys left refugee camps in the mid 1990s. It was genocide when those Lost Boys became young college men. It was genocide in Darfur when more than a million people were displaced.

We believe an international effort to allow millions of displaced, starving and victimized people in Sudan will become the ultimate story of human triumph and global accountability. That story's prologue may be civil war and famine, but the epilogue could become a story of triumph for all of Sudan's lost people if the global community will only write the first word and then act upon it.

Player-fan fights normal

Ever since the days of Ty Cobb, and probably even before, baseball has had problems keeping its players on the field and its fans in the stands.

Kent Hildebrand

Back in 1912, Cobb grew tired of a heckler, jumped into the crowd, and soundly pummeled the man. In the heckler's defense, he only had one hand and two fingers. But he still should have known better than to mess with a guy known for purposely cleating opposing players.

Many players from Babe Ruth to Albert Belle have been involved in altercations with fans. They usually receive a token slap-on-the-hand fine and suspension for a few games.

Don't think it's just the players reacting to the crowd and initiating conflict, though. For some fans, their interaction with players gets far nastier than good-natured heckling.

One of the most notable incidents of fans attacking players on the field occurred just two years ago at a Chicago White Sox-Kansas City Royals game.

The visiting Royals' first base coach, Tom Gamboa, was standing along the first-base line when a father and his 15-year-old son ran down from the stands and attacked him. They both were arrested and charged with aggravated battery and now are serving probation sentences.

Gamboa suffered permanent hearing loss because of the attack.

With baseball's past problems, it comes as no surprise to hear of another incident between a player and fans this week.

During a verbal spat with fans at Monday's Texas-Oakland game, Rangers' pitcher Frank Francisco threw a chair into the Oakland stands, breaking a woman's nose. Francisco was arrested Tuesday and charged with aggravated battery.

It had been a couple years; the sport was due for an incident.

But why is this a problem that's unique to baseball? Sure, football has the occasional streaker, but baseball is the only major American sport where fan-player brawls seem almost routine.

So the question that begs asking is, what should baseball do about these continual problems between players and fans?

If I was Major League Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig, I know what I'd do. Absolutely nothing.

A big part of the attraction of baseball is the closeness fans have to the game.

In hockey, they're kept behind a partition for their own protection. In basketball, you can sit with Spike Lee and Jack Nicholson just inches from the floor, if you can put down the cash for the seats. Football is similar to the set-up of baseball, but there just seems to be less fun in taunting 350-pound men wearing pads and helmets.

That leaves baseball, where front-row seats in the outfield or near the bullpen are affordable for most fans. It's not extremely difficult to get autographs before and after games, and, if you're lucky, an outfielder might toss you a foul ball.

This close proximity to the action makes identifying with the players easier and watching the game more fun. But it also lends itself to the occasional conflict.

Looking at baseball, the incidents that have occurred have been rare.

For the most part, the players are professionals and act that way, and the fans respect them for it. With security already heightened in the post-Sept. 11 era, there is no need to increase it after Francisco's outburst.

Safety is and should be a major concern for fans and players, but any further measures from what already has been done would only take away from the experience of watching a game.

The Frank Franciscos of the world will always be around to cause problems. So far, baseball has done a good job of not letting them have any lasting affect on the game.

I hope it stays that way.

Congressman, former record-holder speaks to K-State runners

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Running royalty visited Ahearn Field House on Thursday.

Jim Ryun, one of the sport's greatest figures, visited K-State to speak with members of the Wildcat cross country team.

As the first high school athlete ever to break four minutes in the mile, Ryun addressed Coach Michael Smith's team about how he got into running and the experiences he had along the way.

Currently a U.S. congressman representing Manhattan and the rest of the 2nd District, Ryun said his goal was to inspire K-State runners and tell them any goal they set can be achieved.

"I hope these runners have a dream," Ryun said. "I want them to know that they never have to listen to the doubters, and that they can exceed, whatever expectations they have of themselves."

Ryun spoke to the runners for about 20 minutes and shared stories of his running career and memories of the days when he first began running.

Ryun said when he first started running, he was not an immediate success. It was his high school coach's support that gave him the desire to improve, he said.

"My coach always challenged me to set my goals high," Ryun said. "He believed I could get better, and that made me want to get better."

While in high school in 1964, Ryun became the first high school runner to break four minutes in the mile when he posted a time of 3:59.

In 1965, as an 18-year-old senior, Ryun ran in San Diego against the defending Olympic gold-medalist in the mile, Peter Snell.

Ryun beat Snell, and in the process set a new high school-mile record in a time of 3:55. Ryun's record stood until 2001 when Alan Webb ran 3:53.

Smith said he hoped Ryun's talk inspired the team.

"It helps to have an athlete of that caliber talk to our runners," Smith said. "Most of our runners are from Kansas, and so they can relate to him. It raises the bar for our athletes after hearing what he said."

In college, Ryun ran at the University of Kansas and raced several times in Ahearn against K-State.

Ryun said he never thought of the Wildcats as enemies, and he holds Ahearn close to his heart.

"I have some fond memories of this building, even when it was a dirt track," Ryun said. "I liked the runners at K-State, and even though we ran against each other, we were companions."

After he spoke, Ryun signed autographs for team members and answered questions.

"It was inspiring to hear him talk," junior Joe Moore said. "We aren't down and out or anything, but it was good because it could really pump us up."

Ryun travels to colleges and universities around the country, speaking to runners about what it takes to be successful in athletics and beyond.

Ryun said the runners must realize the importance of setting high goals in athletics and in life, as well as listening to the guidance of their coach.

"I listened to my coach and he pushed me to become better, and you all should do the same," Ryun said. "Set goals in running and in life that are extremely high, and never listen to the people in the balcony that say you can't do it."

"Don't limit what your possibilities are."

NBA | Bryant admitted other affairs to investigators

In his interview with police the night after he was accused of rape, NBA star Kobe Bryant insisted the sex was consensual, that he stopped when she said "no" and wondered if she would accept money to recant a claim that could damage his reputation.

A transcript of the interview was published Thursday by the Vail Daily, which said it obtained the printout and an audio recording from someone who mailed it anonymously from Denver. A source close to the prosecution told The Associated Press the transcript appeared accurate.

John Clune, an attorney for the accuser, declined comment on the transcript but criticized the leak.

The transcript contains profanity and some graphic descriptions from Bryant, who also admits he has had frequent similar encounters with another woman named "Michelle" who could testify that he held her from behind. Bryant, who had been married for two years and had a 5-month-old daughter, said his wife did not know about the other woman.

During the interview, Bryant at first denied having sex with the woman. But after investigators said they had physical evidence indicating the two had sex, he told them she initiated it.

General | Lightning strike causes tragedy in Texas

A high school football player injured when lightning struck the team as it finished practice has died of severe burns, authorities said.

Russell Pennington, a senior at Grapeland High School, died Wednesday in a hospital. He was among about 40 players and coaches with the team in east Texas who were hospitalized after the lightning bolt struck Tuesday afternoon.

Other injured players were treated for soreness, headaches, abdominal pains and burns, and all had been released Wednesday.

One coach was listed in good condition, hospital officials said. Assistant coach Jerry Richards said about 40 players were running sprints when the bolt struck one player in the middle of the pack and others hit the ground.

Grapeland, a town of about 1,500, is about 120 miles southeast of Dallas.

Volleyball team claims victory

Cats beat North Dakota 3-0 after Colorado loss

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's volleyball team cruised to a 3-0 victory over North Dakota State on Thursday night at Ahearn Field House.

Just one night after dropping a 3-0 decision at Colorado in their conference opener, the No. 16 Wildcats (6-4) bounced back, topping the Bison 30-16, 30-16 and 30-22. The game dropped North Dakota State to 1-8 on the season.

Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin led K-State with 10 kills on .562 hitting along with five block assists. In relief of senior setter Gabby Guerre, freshman setter Stacey Spiegelberg contributed 24 assists and seven digs.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the match gave some younger players a chance to shine.

Pacing the Cats Team Statistical Leaders

- Sandy Werner and Lisa Martin, 10 kills each
- Stacey Spiegelberg, 24 assists
- Angie Lastra, 15 digs
- Lisa Martin, 5 block assists

"I was excited about the fact that, for a great portion of the match, I thought some of our younger players played well," Fritz said. "We were able to get Stacey some time, we were able to put (junior outside hitter) Katie Stanzel on the left side and rest (senior outside hitter) Vali (Hejjas) a little bit."

Spiegelberg said the opportunity for significant playing time will help her this season and in the future.

"I was just excited to get out there and be able to play," she said.

"I just wanted to get a chance to get a feel for the team and get a feel for the court, so next year when Gabby leaves and I step into that role, I'll have some experience going into that."

Freshman libero Angie Lastra hits a dig during the second game of their match against North Dakota State on Thursday evening. Earlier this week, Lastra became the first-ever libero to be named Big 12 Player of the week.

Martin said the team was especially motivated for the match after Wednesday's loss.

"I expected us to come back with something," she said. "(Wednesday) was really disappointing and pretty embarrassing, so it was important for us to come back and play well."

After Thursday's match concluded a 10-match, 16-day stretch, the Wildcats will have almost a week off before getting back into the Big 12 Conference mix at home against Texas A&M next Wednesday.

Fritz said the break couldn't have come at a better time. "More than anything else right now, we need rest," she said.

"Over the last 10 matches, we've been able to identify where we're good and where we're not good."

1st dates worth the anxiety

LACEY STORER

The first date, which once was the definitive first step in relationships, is seemingly becoming obsolete, an unnecessary step.

The first date is dying.

I've heard convincing reasons as to why people don't date anymore. People say it's less nerve-racking to just hang out with someone.

Hanging out provides a more casual and relaxed atmosphere in which to get to know someone. In your natural settings you let your guard down and the real you out. There's less pressure for everything to go right or for the night to be all romance.

I agree the first date can be nervewracking, but to me this is part of the fun.

I clearly remember the afternoon, two and a half years ago, before going on my first date with my (now ex-) boyfriend, Joel. I was so nervous I couldn't sit still the entire day. One of my sorority sisters, seeing my agitated state, asked "What is wrong with you?" All I could do was smile as my friend replied, "She has a date tonight."

Yes, I was about to throw up waiting for him to come up to my residence hall room. Yes, I was worried the date would be three hours of silence or he'd turn out to be a weird pervert. But that just made it all the more better when things went well and that date became the first of many.

Plus, hanging out isn't always the laid back experience you expect. Talking strictly from a girl's view, there's few things worse than going to hang out with a new guy and realizing he's not someone you want to be around.

And as you're contemplating how realistic of a plan it would be to sneak out the bathroom window undetected, he leans over and starts to put the moves on you. Ahhhh!

Uncomfortable as some dates might be, this would not happen to you if you were in a public place.

A date signifies the beginning of something. It's telling them "I'm interested enough to take a risk and go out with you."

It lets the person you're crushing on know you like them enough to be seen out in public with them and to spend a little money on them.

And yes, I know money is a factor for guys. But guys, you need to realize that we don't always want a dozen roses and six courses at Harry's. Hell, I bet some girls would be happy with Pita Pit and Digital Shelf.

As my roommate Monica put it, "I don't want a whole big production, but just the thought of a date is nice."

In the end, it all comes down to one thing: that high you get from knowing someone wants to be with you enough to formally go on a date with you. Guys, don't you feel studly after you get off the phone with that hot girl and she said "yes?" Girls, don't you get giddy and dance around after he finally calls you for a movie?

To me, this is what makes all of the nerves and awkwardness worth it. It's that high, that rush of emotion. That thing that makes you smile when you realize, hey, you've got a date.

Eight bands will be fighting over $800 tonight.

The 18th Annual Opus Band Competition, sponsored by the Union Program Council, starts at 5 tonight in the Bosco Student Plaza, and Miguel Caraballo, senior in music, said he is excited his band, the Rest of Us, will finally have a chance to compete.

"We've never competed in Opus before," Caraballo said. "Every single year it ends up we can't. One year we had to reschedule a show and last year we were breaking in a new guitarist."

Caraballo said a battle of the bands setting is different than a normal concert setting.

He said he knows some of the bands playing, and despite most of them being quality bands, one in particular has him a little nervous.

"The U.N.I.T.," Caraballo said. "We've been good friends, but they are really good."

"This is different than a normal concert. It's a lot faster, and while you're performing you're constantly thinking: 'What do the judges think?' instead of just rocking out. Normally local bands try to help each other out. I hope it doesn't get too competitive."

Aaron Graversen, vocalist and saxophonist for the U.N.I.T., said despite their group evolving through the year, they are still confident in defending their victory in last year's Opus.

"I think we're pretty confident," Graversen, senior in music education, said. "The songs are ones we've played for a while. We're not very nervous, but it's up to the judges and what they think."

"Expect to see a lot of variety," Traxson, junior in mass communications, said. "The U.N.I.T. and Raging Hormones bring in a jazz, funk, ska-type feel. Addictive Behavior will bring some pop rock along with other bands having sounds of their own."

"They will have 25 minutes to play compared to last year's measly 20 minutes. Also, with good weather and UPC After Hours also being outside, a good turnout is hopeful."

Graversen said some bands

"I'd have to say that bands shouldn't strive to be something they're not," Graversen said.

Graversen said the competition is a good opportunity to see some quality local music.

"It's a good chance to support local music," Graversen said.

Johnny Ramone dead

Johnny Ramone, guitarist and co-founder of the seminal punk band "The Ramones" that influenced a generation of rockers, has died. He was 55.

Ramone, who had been fighting a five-year battle with prostate cancer, died in his sleep Wednesday afternoon at his Los Angeles home, said the band's artistic director Arturo Vega.

"He was the guy with a strategy. He was the guy who not only looked after the band's interest but he also was their defender," Vega said in a telephone interview from New York.

Jazz trumpeter to swing, sway crowds Saturday

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For jazz trumpeter Darryl White, playing the trumpet is just another passion.

White said he never planned on playing the trumpet professionally, it sort of just happened.

"I've been playing the trumpet since I was about 10," White said. "Growing up, I did all the things normal boys did, play baseball and wrestle, and playing (music) was just one of the 15 other things I was doing."

"It wasn't ever really a decision, because music has always been a part of my life, whether it be through church or the marching band."

"I guess if you do something long enough you can do it well."

White will be the second performer in the Swing City Jazz performance series, Saturday night, at the Manhattan Arts Center.

White said people can expect some jazz as well as other types of music.

"(The audience) can expect some straight-ahead contemporary jazz," White said. "Some critics have referred to it as a 'throw back to the hard bop era.' So people can expect music from that era."

"But I won't limit to just one style of music. I will sprinkle other stuff in there, too."

Brady Miller, program and marketing director for the center, said the series doesn't just attract jazz fans.

"It's a series that's been going on for several years," Miller said.

"It's popular for all ages. There are student prices and we see several students come through."

"It's been described more as a jazz club feel, because we put up some tables. It's a successful series, and it's a very casual event."

Miller said the jazz concerts do well and are always full. He said several people are excited about White's performance.

Wayne Goins, director of jazz at K-State and creator of Swing City Jazz, said he is excited to see White perform.

"Darryl (White) is a good friend of mine and a fantastic trumpet player," Goins said. "We've had him here before, and the crowd was very enthusiastic."

"He's so talented. We have sax and piano players in this area, but trumpet players in this area are rare."

"We're lucky to have him because it's a short list."

Goins said White has a great stage presence and is fantastic at what he does.

"He has such a command of the instrument," Goins said.

"He has such a captivating style. He can really conjure up players like Freddy Hubbard and Miles Davis."

Hurricane Ivan ravages Gulf Coast

By Jay Reeves
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GULF SHORES, Ala. — Hurricane Ivan slammed into the Gulf Coast early Thursday with 130 mph wind, launching tornadoes, washing out a major bridge and hurling metal signs through the night. At least 12 U.S. deaths were blamed on the storm, but officials said the toll and the damage could have been even worse.

Up to 15 inches of rain were expected as the storm moved inland. It weakened by late morning, but remained a Category 1 hurricane with wind of 75 mph eight hours after its 3 a.m. landfall.

Ivan already had killed 68 as it passed through the Caribbean, weeks after Hurricanes Charley and Frances tore through on their treks to Florida, causing dozens of deaths and billions of dollars in damage.

When Ivan hit the Gulf Coast, it knocked out power to hundreds of thousands of people, toppled trees and ripped off roofs. In the beach resort town of Gulf Shores, where the storm's eye came ashore, the sky glowed bright green as electrical transformers blew.

Still, many of the millions of Gulf Coast residents who spent a frightening night in shelters and boarded-up homes emerged Thursday morning to find that Ivan was not the catastrophe they had feared.

"Ivan was nowhere near as bad as Frederic — not even close," Mobile Police Chief Sam

Cochran said, referring to the 1979 storm that devastated the Alabama coast.

"I think we were really spared and blessed."

New Orleans, especially vulnerable to storms because much of it lies below sea level, had wind and just a touch of rain.

"Leaves in the pool — that's it," said Shane Eschete, assistant general manager of the Inn on Bourbon Street. "It won't take us long to clean that up."

Downtown Mobile was deserted early Thursday. Historic, oak-tree-lined Government Street was blocked with downed tree limbs, metal signs, roofing material and other debris.

"We were wondering at first if we made the right choice or not," said Marc Oliver, 38, who rode out the storm with his family in Mobile, moving from room to room as the wind shifted.

President Bush signed disaster declarations Thursday for Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, and was awaiting paperwork from Florida, press secretary Scott McClellan said.

In Florida, two people were killed and more than 200 homes were damaged when at least five tornadoes roared through Bay County. Another tornado killed five people when it struck homes in Blountstown, Fla., and an 8-year-old girl died after being crushed by a tree that fell onto her mobile home in Milton, Fla. Her parents were unharmed.

Award-winning author visits Manhattan

Novel set in Kansas town

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An award-winning author visited Manhattan this week.

Laura Moriarty, author of the novel "The Center of Everything," spoke at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Manhattan Public Library.

The session included both Moriarty reading passages from the book and interactive discussion between the audience and Moriarty.

The novel is based in a fictitious Kansas town, and follows the struggles of a young girl growing up in the area.

"I tried to capture the beauty of the area that is so often overlooked," Moriarty said. "It is so lovely here."

The local setting of the book allowed many area readers to relate to the novel and its characters.

One audience member related that she grew up in a town much like the one featured in the novel, and therefore the characters and their interactions were very real to her.

Other comments included an appreciation for the recognition Moriarty brings to the struggles of other people.

Moriarty's casual style and humor came through in the session as she discussed how she created her characters, settings and gathered facts and observations from her own life.

"I worked at McDonald's when I was young," Moriarty said. "And it was good for me, like broccoli."

Moriarty also gained insight for the novel from her work as both a teacher and social worker.

Moriarty said she has lived in numerous states, but spent much of her life in Lawrence, Kan., and refers to it as home. Moriarty earned her master's degree in 2000 from the University of Kansas. She also received the George Bennet Fellowship for Creative Writing.

Moriarty said she appreciated the chance to look back at her previous novel during the session, now that her focus is primarily on her next novel.

"I have not tried to sell my next novel yet," Moriarty said, "but I hope to finish it in December."

Bush's character under attack in Democrats' ad

Republican campaign spokesman says strategy a cover for Kerry's out-of-sync vision

By Lix Sidoti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Democratic Party questions President Bush's credibility on Iraq and the economy in a new campaign ad showing the Republican declaring an end to major combat while standing on an aircraft carrier adorned with a "Mission Accomplished" banner.

"How can you solve problems when you won't even admit they're there?" asks the ad, which will start running Friday in battleground states and on national cable networks.

The commercial is the first of the general election by the national parties or the presidential campaigns to show Bush on the USS Abraham Lincoln in May 2003. In the ad, Bush says: "Major combat operations in Iraq have ended. The United States and our allies have prevailed."

Showing Bush in a flight suit hugging Navy pilots, the ad then says that since the president made that declaration, "867 more American soldiers have been killed in Iraq" and the war has cost "$100 billion."

Switching to the other top issue in the presidential campaign, the ad then shows Bush saying "the economy is strong. The economy is getting better." Newspaper headlines tell a different story: "Sharp rise in poverty reported," "Record 45 million people lack coverage," "The Gap in Wages is Growing Again for U.S. Workers."

The ad is the latest effort by the party to question Bush's character. Presidential challenger John Kerry's campaign, recently reshuffled to include former ad-

"John Kerry's campaign is continuing with its strategy of trying to tear down the president's record because it can't run on John Kerry's 20-year record in the Senate or John Kerry's vision for the future."

Steve Schmidt
BUSH CAMPAIGN SPOKESMAN

visers to President Clinton, has polls and focus groups suggesting that the Democrat can't win unless he undermines Bush's credibility.

In that effort, Kerry's campaign also rolled out an ad Thursday challenging Bush's depiction of Kerry's health care plan as government controlled. "George Bush's health care attack against John Kerry: Not true," Kerry's ad says. Bush's campaign criticized Democrats for "fundamentally misleading" voters through the ads.

"John Kerry's campaign is continuing with its strategy of trying to tear down the president's record because it can't run on John Kerry's 20-year record in the Senate or John Kerry's vision for the future because it's out of the mainstream," said Steve Schmidt, a Bush campaign spokesman.

Schmidt said the Iraq mission indeed was accomplished for the troops aboard the USS Abraham Lincoln and contended that Kerry had no credibility on Iraq given "his nine positions on the issue."

Ellen Moran, who heads up the Democratic National Committee's independent expenditure office, said voters know Bush made mistakes and that he won't own up to them. "Clearly, he was unprepared. Clearly, he made a mistake and he needs to be held accountable," she said.

Moran's office, which can't coordinate with Kerry's campaign, is spending roughly $7 million over the next week to run ads on national cable networks and in 16 battleground states, including New Mexico. The DNC is going back on the air there after a week-long hiatus.

Kerry ran a commercial last November in Iowa and New Hampshire during the Democratic primary that featured clips of Bush aboard the aircraft carrier. In that ad, Kerry was portrayed as the only Democrat who could challenge the commander in chief.

Meanwhile, the liberal political action committee MoveOn.org started running an ad Thursday in four states and nationally on CNN that says of Bush: "He said 'Mission Accomplished,' yet almost every day more soldiers die."

The anti-Kerry group Swift Boat Veterans for Truth has rolled out a spot for New Mexico and Nevada that asks about Kerry. "Can you trust anything he says?"

SUPERINTENDENT | Search procedure uncertain

Dave Colburn, school board member since July 2003, said the controversy surrounding Little's time in Manhattan wasn't cited as a reason for her announcement.

"She did not elaborate on what her reasons were other than she felt like it was a time to retire," Colburn said. "She has worked tirelessly for our school district, but not everybody has appreciated that, but I have. We have accomplished a lot of things."

In addition to the accomplishments, there have been tough decisions for Little and the board in the past three years.

"We have cut the budget and closed schools — that's not easy work," Colburn said. "She took a lot of shots for that, but that's stuff that had to be done."

Jim Shroyer, four-year board member, said Little had a lot against her before she even started including questions about her $140,000 salary.

"To Dr. Little's credit, she came into this district with declining enrollment, so we were already heading down that path," he said. "She had a tough go because of the perceived salary issues and being a woman in this district," she said.

"She had a rough go and Manhattan can be a tough town, and the school board can be a pretty tough group. Despite all that, I felt like I knew that although we had differences, she had the best interest of the school district in mind when she made her recommendations. She was willing to stick her neck out on many occasions. She showed a lot of courage."

Michele Jones, USD 383 communications representative, said the difficulties within the district might have contributed to Little's decision.

"I don't know how it couldn't, but from just talking to her, this is just the right time in her life to retire," Jones said. "Her husband could have retired a few years ago, and it's just the right time in their lives to be able to move on and travel."

The next step for the board is outlining a search procedure. In 2001, a consulting firm was hired after the retirement of former superintendent Dan Yunk. The cost of the superintendent search totaled more than $22,000.

But with the budget already in crisis, this search will be done differently, Colburn said.

"We hired a consultant last time, and my guess is the board will try to do it themselves in order to save money," he said.

Jones said the board also has the option of using the services of the Kansas Association of School Boards, which costs less than a consulting firm.

The board hasn't determined contract guidelines or a search procedure.

"The first thing we have to do is develop a timeline, and we've got a lot of work ahead of us," Colburn said. "We have to set up criteria and figure out what kind of contract we want to offer. We obviously haven't had time to talk about that yet."

Shroyer said the most important part of the search is finding someone who is ready to solve problems.

"We have to select someone that is willing and wants to be here and wants to take a challenge," he said.

While a superintendent has to be in place next July, the board has some time to conduct a search, Jones said.

"It depends on the timeline they set as to how fast they want it to go or what parts of the process they want to go faster or slower. I would assume that they would want to have the finalists chosen by May. That's just a ballpark figure."

"We've pretty much got the whole school year now."

And the timing of her announcement proves Little cares for the district, Shroyer said.

"She showed a lot of class in this announcement of her retirement at this point as to later in the school year," he said. "This, to me, shows the concern she has for the district. She could have waited, but this will give us plenty of time to advertise and go through a search for a new superintendent. That shows a lot of class."

REQUIREMENTS | Officials stress GPA importance

students have to have at least a 3.0.

To stay in office, senators must have at least a 2.0 GPA, while members of the Union Governing Board must have at least a 2.5 GPA, Urkevich said.

"I think the requirements are in place for a good reason," she said. "We are here at K-State first of all for academics, and if students can't maintain their GPA and be involved, their priorities probably need to be shifted somewhere else."

The Golden Key National Honor Society has an academic requirement for admittance, but after students are admitted, they are not required to maintain a certain GPA, Golden Key Adviser Donita Whitney-Bammerlin said.

"The guidelines state that students must be in the top 15 percent of their class," she said. "Once a student is in Golden Key, they are a member. We don't check up on their GPAs."

Whitney-Bammerlin said because students must be at least a junior to join Golden Key, they usually already have developed their study habits.

"By their junior or senior year they may get in more as-tiring classes and that may cause their GPA to fluctuate," she said.

research compliance, said the projected cost for the building is about $52 million and it will be completed by August 2006.

Three types of research will be conducted in the building including research on plant diseases, food safety, and food animal infectious diseases, Jaax said.

Jim Stack, director of the Great Plains Diagnostic Network, said the plant research area will examine plant pathogens.

"Much like humans and animals there are a variety of pathogens like fungi, bacteria and viruses that attack plants," he said.

Some pathogens might affect plant growth or quality, while others may have more serious effects, Stack said.

"We have other pathogens, for instance some fungi, that get into the plant compounds themselves and can be toxic and passed on to livestock and humans," he said.

Stack said the key to successful management of pathogens, no matter how they are introduced, is rapid detection and early response.

"Managing diseases impacts how much you pay for your food at the grocery store," he said. "If we don't manage this, the price of food is going to go way up."

In the food safety area of the facility, the entire process of meat and food production will be examined, said Associate Professor of Animal Science Randy Phebus.

"What you see at any of the big meat processing companies, we will be able to mimic that but on a much smaller scale," he said.

center-left opposition, urged the government to take a position.

"Other governments felt a duty to express themselves with clear words. As usual, Italy is an exception from which we would like to hear a position clearly and urgently," Fioroni told the country's ANSA news agency.

Analyst Germano Dottori of the Center for Strategic Studies in Rome said he suspected Annan was trying to undermine President Bush before the U.S. elections.

"The timing cannot be explained otherwise. Why would you make a statement like this now, when it is in everybody's interest to stabilize the situation?" Dottori said.

France and Germany, which led the opposition to the war, declined to reopen the debate that split the Atlantic alliance.

"You know our position," French Foreign Ministry spokesman Herve Ladsous said when asked to comment on Annan's comments. "We had the opportunity at the time to express ourselves very clearly."

French lawmaker Axel Poniatowski, a member of President Jacques Chirac's party, said France's reluctance to publicly react to Annan's position showed that the debate on the legality of the war is over.

"This problem has passed into history," Poniatowski told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. "The issue today is how do we get out of the Iraqi situation and what do we do against terrorism."

But Spain — whose current government opposed the war and withdrew its troops from Iraq after being elected in March — said Annan's comments came as no surprise.

"We're not surprised by Annan's comments. That's what Spain said and that's why we pulled out the troops," government spokesman Javier Valenzuela said.

Australian Prime Minister John Howard — a staunch U.S. supporter who defied widespread public anger to participate in the invasion — said the military action was "entirely legal."

A previous Security Council resolution had warned Iraq to be prepared for "serious consequences" if it didn't meet U.N. obligations, but the United States dropped an attempt to get a new resolution explicitly approving the March 2003 invasion when it became clear the measure would not pass.

"I hope we do not see another Iraq-type operation for a long time — without U.N. approval and much broader support from the international community," Annan told the BBC.

British Trade and Industry Secretary Patricia Hewitt said she also disagreed with Annan.

"There have always been different views on that matter and ... of course I respect his views on this matter and I regret that we disagree with them," Hewitt told BBC radio, adding the important thing now was to help Iraqis achieve "a safe, secure, democratic Iraq."

Japan's top government spokesman, Chief Cabinet Secretary Hiroyuki Hosoda, said his country, also a U.S. supporter in Iraq, would seek clarification about Annan's remarks. Annan said the wave of violence engulfing Iraq puts in doubt the national elections scheduled for January.

The road ahead

Will the Wildcats go last year's route or struggle?

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2004 K-State Wildcats have hit a fork in the road. One road leads toward the 2001 season, when K-State finished out the year 4-5 after its first loss to Oklahoma on the way to a 6-6 record. The other route takes them more in the direction of 2003, when the Wildcats won seven of their last 10 games after their first loss and won the Big 12 Conference championship.

PLAYER TO WATCH

In their first two games, the Ragin' Cajuns gave up an average of 240 yards rushing per game. With inconsistent play at quarterback and Dylan Meier nursing injuries, Darren Sproles will get more than the 11 carries and 37 yards he got last Saturday.

Breaking down the Big 12

Be careful not to judge Big 12 North teams just yet

Colorado is 2-0, and Kansas and Iowa State are tied for No. 10 in the country in scoring defense.

The three teams most "experts" picked to contend for the Big 12 North Division crown — Missouri, K-State and Nebraska — are reeling after upset losses last weekend, and no team in the division is ranked in the Associated Press Top 25.

To quote the immortal Mr. Belding of "Saved by the Bell" fame, "Hey, hey, hey, WHAT is going on here?"

In the early stages of this college football season, to say the Big 12 North has been a little interesting is an understatement.

Though the opening two weekends exposed weaknesses and showcased strengths, history and logic should tell us it's a little too early to be jumping on or off any bandwagons yet.

Just take a look at last year's Wildcats.

But since we have a few weeks until K-State visits Texas A&M in its conference opener, let's analyze the fun mess that is the Big 12 North.

■ Colorado (2-0):

Apparently, Coach Gary Barnett and his players didn't get the memo saying there was no chance this team could shake off the mess that plagued their offseason.

Credit Colorado's defense for the Buffaloes' wins over Colorado State at home and Washington State on the road.

Sophomore defensive end Alex Ligon earned conference defensive player of the week honors after collecting seven tackles — four for losses — three sacks and a forced fumble in last weekend's 20-12 win over Washington State.

And don't forget the No. 4 rushing defense in the nation's goal line stand at the end of the fourth quarter against Colorado State, which preserved the win.

The Oct. 2 conference opener at Missouri will provide a good gauge on the Buffaloes' potential for the rest of the year.

■ Kansas (2-0):

You've heard the whispers — I know I

See WITT Page 7

South Division faces business as usual this year

As the Big 12 Conference season gets set to start in a couple of weeks, one thing is becoming clear. The South Division is carrying the conference and is being forced to drag its ugly little stepbrother, the North Division, around to ensure the Big 12 is still considered one of the best in the nation.

The South has the only schools representing the conference in the Associated Press Top 25 Poll — No. 2 Oklahoma and No. 6 Texas. The Big 12 Player of the Week awards have been dominated by the South, with five of the seven recipients coming from the division.

Last week, all but one Big 12 South school won while the North went 2-4, which included Nebraska losing to Southern Mississippi and Missouri losing to Troy State.

Unlike the North, the South isn't full of surprises, and the usual suspects will be fighting for the chance to play in the Big 12 championship game in Kansas City.

■ Oklahoma (2-0):

As much as I hate to admit it, the road to the Big 12 South title goes right through Norman, Okla.

The Sooners are on a roll, scoring 83 points in their last two games. Senior quarterback and reigning Heisman Trophy-winner Jason White already has thrown five touchdown passes and is surrounded by talented running backs and wide receivers.

Despite a powerful offense, the Oklahoma defense hasn't been as dominant as in years past. The Sooners gave up an average of 275 yards of total offense in the first two games, and allowed Bowling Green to score 24 points in week one of the season.

Like every year, the Sooners' season comes down to their Oct. 9 game against Texas — a game in which they have won for four consecutive years and likely will win again.

■ Texas (2-0):

Coach Mack Brown's team leads the nation in rushing at 386 yards per game and has a Heisman candidate in junior running back, Cedric Benson. Benson is third in the nation with 369 rushing yards in two games and was named

Edge

OFFENSE

Edge

✓ The Wildcats gained only 180 yards against Fresno State, and Darren Sproles was limited to 37 yards on 11 carries. The offense did seem to move the ball better with quarterback Dylan Meier, but another injury might sideline him again Saturday. The line, the receivers and the quarterbacks — Meier or sophomore Allen Webb — will have to step it up. As last week's performance can attest, Darren can't do it all by himself. That said, K-State will be ok this week against Louisiana-Lafayette's shaky rush defense.

✗ The Ragin' Cajuns come in averaging 17 points and 349 yards a game and are led by quarterback Jerry Babb and wide receiver Bill Samps. Even after the departure of their two leading receivers in 2003, the Cajuns have been successful through the air, averaging 251.5 yards per game passing with two touchdowns. But this is a team that only put up 14 against Northwestern State. K-State's defense couldn't ask for a better confidence-builder after last week's shellacking at the hands of Fresno State.

DEFENSE

✓ Lately, the K-State defense has played less-than-stellar football, and that will have to change once conference play begins. After yielding 400 yards and 45 points to the Bulldogs, this unit is struggling to find answers. Senior cornerback Cedrick Williams might be a shut-down cover guy, but somebody has to stop the opposing offense's other ten players. The Wildcats will be good enough to get the job done this week, but major improvements must be made across the board.

✗ The Cajuns have struggled stopping the run thus far this season, which doesn't bode well for them this weekend. Last week, they surrendered 258 yards rushing to Louisiana Tech's Ryan Moats. And that's not the only concern for a unit that gave up 439 yards a game last year to finish last in the Sun Belt Conference. They've done somewhat better in two games this season, yielding 420 yards a game but only allowing 15.5 points. Don't expect that trend to continue Saturday against K-State.

SPECIAL TEAMS

✓ Punting became a major issue last weekend as junior Jesse Martinez and freshman Tim Reyer combined to average only 30.8 yards on eight punts. The rest of the special teams play was adequate, with Sproles' 79-yard kickoff return in the second half a bright spot in the game.

✗ This unit is mediocre at best. On the season, the Cajuns have punted for an average of 33.8 yards, returned kickoffs for 19.4 yards per return and connected on two of four field goal attempts. Their opponents have averaged 25.9 and 12.2 yards on kickoff and punt returns, respectively.

INTANGIBLES

✓ First, the Wildcats should be motivated to bounce back from last week's loss. Second, the game is at KSU Stadium.

✗ They come with nothing to lose. They just watched Fresno State come into Manhattan and get a win last week.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 33 - LOUISIANA-LAFAYETTE 12

This game could be ugly, but K-State gets the win. The Wildcats simply have superior talent all over the field. In past years, this game would have "blow-out" written all over it. But the Wildcats found themselves on the wrong end of the only blow-out they were involved in this season.

Wildcats move on after Fresno loss

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats close out their non-conference schedule against Louisiana-Lafayette at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

The Wildcats (1-1) are looking to get back on the winning track against the Ragin' Cajuns (1-1) after losing to Fresno State 45-21 last weekend.

The loss was the worst non-conference defeat at home since 1988, when K-State lost to Iowa, 45-10. The Wildcats' lackluster performance also knocked them out of the Associated Press Top 25 Poll for the first time since November 2003.

Junior tackle Jeromey Clary said everyone on the team took the loss to heart, but are trying to move on.

"Everybody took it as a slap in the face, and I think a lot of people stepped up (during practice), and we are going to have a really good game this weekend," Clary said.

K-State looked sluggish against Fresno State, and the Bulldogs used their speed to exploit the Wildcats' offense and defense. The Wildcats only mustered 180 total yards of offense, while Fresno State torched the defense for 400 yards of total offense. The Bulldogs also held senior Heisman Trophy-hopeful, Darren Sproles to 37 yards rushing.

K-State's punters didn't help the cause, only averaging 30 yards per punt, giving Fresno State an average start on the Wildcats' 45 yard-line.

Coach Bill Snyder said no matter the outcome, his team must correct its mistakes.

"Whether it's with a win or loss, we try to identify what the concerns and problems are," Snyder said. "Then you have to devise the best plan you possibly can in order to address and correct all of the problems and issues."

The Wildcats were hampered by injuries in the game, with sophomore starting quarterback Dylan Meier sidelined for most of the game. K-State also was without junior line-backer Ted Sims.

"Whether you like it or not, it was reality, and we have to live with that," Meier said. "The bottom line is, we didn't get the job done, and we are looking to get the job done this Saturday."

Tuesday, Snyder said at his weekly press conference Meier is expected to start, but Sims will not be available for the third straight game.

Louisiana-Lafayette is coming off a 24-20 loss to Louisiana Tech.

At one point, the Ragin' Cajuns were down 17-0, but stormed back to take a 20-17 lead behind sophomore Entering its last non-conference game before Big 12 play begins in two weeks, question marks linger throughout the Wildcat football program, but perhaps none are more prevalent than the one at quarterback.

Sophomore Dylan Meier established himself as the No. 1 quarterback prior to the season's start, but a shoulder injury suffered Sept. 4 against Western Kentucky and a hand injury sustained last Saturday against Fresno State which sidelined him for the second half, has left the starting position an uncertainty from week to week.

At Tuesday's press conference, Coach Bill Snyder said Meier should start Saturday.

"It is my understanding that he will be able to play this Saturday," Snyder said. "He is going to practice this afternoon and, unless if there is something that I am unaware of, he will play on Saturday."

However, the week before the Fresno State game, Snyder also said Meier likely would start only to have sophomore Allen Webb make his first collegiate start for the Wildcats.

In Meier's place, Webb completed just four of 13 passes for 30 yards in the Wildcats' 45-21 loss.

"Obviously, I could have done some things better, and so could the team as a whole," Webb said. "It's a learning experience."

With injuries plaguing Meier and inconsistency displayed by Webb, coaches have not ruled out the possibility of true freshman Allan Evridge getting onto the field.

A dual-threat, left-handed quarterback out of Papillion-LaVista High School in Nebraska, Evridge has caught the attention of the coaching staff.

In his senior season, Evridge passed for 1,400 yards and rushed for 587, averaging 427 yards of total offense per game. Snyder said a redshirt is unlikely for Evridge.

"He just needs to know that when the time comes, be ready," Snyder said at Tuesday's press conference. "When is that time, I have no idea."

"We didn't know what he would be like, just like any youngster, until he got here. I saw in him a young guy that worked hard and attempted to gain as much knowledge as he could, and I appreciate that about him."

In its first two games, K-State has a total of 682 yards of total offense. Only 317 of those yards are passing, which places the Wildcats ninth in the Big 12 and only tops Colorado in the North division.

Dennis gets chance at home state

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Davin Dennis has never played a game in his home state as a member of the K-State football team, but he's seen plenty of action there as a Wildcat.

Dennis' high school team in St. James, La., also was called the Wildcats.

Now the junior wide receiver has a chance Saturday to compete against a team from the Bayou State when Louisiana-Lafayette comes to town.

Dennis said the game is no different from any other, but he is looking forward to playing a team from close to home.

"Every game is a big game," he said. "I don't really know any of the guys on their team, but some of them have heard of me, so it would be nice for me to have a big game against them."

Dennis, who provided a lone bright spot for the receiving corps last week with a 47-yard touchdown catch, said the receivers still are competing and continuing to gel as a unit.

"We've got a lot of talent, just right now we still haven't established that one guy yet. So

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Wide receiver Davin Dennis dives to attempt a catch during the third quarter of the Western Kentucky game. Dennis was unsuccessful in the attempt.

we're just using combinations of guys trying to find (success)," he said.

That "one guy" could end up being Dennis.

After hauling in four touchdowns and averaging 18.4 yards per catch last season — including a break-out seven-catch, 113-yard performance in the Fiesta Bowl — Dennis entered 2004 as one of the most experienced K-State wideouts alongside senior Antoine Polite.

However, Dennis and Polite's numbers have fallen short of some expectations. Dennis' touchdown against Fresno State was his lone catch on the day, as the pair combined for two catches and 52 yards.

'Special' struggles

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In their loss to Fresno State last weekend, not a whole lot went right for the Wildcats, and special teams' play was no different.

"The kicking game was atrocious, our ability to punt was non-existent," Coach Bill Snyder said. "Our inability to cover punts and kicks was inexcusable."

The Wildcats' special teams unit has seen its struggles in both of K-State's games thus far this season. Here are a few highs, and lows for K-State.

■ K-State is last in the Big 12 in punt return yards.

■ K-State is last in the Big 12 in average yards per punt with 31.6.

■ Senior place-kicker Joe Rheim is 2-of-2 on field goals and 6-of-6 on PATs.

■ Tim Meyer replaced Jesse Martinez as the starting punter for this Saturday's game. Martinez punted seven times against Fresno State, two of them for only 14 and 17 yards.

Wildcats want more balanced attack in play

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior running back Darren Sproles' first two games could best be described as polar opposites.

Against Western Kentucky, Sproles amassed 221 yards on 42 carries. It marked the fourth time in six games Sproles went for over 200 yards rushing and the second time in his career he carried the ball more than 40 times.

Then, last week against Fresno State, the Bulldogs' made Sproles the focal point of their aggressive defense, and his numbers suffered. Sproles gained 37 yards on 11 carries, not once finding the end zone.

Co-offensive coordinator Greg Peterson said Sproles must touch the ball more against Louisiana-Lafayette.

"We've got to get him carries," Peterson said. "He's got to be a guy that's going to carry the football for us."

Against Fresno State, with the Wildcats falling increasingly behind, the K-State offense shifted more toward the passing game to save time and move the ball more quickly.

Junior right tackle Jerome Clary said he would have rather seen the ball put in Sproles' hands, so he could make a big play.

"I wish he had more carries," Clary said. "He's a great running back, but he can't get that many yards off of 11 carries."

With opposing defenses keying in on Sproles, Peterson said all eleven Wildcats on the field need to realize their mistakes and step up in order for the offense to generate yards and score points.

"We watched some of the good plays, and we watched some of the not-so-good plays together, so everybody understands that it takes eleven to have good things happen," Peterson said.

have. Kansas' annihilation of Toledo 63-14, coupled with K-State's loss to Fresno State last Saturday, has people around here worried.

Some think the Jayhawks might give the Wildcats a game this year or — gasp — win.

Now, I don't think we need to go as far as to say Kansas could break from years' of embarrassing losses to the Cats when they meet Oct. 9, but as of now KU is looking pretty good.

The Jayhawk defense, which was horrible much of last year, is only giving up 8.5 points per game, and sophomore quarterback Adam Barmann and the offense were almost perfect against Toledo.

However, Kansas has a brutal schedule ahead including a visit to Oklahoma and Texas at home in addition to its intra-division clashes.

Kansas will win Saturday at Northwestern, but I get the feeling punching the Jayhawks' ticket to a bowl game is a little premature.

■ Iowa State (1-1):

To many schools — like ours — a 1-1 record after two games is not something to cheer about.

If I was a Cyclone fan, I'd be dancing on the streets.

To be a little blunt, Iowa State football has been a joke since star quarterback Seneca Wallace left a couple years back.

Evidence? Last year's 2-10 season.

But there is hope in Ames, as the Cyclones shutout Northern Iowa in week one and gave the No. 16 Iowa Hawkeyes a scare last weekend 17-10.

A bowl game is still an unrealistic dream, but it looks like Iowa State is getting somewhere.

■ Nebraska (1-1):

Last Saturday's loss to Southern Mississippi at home provided the Husker Nation with a much-needed slap to the face.

People, you can't switch from the option to a West Coast offense in one year and expect everything to go smoothly.

Quarterback Joe Dailey has shown he's a fan of giving the ball to the other team, and that just can't happen for Nebraska to be successful.

Saturday's game at Pittsburgh screams trouble for the Cornhuskers and Coach Bill Callahan.

How long until the Husker Nation starts getting impatient?

■ Missouri (1-1):

I'm not going to lie. Last Thursday's Troy State win over Missouri was the highlight of my week.

The preseason hype around Missouri and Brad Smith was very overblown, as the game showcased.

Missouri can be a solid team, but Brad Smith can only do so much when the rest of the team is not that good.

The Tigers should dominate Ball State this weekend, but a bumpy road still lies in front of Smith and his crew.

■ K-State (1-1):

I don't have much to say about the Wildcats.

They just have to get their stuff together.

We will see the true character of this team starting Saturday against Louisiana-Lafayette.

Will K-State come out with a renewed fire or just go through the motions?

I want to say the Cats can turn things around and take the Big 12 North at the end of the year, but the last time I predicted good things for K-State — see last Gameday — it didn't turn out so well.

So I say let's just watch. As they say: "Wildcats, show me something."

GIRARD | Teams possess talent

Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week after racking up 188 yards on 29 carries in the Longhorns' win against Arkansas.

Oh, and they also have this guy named Vince Young. Probably the most exciting player in the Big 12.

Texas' defense is anchored by arguably the best defensive player in the nation, senior linebacker Derrick Johnson. Johnson forced four fumbles in the Longhorns' two wins, and 16 of his 18 total tackles this season have been solo.

But alas, the Longhorns still have to play the Sooners in the Cotton Bowl, and if they want to win the South and keep Brown as a coach, they'd better beat Oklahoma.

■ Oklahoma State (2-0):

If the Cowboys keep running like they have, they could find themselves playing for a Big 12 South title when Oklahoma comes to Stillwater on Oct. 30.

Okie State has the nation's second leading rusher in junior running back Vernand Morency, who is averaging 222.5 yards rushing per game. The Cowboys are the fourth best rushing team in the nation, averaging 351 yards on the ground per game.

The Cowboys' downfall might be at the quarterback position.

Redshirt freshman quarterback Donovan Woods has only attempted 16 passes, completing five for zero yards. Not great numbers, but they are 2-0.

■ Texas Tech (1-1):

This might be a shock to some, but Texas Tech is leading the nation in passing yardage.

Coach Mike Leach once again has proven it doesn't matter who the quarterback is, they still will throw for a gazillion yards.

Despite a 27-24 loss the New Mexico last week, the Red Raiders threw the ball 70 times for 449 yards.

In two games, senior quarterback Sonny Cumbie already has thrown for 919 yards, which leads the nation.

Sophomore wide receiver Jarrett Hicks is third in the nation in receiving with 17 receptions for 300 yards and two touchdowns in two games.

The Red Raiders might not be in the race for the South title by December, but they certainly will scare a lot of cornerbacks with their passing attack.

■ Texas A&M (1-1):

The Aggies got off to a slow start, losing badly to Utah in week one, but bounced back last weekend with a 31-0 shutout-win over Wyoming.

Junior quarterback Reggie McNeal ranks seventh in the nation in total offense, averaging 318 yard per game.

Texas A&M's Big 12 schedule isn't the most favorable with the Aggies playing K-State, Oklahoma State, Oklahoma and Texas, but Kyle Field in College Station is still one of the toughest places to play.

■ Baylor (1-1):

The Bears are pretty much happy with however many wins the can amass during a given season, but under second-year head coach Guy Morriss, things might be looking up for the Big 12's preverbal doormat.

Morriss, another pass-happy coach, could upset some teams this season and start making the move toward a respectable football program.

The bounce back era

In the last 10 years, Bill Snyder's Wildcats have won 60 percent of their games after their first loss of the season.

Fast facts

Coming off a loss

■ In 1994, K-State started the season 4-0, then dropped two straight, the first to Nebraska at home and Colorado on the road.

■ Ranked No. 1 for three weeks in 1998, K-State lost in double overtime in the Big 12 Championship game to Texas A&M and then to Purdue in the Alamo Bowl.

■ After losing to No. 3 Oklahoma in 2001, the Wildcats lost their next three games, dropping them out of the Top 25. K-State finished the season 6-6.

■ Last year after losing to Marshall at home the Wildcats dropped their next two games. They went on to win seven games in a row before falling in the Fiesta Bowl to Ohio State.

SEASON | Wildcats look to put loss behind them going into 3rd game of season

For the first time in 16 years, the Wildcats (1-1) did not open a season 2-0 after last Saturday's 45-21 loss to Fresno State at KSU Stadium. Fresno State soundly beat the Wildcats with 400 yards of total offense, while K-State only managed 180 total yards on offense.

Coach Bill Snyder said the loss was painful, but the team is not panicking.

"The pain has come, and now it's time to move on," Snyder said. "It doesn't mean it won't linger, but that is not necessarily a bad thing unless it impacts your ability to correct the things that need to be corrected."

In 2001, K-State lost the next three games after its first loss and were outscored a combined 85-49 in those games. Despite the losses, the Wildcats were able to average close to 300 yards of total offense per game.

K-State would get back on track in the seventh and eighth games of the season with a 40-6 win over Kansas and a 42-3 win against Iowa State but lost two of its last four games to finish with a .500 record.

In 2003, the Wildcats' first loss came at the hands of Marshall in the fifth game of the season at KSU Stadium.

K-State would lose its next two games to Texas and Oklahoma State. Then the Wildcats made a considerable turnaround.

The Wildcats rattled off seven straight wins, including an upset of Oklahoma in the Big 12 championship game, on their way to the school's first-ever appearance in a Bowl Championship Series game.

During K-State's run to the Big 12 title and Fiesta Bowl, the Wildcats averaged 38.7 points per game and 467.8 yards of total offense, while the defense allowed just 9.4 points per game and 264.5 total yards of offense.

So what route will this team take?

Senior cornerback David Rose said the mistakes against Fresno State will be corrected when the Wildcats take on Louisiana-Lafayette Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"Most of the mistakes that we made were fundamental mistakes, and once we get those corrected, we will be back on the right track," Rose said. "Right now we are just focused on Louisiana-Lafayette and we can't look further down the road."

Snyder said he believes his team is focused on the task at hand.

"I think they understand what the problems are, and I think they understand what it is we can do," he said.

It's time to bounce back, junior right tackle Jeromey Clary said.

"Teams have their down times and it's not what you do during your down time, it's how you get back up," Clary said. "It was definitely a learning experience. If it is a crossroad, we definitely learned our lesson."

DENNIS | Receiver grows with team members, looks for consistency

Co-offensive coordinator and receivers coach Greg Peterson said despite the recent struggles of Dennis, Polite and the rest of the receiving corps, he thinks the unit can have a successful season.

"We haven't established a go-to-guy so to speak like we've done in the past here," he said. "I still have a lot of confidence in our group, and I still think there's guys who can make plays for us."

"I think it's consistency that we're lacking, and that comes from effort, that comes from playing fast and that's something we're trying to correct this week."

And how does Dennis fit into the equation?

"I thought he had a very, very fine camp," Peterson said. "I thought he made some plays in the first game for us, and he had a big play against Fresno State for a touchdown, but we need more out of Davin as we do out of the whole group," he said.

For Dennis, that simply means continuing his growth as a receiver.

"I need to go out and do what I need to do and just play better and improve everyday," he said.

For a lifelong Wildcat, achieving this goal starts on Saturday.

SPROLES | Team attempts to decrease reliance on running back

One reason cited for Fresno State's success in stopping Sproles was the lack of a K-State aerial attack. With the receivers locked down in man-coverage, the rest of the Bulldog defense was able to fill running lanes more effectively.

Junior wide receiver Davin Dennis said the wide receivers on the team need to find a way to relieve the pressure on Sproles and create more balance within the offense.

"We just need to go out and perform better. We can't just go out and depend on Darren game-in and game-out," Dennis said about the wide receivers' responsibilities.

"We need somebody to balance it out and make it harder on the opponents to play us."

This Saturday, K-State

plays a team in the Ragin' Cajuns that has given up an average of 240.5 yards rushing per game this season.

Against Louisiana Tech last week, the Ragin' Cajuns were shredded by Tech's running back Ryan Moats, who ran for 257 yards and three touchdowns.

"We've got Louisiana-Lafayette coming up this week and its time to move on, it's time to grow up and maybe take some more steps," Clary said.

Dennis said he wants to see more big plays from the entire offense, not just from the ever-consistent Sproles.

"We have to make big plays consistently, not just every once in a while," Dennis said.

"We all need to come through, and then Darren will do his thing."

RAGIN' CAJUNS | Opponent's defense not a concern for Wildcats

quarterback Jerry Babb. Babb finished the day with 327 yards and a touchdown, completing 32 of his 54 passes. Senior wide receiver Bill Sampey caught eight passes for 107 yards and collected his fourth 100-yard receiving game of his career.

"I like Babb," Snyder said. "I think he has a really good knowledge, and he hangs in there. He's a tough young guy, and he can pull it down and get out if he needs to."

Louisiana-Lafayette's defense on the other hand could be a welcome sight for the Wildcats. The Ragin' Cajun defense is giving up 420 yards of total offense per game, with an average of 240 of those yards coming on the ground.

The game will mark only the second meeting between the two schools, with K-State winning the first 34-6 in 1994 in Manhattan.

Researchers attempting to identify bugs

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Mysterious bug bites have kept entomologists wondering what species is creating the strange bites around the Pittsburg area.

The bites, which are typically round, red bites with a pustule in the center, are being found on people around Pittsburg, Kan., Omaha, Neb., Wichita and other areas nearby, including a few in Manhattan, said Alberto Broce, K-State professor of entomology.

Broce, along with Ludek Zurek, assistant professor of medical entomology, and other entomologists from the areas concerned, believe the bug to be a member of the mite family. He said they will likely know exactly what the bug is by today.

Each bite is not the same because some people develop rashes, and the bites vary in size, up to three inches across, he said.

"There's no danger," Broce said. "It's a nuisance. There's no disease."

The difficulty in discovering the bug's identity comes from not being able to feel the bite, Broce said.

Iraqi militants behead 3 Kurdish people

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Militants beheaded three hostages said to be Iraqi Kurd militiamen, showing their deaths in a video posted on a Web site Sunday and denouncing Kurdish political parties for cooperating with Americans in Iraq.

In a separate incident, a group claimed to have kidnapped 25 members of the Iraqi National Guard, and a report on the Arabic station Al-Jazeera said the soldiers were threatened with death unless a detained Shiite leader is freed within 48 hours.

The bodies of the three slain hostages were found by a road outside the northern city of Mosul, said Sarkawt Hassan, security chief in the mainly Kurdish town of Sulaimaniyah. He identified them as members of the peshmerga militia of the Kurdistan Democratic Party.

"They beheaded them," Hassan said.

Darren Sproles rushes for a long gain during the first-half Saturday afternoon at KSU Stadium. Sproles ran for 292 yards on 38 carries and one touchdown, breaking the record for most rushing yards in a game, which he set late last season.

Sproles falls 8 yards short of 300-yard rushing mark, sets new record

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Darren Sproles only needed eight yards, and the crowd knew it.

In the final minutes of K-State's 40-20 win over Louisiana-Lafayette on Saturday, what was left of the 47,914 fans announced attendance began to chant the Heisman Trophy hopeful's name in hopes of seeing Sproles eclipse the 300-yard rushing mark.

The fans didn't get their wish, but did see the senior running back break his own single-game rushing record with 292 yards on 38 carries. Wildcat fans also saw the 5-foot-7, 180 pound break the 4,000 (4,211) career rushing yardage mark early in the first quarter.

"Getting the ball to Darren is the name of the game," sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier said.

During his record-setting performance, Sproles averaged 7.7 yards per carry with three runs of more than 30-yards, including a 35-yard run for touchdown on K-State's second drive of the game. At the end of the first half Sproles already had 195 yards and was averaging 8.5 yards per carry.

"On the field, I had no idea he was breaking a record," senior wide receiver Antoine Polite said. "It sure was special to be a part of such a performance."

Despite his record-setting day, Sproles said he was upset with himself for fumbling the ball twice inside the red zone.

"I let my team down," Sproles said. "We were in the redzone, and I put it on the ground twice. And I take responsibility for it."

The first fumble came with 1:54 left in the second quarter and K-State driving toward the end-zone.

Sproles rattled off an 11-yard run only to get the football stripped by the Louisiana-Lafayette defense at the 18-yard line. The second fumble came on the third play of the fourth quarter with the Wildcats driving again, as Sproles put the ball on the ground after an eight-yard run inside the 10-yard line.

Sproles said he wasn't taking care of the ball when he was trying to avoid tacklers.

"It's mainly when I cut," Sproles said. "I bring the ball up and they swat it and it comes out. I have to start tucking the ball closer to my body when I cut."

Federal changes in overtime procedure affect workers

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

New laws implemented by the Bush administration in August have been met with adversity from some white-collar workers who will no longer receive overtime pay or are now eligible for pay but will lose vacation and health care benefits.

At K-State changes are there, however most staff and administration are exempt from such regulations, said Stephanie Vruwink, professional in the Division of Human Resources.

"It's a review process. We've been in meetings to make sure that everyone knows this is a federal law and to make sure that everyone is properly classified," Vruwink said.

The government is changing labor laws for the first time since the Fair Labor Standards Act was instituted in 1938.

In addition to loss of benefits, some employees being paid hourly wages have said they feel this new classification implies that they will no longer have the opportunity to be promoted to upper level or even management positions.

According to the Associated Press, it is estimated that the changes in overtime procedure might cost as many as six million employees the right to overtime wages; whereas a mere 1.3 million workers will now be eligible for overtime pay.

By law, employers are now required to pay employees making less than $23,660 overtime wages.

Furthermore, employees who make more than $100,000 and who regularly complete administrative or professional tasks may no longer be eligible for overtime, although these positions must be reviewed for proper classification.

At Mercy Regional Health Center, the human resources department is reviewing staff positions as well. However, 98 percent of doctors on staff are independent practitioners and the new changes won't affect them.

As for other staff members, Steve Labor laws and specific guidelines access www.dol.gov or call 1(866) 4US-WAGE.

Hodges, vice president of human resources at Mercy said, it might have no effect.

"At Mercy, we have a large percentage already being paid on an hourly basis, and generally speaking it's never made sense in the health care industry for clinicians to be paid on a salary basis because of the variations in hours and shifts that are worked," he said.

Most hospital employers are in favor of the changes due to the recent wave of costly lawsuits brought by disgruntled workers who claim that businesses have unfairly refused them overtime wages, Hodges said.

In May, WorldatWork surveyed 351 corporations about the impending overtime wage law changes and discovered that if these laws were implemented, corporations would expect 26 percent increase in overtime pay eligibility, whereas 7 percent of businesses would anticipate a decrease in overtime qualification.

Currently, Bill Moore, president of the local teamsters, said these new laws will not directly affect UPS workers in Topeka because of their contract.

Superintendent to step down

School closings, a tight budget, and now the superintendent is stepping down.

Sharol Little, superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, announced Wednesday that she will retire after this school year.

CHANGING FOR TERROR

Russian President

Vladimir Putin announced a series of anti-terror initiatives last week in response to recent deadly attacks in the country.

Many of the changes are not related directly to security, however, and revise parts of the nation's electoral setup.

Critics called the initiatives a blow to democracy, but Putin said he the actions were necessary to empower the executive branch to battle terror.

U.N. threatens oil sanctions against Sudanese government

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — A divided U.N. Security Council approved a resolution Saturday threatening oil sanctions against Sudan unless the government reins in Arab militias blamed for a 19-month killing and looting spree in Darfur that the United States has called genocide.

The vote was 11-0 with four abstentions — China, Russia, Pakistan and Algeria.

China, a permanent council member, said immediately after the vote that it would veto any future resolution that sought to impose sanctions on Sudan.

"I told the American government that the position of my government on sanctions is a firm one," said China's U.N. Ambassador Wang Guangya. "We always believe that sanctions is not a helpful means to achieve political objectives. It will only make matters worse."

The resolution says the council would have to meet again to consider sanctions against Sudan's petroleum sector or other punitive measures if the government doesn't act quickly to stop the violence and bring the perpetrators to justice — or if it doesn't cooperate with an African Union monitoring force.

The resolution strongly endorses the deployment of a beefed-up African Union force with an expanded monitoring mission that would actively try to prevent attacks and mediate to stop the conflict from escalating.

More than 50,000 people have already died and over 1.2 million have fled their homes to escape the violence.

Secretary-General Kofi Annan, who was in the council chamber for the vote, also was authorized to rapidly appoint an international commission to investigate reports of human rights violations in Darfur and determine "whether or not acts of genocide have occurred."

Sudan's U.N. Ambassador Elfatih Erwa called the resolution "unfair," but said his government would implement it despite "the injustices it contains."

Erwa accused the United States of introducing the measure solely to achieve "the political objectives" of President Bush and Congress — a charge immediately rejected by U.S. Ambassador John Danforth.

In an angry rebuttal, Erwa said the U.S. Congress of believing "it is the only conscience of the world, and indeed that they have the divine right to decide on the destinies of peoples."

But, he added, millions of people see "the shortcomings and the faults" of the United States including the killings of civilians in Afghanistan and Iraq and the infliction of "torture on prisoners and innocent people in prisons in Afghanistan, Iraq and Guantanamo."

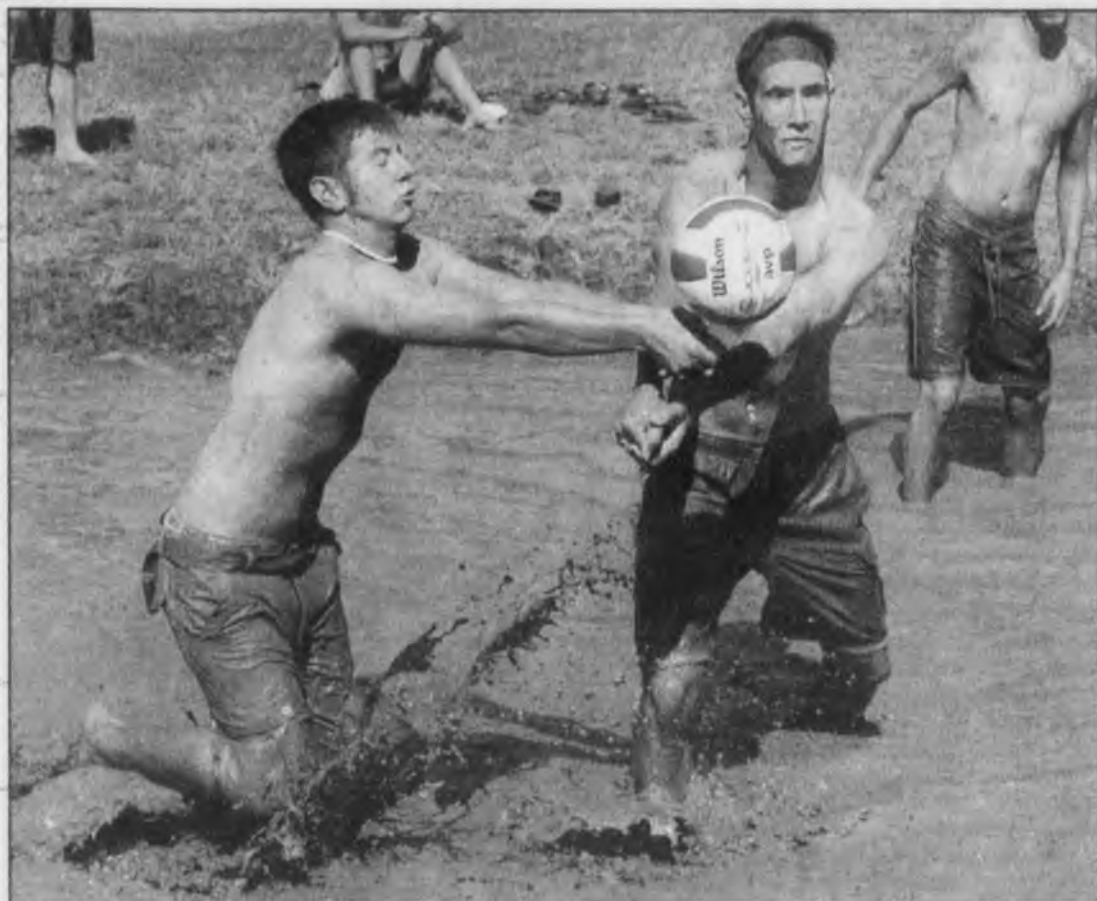

Danforth denounced the statement as an "unseemly and uncalled for attack on the United States."

"President Bush's interest in Sudan has been intense, maybe ever since he took office," said Danforth noting that the president appointed him as his envoy to Sudan five days before the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. "This is not something that comes in an election year. This is something that he has ... been personally involved in for a long, long time."

Wang also said some council members questioned the timing of the resolution in relation "to domestic politics."

A dig in the mud

Fund-raiser benefits Alzheimers Association

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Flip flops, towels and K-State students were spread around three volleyball mud pits to participate in the 10th annual Mud-Bowl.

MudBowl, which is sponsored by Sigma Kappa, started at 8 a.m. Sunday at Tuttle Creek with the women's tournament where eight teams battled to be champion.

The proceeds from MudBowl are given to the Alzheimers Association, said Jana Owens, public relations for Sigma Kappa.

Most universities will have a walk to raise money for Alzheimers, but Sigma Kappa found that Mudbowl is a fun way for everyone to get involved, Owens said.

"We just found that this works with the K-State campus," she said. "It's a lot more fun to do something everyone enjoys."

"This is one of our bigger philanthropies."

Those in attendance were either playing, coaching, keeping track of scheduling or just watching the games, but no matter what, everyone was required to get muddy, Owens said.

"By the end of the day, everyone is pretty muddy," she said. "The longer you stay clean, the more they come after you."

The rules of the game are the same as high school volleyball, but they aren't as strictly enforced, she said.

Participants can't hit the net with a serve and are only allowed to hit the ball three times, but how they hit the ball isn't an issue.

"That way it's more fun, and it's not focussed on being good volleyball players. It's on being here and helping a good cause," Owens said.

Sigma Kappa members generally coach the teams, and this was Owens second year for coaching.

Owens, sophomore in architectural engineering, said she knew she would get muddy from coaching because teams will dump the coach in the mud after a win, but she still wasn't prepared for it.

"I kind of thought I could avoid it, but my team erased that thought when they dumped me before we even got started," she said.

Pam Mosher, president of Sigma Kappa and senior in human ecology and mass communications, said she didn't realize how muddy she would get her first year.

"I didn't expect it to be in my ears, my nose and my mouth," Mosher said.

The point of Mudbowl is to raise money through sponsorship and donations, but winning is a bonus.

In the men's tournament, the Tau Kappa Epsilon house kept a winning steak alive for about the eight year running, said Steve Lehwald, senior in finance and member.

"It's a tradition. We don't want to be that year that loses it," he said.

Second place was the Mupets, a non-greek team, and third was Phi Delta Theta. There were 34 men's teams.

After only making it to the third round, Phi Delta Theta members said they were looking to make it further this year, which they did, said Byron Moore, Phi Delta Theta member and sophomore in operations management and finance.

Moore said spending the day playing in the MudBowl tournament is not only fun but important.

"We really like this type of philanthropy," he said. "We think it's important to not only be social but to help out the community as well."

In the women's tournament, Alpha Chi Omega took first with Alpha of Clovia following with a second place finish and Alpha Delta Pi took third.

Rivers swell after Hurricane Ivan strikes

By Lawrence Messina
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WHEELING, W.Va. — Hundreds of people evacuated their homes Sunday in parts of Ohio, West Virginia and Pennsylvania as rivers and small streams were swollen beyond their banks by the torrential rain dumped by remnants of Hurricane Ivan.

The Ohio River inundated parts of Wheeling and other West Virginia river towns, as well as communities on Ohio's shore, and the Delaware River flooded parts of New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania.

In addition to flooding, more than 1.2 million homes and businesses were still without electricity early Sunday from Florida to Pennsylvania because of Ivan, utilities estimated.

The hurricane and its remnants had been blamed for at least 50 deaths in the United States, 19 of them in Florida, and 70 deaths in the Caribbean.

West Virginia Gov. Bob Wise asked President Bush on Sunday to declare eight northern counties federal disaster areas.

"The Northern Panhandle clearly has been devastated and meets the threshold," Wise said after flying over the region.

The Ohio River crested Sunday at Wheeling at about 9.3 feet above flood stage, after submerging the city's riverfront park and amphitheater. It mostly covered the city's midriver Wheeling Island, which holds residential neighborhoods and Wheeling Island Racetrack and Gaming.

Wise spent the night with evacuees on the gym floor at Wheeling Park High, one of several Red Cross shelter sites, after a brief tour of the area by road. "I saw mobile homes uprooted and tossed downstream," he said. "I saw human lives uprooted."

Downriver, residents had been urged to evacuate parts of Moundsville, where the Ohio crested at 10 feet above flood stage, and big flood gates were closed at Parkersburg.

A highway paralleling the West Virginia shore of the river was blocked in several places between Wheeling and Parkersburg, and the Ohio River bridge in New Martinsville was closed, state emergency officials said. Areas were to be closed Monday because roads were blocked by water and mud slides.

All around West Virginia, flooding and mudslides had blocked 207 roads and damaged hundreds of houses, authorities said.

Collegian reviews Fourum policy to best serve readership

The Campus Fourum is your voice at K-State. It's the place where you can express your concerns, share your observations and poke fun at the world around you.

BARBARA MEYER

Like every other privilege, it's one that you must use responsibly or risk losing.

As the opinion editor, part of my job is to transcribe calls from the Fourum and screen out those that violate our policies.

Because of recent problems and concerns, the editorial staff has discussed a wide range of changes in recent weeks.

A number of options were discussed, including keeping the same policy, eliminating the Fourum altogether or instituting a number of changes.

In the end, the editor in chief and myself agreed that while the Fourum is a vital part of the Collegian, it is time to hold it to the same factual standards as we would any other feature.

The resulting decision was we will now make a concerted effort to check the facts we print in the Fourum.

Obviously, it's not possible to find out if some one really saw a girl in a red car picking her nose, and that's ok. Statements of opinion are likewise exempt.

However, when statements of fact are made about named or easily identified persons, organizations or businesses, we will either verify them or eliminate them.

You may choose to include the source of your information in an e-mail to ensure that your comments are printed.

For those who missed the first edition of the paper, here's a recap of the policies:

1. Comments that are libelous, obscene, racist or sexist will not run in the paper.
2. Statements of fact about identifiable entities will be verified or will not be printed.
3. Serious threats against other students, faculty or organizations will not be printed in the Fourum. These Messages will be reported to the police.
4. Callers are limited to twenty seconds and e-mailed comments are limited to thirty words.

5. To make sure your comments are recorded accurately, speak clearly or e-mail your comments instead.

6. Most importantly: be creative, offer something constructive and have fun.

Hmmm, sounds like somebody's got a little case of the Monday's.

It's great how our front page talks about the University of Baghdad and then it also talks about our excellent flight program. I think there's a little conspiracy going on.

Could someone tell me why Chance York looks like a dang leprechaun?

Honey, forget about those rings that you saw in the newspaper. I don't wanna marry you anymore.

I just wanna say that Grant Reichert is a moron, and the fact that the Collegian continuously publishes his columns just shows that the Collegian is a worthless piece of trash.

I just wanted to say that despite all the criticism, I think the Collegian has come a long way from last year. So much props to you guys.

Note to Wefald

Non-traditional holidays should warrant university vacations

Dear President Wefald,

Most of the time, I respect your work.

I respect what you've done to increase enrollment at the university.

I'm grateful that you've helped move K-State's academic standards into the upper echelon of affordable public universities. And more than anything, I appreciate that you let me take naps in your front yard on nice days.

But I have some beef, and I figured I'd skirt the pesky, responsible one-on-one meeting and bring it up in front of the entire campus instead.

In addition to starting our Spring Semester on January 12 (have you gone mental?), you've been negligent in other aspects of the school calendar as well.

It's all well and good that we don't have class on Labor Day and Martin Luther King Day, but many other holidays that deserve a day off are simply ignored.

For example, what does it say about this fine institution that we honor Christopher Columbus with a day off, but don't do the same for former U.S. Presidents?

Come February, nothing matters more to this proud American than paying homage to such important historical icons as Franklin Pierce, Millard Fillmore, and Martin Van Buren.

If I can't honor their achievements by sitting at home and playing Tecmo Super Bowl all day, then the terrorists have truly won. And I don't think you want that on your conscience.

And why is it that we have nearly an entire month off to celebrate the birth of Jesus, yet International Steve Perry Appreciation Day receives nary a mention from you?

I know Steve Perry isn't a deity, he's pretty damn close.

Journey has been scientifically proven to be the greatest band of all-time, and according to the Steve Perry Preservation Society, Steve Perry once built a working helicopter out of rope and grass clippings.

He is also rumored to have skied through the Gobi Desert to rescue a baby duck. Stories this outrageous couldn't possibly be made up, and yet you neglect the man behind the music every May 9.

I'm sure that when things start to get stale with you and Ruth Ann, there's nothing that gets her battery re-charged and ready to go like a nice glass of wine and "Open Arms" blasting on the stereo.

You have Steve Perry to thank for that, yet somehow, you find a way to ignore his immense societal contributions every year. Have you no dignity, sir? Survey says apparently not.

But perhaps more flabbergasting than any of the previously mentioned calendar negligence is your complete refusal to acknowledge that this Friday is Fake Moustache Friday.

Any one student who wears a fake moustache to class should receive five points extra credit, and any non-student who wears a fake moustache to work should get a raise.

I'll be going with "The Admiral" myself.

Don't be surprised if the entire campus bands together in a tempestuous mob and descend on 100 Wilson Court Friday morning to demand your resignation.

The mob will be festooned in comical fake moustaches, of course, but make no mistake: they'll be seething.

And there's no quicker recipe for disaster than a posse of falsely-mustachioed students and a president unsympathetic to their concerns.

You claim to care about your students' well being. If this is indeed true, you will do nothing less than adorn yourself with a phony moustache this Friday in a show of support for men who gave their lives so that one day, we could wear fake moustaches to school.

On top of that, what could possibly make you look more presidential? Nothing, that's what.

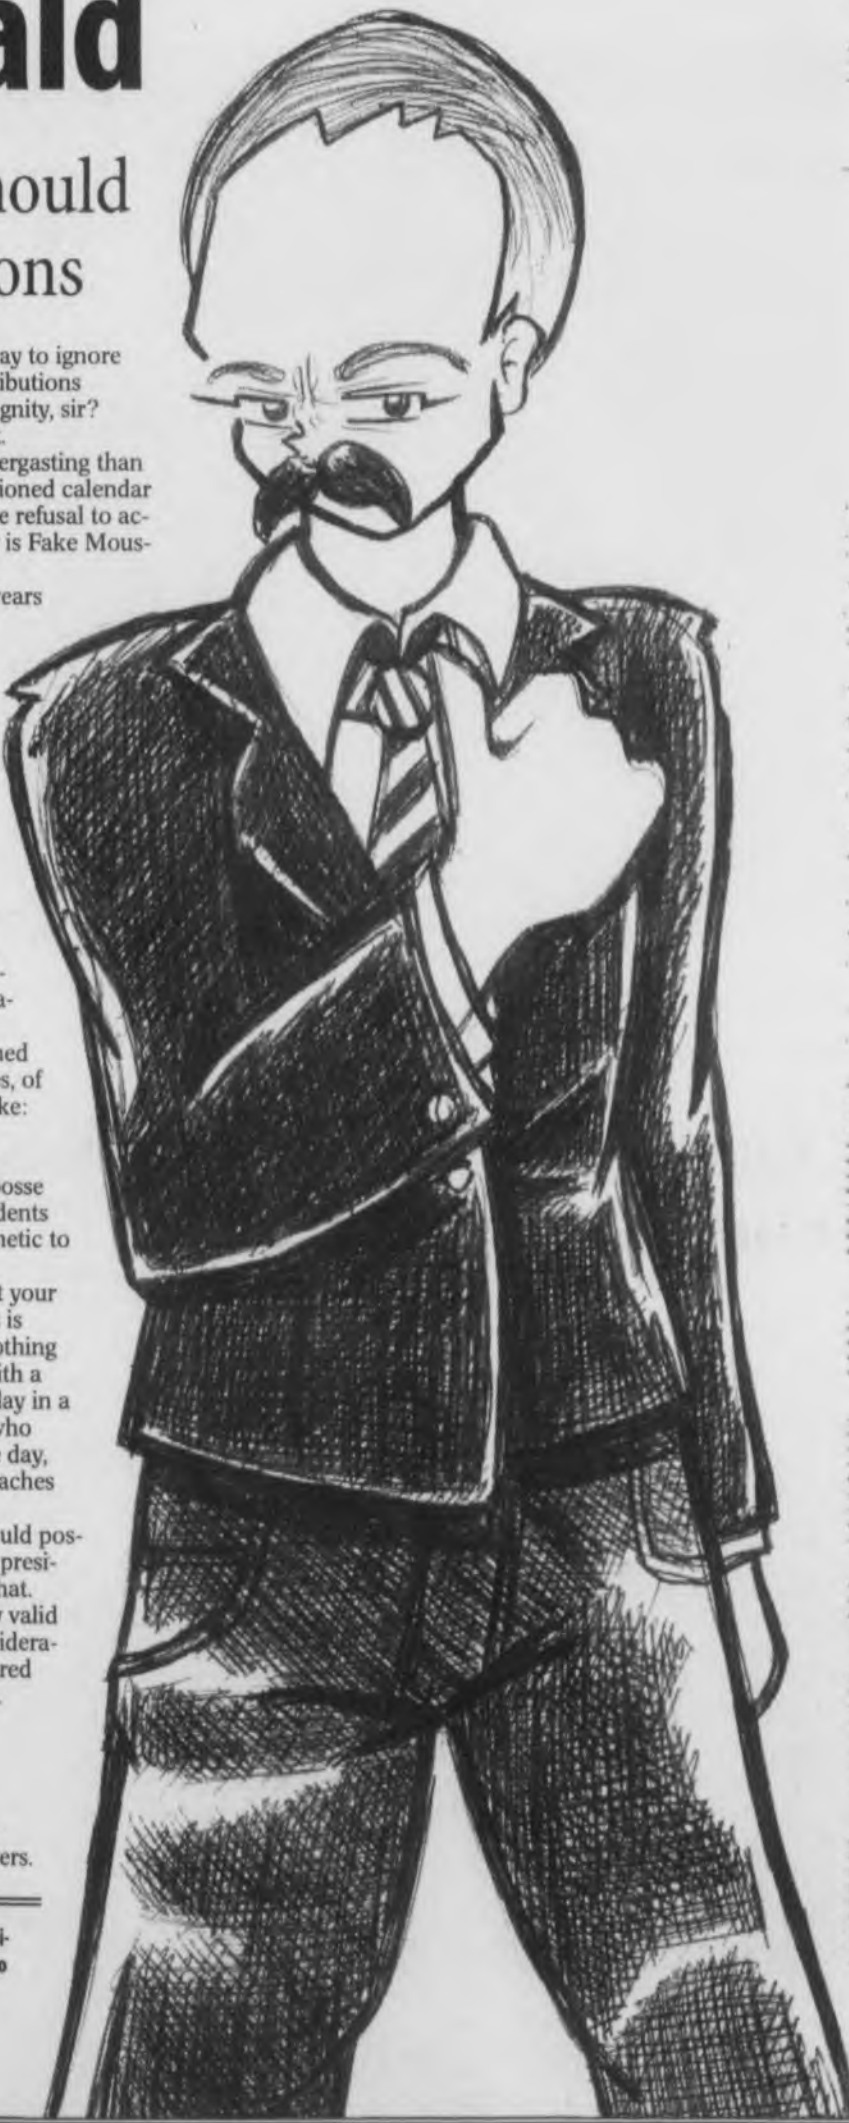

I hope you will take my valid concerns into careful consideration, because I've never cared more about anything, ever.

Your pal,
Jeremy Parker

P.S. I like your comb over. Don't listen to the nay-sayers.

Jeremy is a senior in music composition. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Public can limit protesters' power

Last Monday I was making my way to McCain Auditorium to hear a lecture by the editor and publisher of the New York Times when I was confronted with a stunning bit of news.

It appears that the New York Times, while not a living entity, is a homosexual.

The implications of this hit me with all the force of a speeding Soul Train. Could it be true? Could one of the premier newspapers in the world truly be engaging in the forbidden lifestyle of male hair stylists everywhere?

While such a proposition seems far too nonsensical for the average adult believer in Santa Claus, it is not too far fetched for the fanatic.

And while I don't think "blindly obedient, misled, drooling fanatic" is actually in the dictionary, I'm certain that if it were, it would quite nicely fit the bill for Westboro Baptist Church and its "honorable" Reverend Fred Phelps.

But, if you think that Phelps reserves his attentions specifically for gay newspapers then you are quite mistaken.

A quick trip to their Web site reveals plans to protest: Gay Arkansas, Gay Bob Dole, Gay Bill Clinton, the Gay United States Supreme Court, several Gay churches, the Gay Vice President, the Gay "wussy king of Sweden" and perhaps the most heinous of all the Gays, Gay Absolut Vodka.

These protests, creatively titled "Love Crusades" are scheduled not only all over the country, but all over the world.

So the followers of Fred Phelps' brand of Christianity fan out with their "God Hates Fags" and "Fag Sin = 9/11" signs to spread the love of God to all us nonbelievers.

But rather than be ignorant I chose to enlighten myself with a quick Internet search of what exactly God hates.

This is a rather short list. What God hates are: sacred pillars, defective sacrificial animals, "Haughty eyes, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that devises wicked plans, feet that run rapidly to evil, a false witness who utters lies, and one who spreads strife among brothers."

While God is not around to verify my opinion, I feel that if he were, he would agree that oafish, boorish morons should be added to the list.

However, oafish, boorish morons are protected by the Constitution too, and neither I nor anyone else should attempt to stop the hate-mongers from climbing up on their soapboxes with their signs and oh so clever renditions of "America, America."

But, we can chuckle to ourselves as they stand firmly on their moral high ground, which the rest of us can plainly see is actually a septic tank bubbling over.

No one ever said that free speech was pretty.

The true irony of the situation is that Phelps has done more to promote gay matters than he has ever done to destroy them.

He has helped galvanize the gay movement, and has brought together moderate communities against him. Topeka is so frantically trying to distance itself from him and his church, that the city has actually become more gay friendly. Way to go Fred!

Now, I'm sure that I will find myself labeled a "fag enabler" or perhaps a "faggot columnist." Maybe I shall, one day, become worthy of protest too (I can think of no higher honor).

Should that day come I will gladly stand outside and watch the procession of children file past carrying posters they did not make, chanting slogans they did not come up with and probably don't understand and laugh at the situation.

After all, the only power they have is the power we give them. The sooner we stop caring about their yelling, screaming, upside down flags, and borderline pornographic billboards (that's real pious) the sooner they'll run out of reasons to show up at all.

Kerry links war, domestic issues

By Liz Sidoti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democrat John Kerry links the cost of the Iraq war to problems at home and vows in a new television ad to both "defend America and fight for the middle class."

"200 billion dollars. That's what we are spending in Iraq because George Bush chose to go it alone," Kerry says in the ad, to start airing today in 13 competitive states where he is on the air. "Now the president tells us we don't have the resources to take care of health care and education here at home. That's wrong."

Suggesting that Bush ignored domestic ills while focusing on the war abroad,

Kerry says: "As president, I'll stop at nothing to get the terrorists before they get us. But I'll also fight to build a stronger middle class."

The $200 billion estimate reflects the campaign's calculation of funds already spent on combat and reconstruction in Iraq, and money anticipated to be spent through next summer, based on congressional reports. The war has cost about $120 billion, according to the White House Office of Budget and Management.

Bush has never said there's no money for education or health care. Kerry's campaign bases the claim on its interpretation of Bush's budget proposals for education and reports of rising health care premiums.

Bush's campaign said the ad was another Kerry flip flop, noting that in August 2003 on NBC's "Meet the Press" Kerry said war spending should be increased "by whatever number of billions of dollars it takes to win."

"After attacking the president for not spending enough on Iraq, John Kerry is now attacking the president for spending too much," said Bush campaign spokesman Steve Schmidt. "John Kerry's hypocritical attacks and continually shifting positions on Iraq are costing him the trust of the American people."

Kerry spent Sunday in Boston, off the campaign trail. His economic plan calls for rolling back Bush's tax cuts for people earning more than $200,000 a year.

China selects new leader

Hu replaces Jiang, who resigned last week

Audra Ang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Hu Jintao became the undisputed leader of China as the country completed its first orderly transfer of power in the communist era on Sunday with the departure of former President Jiang Zemin from his top military post — giving a new generation a freer hand to run the world's most populous nation.

Jiang, whose term was to have run until 2007, resigned at a meeting of the ruling Communist Party's Central Committee that ended Sunday.

Analysts did not expect Jiang's exit to affect Beijing's stance on relations with the United States or Taiwan, economic reform or other key issues. Jiang and Hu are not known to have had any major policy disagreements and both support continued capitalist-style reforms and one-party communist rule.

But the consolidation of the top party, government and military posts in Hu's hands will allow him and his premier, Wen Jiabao, to act more decisively as the government copes with wrenching economic changes and rural poverty.

Hu, 61, replaced Jiang as party leader in late 2003 and as president early the next year. But the 78-year-old Jiang, who led China for 13 years, retained influence by holding onto his military post even as all his contemporaries retired in a long-planned handover of power to younger leaders.

"This is a good, positive step because it finally completes the systemic change," said Sin-ming Shaw, a China specialist at Oxford University's Oriel College. "To have someone as chairman of the party and not control the guns is very awkward. This will definitely make things easier."

A statement by the 198-member Central Committee said the handover of power was conducive to upholding "the party's absolute leadership over the military," the official Xinhua News

"This is a good, positive step because it finally completes the systemic change."

Sin-ming Shaw
CHINA SPECIALIST
OXFORD UNIVERSITY

Agency said. It said Jiang's resignation showed "his broad-mindedness as a true communist."

State television devoted its entire evening newscast to the transfer of power, extending the half-hour program by 15 minutes.

An anchor read from Jiang's resignation letter, dated Sept. 1, saying he had "always looked forward to complete retirement from leading positions for the good of the long-term development of the cause of the party and the people."

There was no immediate indication why Jiang chose to cut short his term. But it might suggest that he felt he had succeeded in ensuring his political legacy — especially the addition of the pro-capitalist "Three Represents" ideology that he championed to the party's constitution — and the interests of his family and allies.

The ideology, stripped down, it invites entrepreneurs into the party, redefining communism and daring critics to point out ideological contradictions.

The party spent nearly a decade preparing for the handover, hoping to avoid the upheavals that have accompanied earlier transfers of power.

China's communist founder, Mao Zedong, picked Hua Guofeng to succeed him on his death in 1976. But Hua lasted only a few months before being pushed aside by Deng Xiaoping, who went on to launch reforms that fueled China's two-decade economic boom.

Deng dismissed his own hand-picked successor, Zhao Ziyang, in 1989 after the bloody crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrations and a power struggle that nearly tore apart the party. Jiang, a former Shanghai mayor, was almost unknown when Deng picked him to succeed Zhao and later to lead the nation. Zhao still lives under house arrest more than 15 years later.

Deng himself nominated Hu as Jiang's eventual successor in the early 1990s.

Jiang said in his resignation letter that he decided to leave the Central Military Commission after "meticulous consideration." He said Hu was "absolutely qualified for this post."

State television showed Hu and Jiang walking side-by-side in the cavernous Great Hall of the People in central Beijing, greeted by thunderous applause from the Central Committee members as they posed for photos. Dressed in a dark suit and red tie, Jiang shook hands and waved.

"I am so happy to see all of you today," Jiang said. He called for the party to "work hard and keep advancing under the leadership of the party Central Committee with Comrade Hu Jintao."

Xu Caihou, 61, will succeed Hu as deputy chairman of the military commission, Xinhua said. That was a surprise choice, because many had expected Vice President Zeng Qinghong — a former Jiang aide and protégé — to become deputy leader of the commission. It wasn't clear whether Jiang had lobbied for Zeng and whether the choice reflected a personal setback.

The 2.5 million-member People's Liberation Army is the world's largest military. In a society where Mao declared that "power flows from the barrel of a gun," the chairmanship of the military commission was the second-most powerful post for a Chinese leader, after the job of party general secretary. The presidency, though high-profile, came a distant third, with few formal powers.

Offense must pick up defense's slack

JOSH WITT

It's evaluation time. With K-State's 40-20 win over Louisiana-Lafayette on Saturday, the non-conference schedule is now completed.

The Wildcats have played three games, and that's enough to sit back and make some hard statements about K-State's chances for success in Big 12 play as the team enters a bye week.

We know plenty. Darren Sproles is one of the best. He broke his own single-game school yardage rushing record with 292 yards against the Ragin' Cajuns' defense.

The guy is phenomenal in the way he can make guys miss and dart through holes that look non-existent. It's absolutely amazing.

Sure he fumbled twice in the redzone, and you can't sugarcoat how damaging that could have been against a higher-quality opponent, but Darren knows he has to improve in that area.

It killed the guy that he fumbled twice, and at the post-game press conference you could see in his eyes coughing up the football is going to be the top point of emphasis in his game, as the team prepares for Oct. 2 at Texas A&M.

Darren is the man. And he has to be, because the K-State defense does not look good.

We saw it again Saturday — missed tackles, blown coverage, bad pursuit angles.

It's hard to not be extremely critical of this unit, because, quite frankly, it hasn't done much right this year.

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry has been solid and junior safety Bret Jones is a pleasant surprise in the secondary.

That's about all there is for positives though.

The defense gave up 214 rushing yards to the Ragin' Cajuns.

Are you serious? Giving up over two-hundred yards to the Cajuns was inexcusable.

Quarterback Jerry Babb and fullback Travis Cones ran for 148 of those yards, even though the pair came into the game with all of 51 rushing yards so far this season.

Folks, it's bad, and signs are not pointing towards improvement.

The days of the Wildcat defense winning the team games are gone — at least for this year.

This season it's almost completely on the offense's shoulders.

But the offense might be able to handle it.

Sproles will do his thing throughout the year, but what was so encouraging about the Louisiana-Lafayette game was the play of sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier.

We didn't even know if Meier would be able to go the whole game, because of several injuries he accumulated in weeks one and two.

He did, though, and showed why he is the No. 1 quarterback.

True, he only passed ten times, but that was all that was needed.

Meier completed seven of those passes and made only

Cats run past Ragin' Cajuns, Wildcat defense still an issue

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It wasn't exactly pretty, but at the end of the day K-State got what it needed desperately Saturday — a win.

Senior running back Darren Sproles broke his own single-game, K-State rushing record, sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier was solid throughout the contest and senior place kicker Joe Rheem went 4-for-4 on field goal tries, as the Wildcats defeated Louisiana-Lafayette 40-20 at KSU Stadium.

Coach Bill Snyder said the win was a step — though not a big one — in the right direction for his team after the prior weekend's 24-point blowout loss to Fresno State University.

"I think, in most respects, we got back to square one," Snyder said.

Sproles thrashed the Louisiana-Lafayette defense for 292 yards and a touchdown on 38 carries, though the Heisman Trophy-contender did fumble twice in the redzone.

The performance broke Sproles' own single-game record of 273 yards last season against Missouri.

"What more can you say? That was an awesome job," said sophomore running back Thomas Clayton — who contributed 58 yards on nine carries himself. "The offensive line was conditioned, and they did what they had to do. Whoever was in the game was going to run for yardage," he said.

After being pushed around and compiling only 59 yards rushing against Fresno State, the Wildcat offense made it a point to establish the running game.

The Wildcats gained 393 yards on the ground, while going to the air just 10 times against the Ragin' Cajuns.

"We wanted to be more physical; we wanted to get after people," co-offensive coordinator Del Miller said. "We wanted to make sure the offensive line was physical up front, and I think we did that a little bit today."

Meier, who showed no noticeable effects from injuries sustained to his shoulder and pinky earlier in the season, said the offense was taking what Louisiana-Lafayette was giving it.

"If we need to run the ball 50 times to get that 'W,' I'm happy with it," Meier said. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

Meier was an efficient 7-of-10 for 52 yards and a touchdown on the afternoon. The sophomore also ran for two scores.

Many problems still persisted on defense, however, as the Wildcats gave up several big plays and 342 yards of total offense to the Ragin' Cajuns.

Those big plays included a 39-yard touchdown strike from Louisiana-Lafayette sophomore quarterback Jerry Babb to senior wide receiver B.J. Crist in the second quarter and an 80-yard scamper by Babb, leading to a fourth-quarter touchdown.

Snyder was particularly critical of his defense on Babb's fourth-quarter run.

"It's a sad day when the quarterback can outrun everybody you have on your defense," Snyder said.

Missed tackling was again an issue.

On several instances, Ragin' Cajun players bounced off Wildcat defenders.

"We can't tackle. We can't tackle me, and I have no moves," defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. "I just don't know if we're good enough."

The Wildcats head into a bye week before starting Big 12 play Oct. 2 at Texas A&M. "We're not a happy defense," senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said. "I think each game we play we have that over our shoulder, that burden, that each game we're going to be a bad defense."

K-State's Matt Butler pursues UL-Lafayette quarterback Jerry Babb during the second half of play on Saturday. K-State defeated the Ragin' Cajuns 40-20.

Men's golf begins game at KU today

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team begins competition today in the first round of the KU Invitational at Alvarado Golf Club in Lawrence.

There are 14 teams, including K-State, involved in the tournament.

Senior Matt Van Cleave, juniors Jonathan James, Tyler Cummins and Ben Kern, and freshmen Clay Hodge and Kyle Yonke will be representing the Wildcats.

Yonke is only playing in the individual portion of the tournament.

Alvarado's course is similar to that of Colbert Hills, which could be an advantage for K-State, Coach Tim Norris said.

"The greens are larger, like Colbert Hills, which will hopefully translate into lower scores for the players," Norris said.

Since the Wildcats have not attended this tournament in five years, Norris said they are looking forward to playing against the teams invited.

"It's going to be great competition," Norris said. "And after Inverness, our team's confidence is up."

The Wildcats not only have confidence right now, they also have an established leader in Van Cleave.

"Matt is our team captain, and he leads by example," Norris said.

"He is a very hard worker and a special player."

Norris said Van Cleave has shown dramatic improvement since transferring his sophomore year from Indian Hills Community College in Ottumwa, Iowa.

"Matt used to struggle with his distance; he didn't really have control. But he spent a better part of two months working on his swing," Norris said.

He said the main obstacle at the Invitational could be the weather conditions.

"I checked the weather, and it's supposed to be windy — that could be our biggest problem," Norris said.

Last year, the University of Kansas claimed the victory, but this year it could be anyone's game, Norris said.

After the Invitational, the Wildcats look ahead to the Mason Rudolph Championship in Nashville, Tenn., on Sept. 27 and 28.

CFB | Wildcats still absent from national polls

K-State's 40-20 win over Louisiana-Lafayette Saturday had no effect on voters' views in both national polls, as the Wildcats remain unranked.

In the latest Associated Press poll released Sunday, K-State received 46 votes, while in the ESPN/USA Today Coaches poll the Wildcats were kept out of the top 25 with 52 votes.

The Big 12 did get more representation in the national polls, however, as Oklahoma State moved to No. 25 in both the AP and coaches poll.

The Cowboys join Oklahoma (No. 2 in both polls) and Texas (No. 5 in both polls) as the only nationally-ranked conference teams.

WNBA | Ohlde, Lynx clinch WNBA playoff spot

Former K-State women's basketball standout Nicole Ohlde keeps rolling in her rookie season and has helped propel the Minnesota Lynx into the WNBA playoffs.

Ohlde scored 19 points Friday, as Minnesota won 78-66 at Los Angeles to seal a spot in the Western Conference playoffs.

Helping hold Los Angeles star Lisa Leslie to nine points, Ohlde was critical in clinching the Lynx second consecutive playoff berth.

Golf | Europe dominates U.S. in Ryder Cup

Over here, over there, it no longer matters. Europe again proved to be the best in the Ryder Cup with its biggest romp over the Americans.

The final blow Sunday was a scene all too familiar at Oakland Hills: With the cup already won, Padraig Harrington made a 25-foot par putt on the 18th hole of the last match that only counted in the record books.

Europe 18 1/2, United States 9 1/2.

The Europeans' largest victory also matched the widest margin since continental Europe was added to the Great Britain and Ireland team in 1979.

Lee Westwood ended the slightest suspense with a 4-foot par putt on the 18th to beat Kenny Perry. With Colin Montgomerie 1 up on the 18th hole and assured a half-point, Europe had the 14 points it needed to retain the cup.

Montgomerie also made a 4-foot par putt to beat David Toms and secure outright victory for Europe for the fourth time in the last five Ryder Cup matches.

The Europeans' last blowout was 16 1/2-11 1/2 in 1985 at The Belfry when they won for the first time in 28 years. Since then, they have captured the cup seven out of 10 times with a collection of players not many people know in the States until they are posing with the 19-inch gold trophy.

NASCAR | Busch wins, tied for top spot in standings

Kurt Busch was seventh among the title contenders heading into Sunday's first race of NASCAR's new 10-man, 10-race Nextel Cup championship format.

In the days leading up to the Sylvania 300 at New Hampshire International Speedway, whenever Busch was asked what the first race of the championship showdown would be like, he smiled and said, "Who knows, we could be the points leader come the end of Sunday."

Guess what. A dominating performance gave Busch a sweep of the 2004 events at the New Hampshire track and lifted him into a tie with Dale Earnhardt Jr. for the points lead with nine races remaining.

Although he is tied for the top spot, it is just the third time in Busch's four-year Cup career that he has been atop the point standings. He led for one race after finishing second at Rockingham in February 2003 and again for one race after finishing sixth at Texas in April.

Earnhardt, who needed a relief driver at this track in July after being burned in a sports car crash the previous week, ran strong Sunday and finished third. If the championship was determined after Sunday, Earnhardt would win the tiebreaker based on his four wins this season.

K-State rocked on Friday night.

Eight bands vied for the title of best band at the 18th annual Opus Band Competition in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Tyler Traxson of the UPC Entertainment Committee said the competition went off without a hitch.

"It turned out really well, and more people came out than last year," he said. "There weren't as many bands as last year, but it was still an overall success."

Traxson said the competition is for the students as well as the bands.

"It's been going on at K-State for 18 years, and it's like a battle of the bands," he said. "We like to get all the local bands to play, and we like the students to be able to see them for free."

For students and Manhattan residents alike, Opus is a great way to have a good time in Manhattan, Christina Smith, freshman in wildlife biology said.

"I had nothing else to do, and I really like music," Smith said. "I wanted to check out the local scene and see some of the bands."

Joe Tregellas, senior in creative writing, said the cost factor and the chance to see new music is why he enjoys attending Opus.

"It was free. It was a nice night, and I love music," he said. "I also want to see the up and coming talent."

Despite the nice weather and fun atmosphere, Tregellas said he thought there was room for improvement.

"The sound levels and mixing could have been better," Tregellas said. "Some of the harder bands sounded really soft and some of the softer bands sounded really loud."

Manhattan resident and booking agent for PJ's, Travis "Trapper" Edwards, said he likes to see who's new on the music scene and also likes the format of the competition.

"I wanted to catch a glimpse of some new bands that I haven't seen," Edwards said. "I also like the showcase style, the variety of music, and the fact that it's in a good setting."

Opus isn't put on just for the enjoyment of the audience. Bands also enjoy the playing time, and use it to their advantage, said Eric Starnes, co-vocalist for Addictive Behavior.

He said the band members relish the opportunity to play in front of their peers and hone their act.

"We've played Opus for the last two years, and we have a different bass player this year and wanted to see how it sounds," he said. "It was really good."

Clayton Senne, lead singer and key boarder for the band Epiphany, works through their set of songs at the annual OPUS band competition. Each band was allowed 15 minutes to set up and 25 minutes to give their best performance in hopes of a cash prize.

Bands aren't the only ones responsible for the quality of a concert. Support staff and crew are vital to a good show, said Chase McGillis, bass player for Addictive Behavior.

"Of course we had a few mess-ups, but the sound man was really good and he helped to cover some of the mistakes," McGillis said.

Patrick Crough, bass player for Salina rockers Emmasmine, said concerts like Opus are also a great venue to get music out to new audiences.

"We feel that we should play every show that we can so people can hear us, and we were lucky enough to be selected to play," he said.

Crough said he thought the crowd and the set up as a whole helped his band put on a good set.

"It was decent," he said. "It obviously wasn't the best set we've ever played, but with the good crowd response it really felt good."

Spears weds fiancé in surprise ceremony

Pop singer Britney Spears married her fiancé, dancer Kevin Federline, in a surprise ceremony, her record label said Sunday.

"She did marry him yesterday," Jive Records spokeswoman Sonia Muckle said. She declined to provide further details.

The wedding was held Saturday evening at a private home in the Studio City area with 20 to 30 people attending, "Entertainment Tonight" said on its Web site.

Spears, 22, and Federline, 26, announced their engagement in June after dating since early this year.

It was the second marriage in nine months for Spears.

Culkin released after drug possession arrest

Former child star Macaulay Culkin was arrested on drug charges Friday during a traffic stop, authorities said.

The 24-year-old actor, best known for his role in the "Home Alone" movies, was taken into custody on complaints of possession of a controlled dangerous substance without a valid prescription and possession of marijuana, according to the Oklahoma County Sheriff's office.

Culkin, who lives in New York City, was booked into the Oklahoma County Jail and released after posting $4,000 bond, a jailer said.

Authorities confiscated about 17 grams of marijuana from a vehicle in which Culkin was a passenger. Officers also found 16 milligrams of prescription medications used to control anxiety and seizures, according to a police report.

Madonna addresses 'Kabbalah' conference

Pop star Madonna called for world peace Sunday at a conference on Jewish mysticism, a highlight of her five-day pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

Israel hopes the star — the biggest pop celebrity to visit in years — will revive tourism battered by four years of Mideast violence.

Madonna, wearing a low-cut dress with a black and white leopard pattern, said she was hesitant to come to Israel "after seeing so many news reports about terror attacks."

"I realize now that it is no more dangerous to be here than it is to be in New York," she told the gathering.

Madonna was raised Roman Catholic, but she has become an avid devotee of Jewish mysticism in recent years.

She has adopted the Hebrew name Esther, wears a red thread on her wrist to ward off the evil eye and reportedly refuses to perform on the Jewish Sabbath.

colorful scenery seen at the annual Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield, Kan. This past weekend marked my third pilgrimage to the festival.

Every year people from all over make the worthwhile trip to south-central Kansas in search of internationally, nationally and regionally-acclaimed bluegrass artists combined with the outdoor experiences of camping.

Walking through the bustling fairgrounds are thousands of cars, many of which have license plates from Colorado, Iowa, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Texas and other states.

These people aren't only novices and devotees of the bluegrass world, many are simply amateur fans, such as myself, who find themselves more intrigued with this historic form of music come each September.

For the past 33 years, the festival has been the renowned home of the National Flat-Picking Championships. Several other championships also provide a showcase for the wide range of instruments found in bluegrass.

For example, Walnut Valley is home to the National Mountain Dulcimer, Guitar Flat Pick and Bluegrass Banjo Championships.

Awards are given in monetary and/or in the form of a new, high-quality instrument. However, the most significant honors are the titles given to these "masters" of their respective instruments. The fans actively show an amazing sense of camaraderie for a form of music so respected Europe 18 1/2, United States 9 1/2. The Europeans' largest victory also matched the widest margin since continental Europe was added to the Great Britain and Ireland team in 1979.

Lee Westwood ended the slightest suspense with a 4-foot par putt on the 18th to beat Kenny Perry. With Colin Montgomerie 1 up on the 18th hole and assured a half-point, Europe had the 14 points it needed to retain the cup.

Montgomerie also made a 4-foot par putt to beat David Toms and secure outright victory for Europe for the fourth time in the last five Ryder Cup matches.

The Europeans' last blowout was 16 1/2-11 1/2 in 1985 at The Belfry when they won for the first time in 28 years. Since then, they have captured the cup seven out of 10 times with a collection of players not many people know in the States until they are posing with the 19-inch gold trophy.

NASCAR | Busch wins, tied for top spot in standings

Kurt Busch was seventh among the title contenders heading into Sunday's first race of NASCAR's new 10-man, 10-race Nextel Cup championship format.

In the days leading up to the Sylvania 300 at New Hampshire International Speedway, whenever Busch was asked what the first race of the championship showdown would be like, he smiled and said, "Who knows, we could be the points leader come the end of Sunday."

Guess what. A dominating performance gave Busch a sweep of the 2004 events at the New Hampshire track and lifted him into a tie with Dale Earnhardt Jr. for the points lead with nine races remaining.

Although he is tied for the top spot, it is just the third time in Busch's four-year Cup career that he has been atop the point standings. He led for one race after finishing second at Rockingham in February 2003 and again for one race after finishing sixth at Texas in April.

Earnhardt, who needed a relief driver at this track in July after being burned in a sports car crash the previous week, ran strong Sunday and finished third. If the championship was determined after Sunday, Earnhardt would win the tiebreaker based on his four wins this season.

Opus Band Competition continues tradition of free music and local exposure

K-State rocked on Friday night.

Eight bands vied for the title of best band at the 18th annual Opus Band Competition in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Tyler Traxson of the UPC Entertainment Committee said the competition went off without a hitch.

"It turned out really well, and more people came out than last year," he said. "There weren't as many bands as last year, but it was still an overall success."

Traxson said the competition is for the students as well as the bands.

"It's been going on at K-State for 18 years, and it's like a battle of the bands," he said. "We like to get all the local bands to play, and we like the students to be able to see them for free."

For students and Manhattan residents alike, Opus is a great way to have a good time in Manhattan, Christina Smith, freshman in wildlife biology said.

"I had nothing else to do, and I really like music," Smith said. "I wanted to check out the local scene and see some of the bands."

Joe Tregellas, senior in creative writing, said the cost factor and the chance to see new music is why he enjoys attending Opus.

"It was free. It was a nice night, and I love music," he said. "I also want to see the up and coming talent."

Despite the nice weather and fun atmosphere, Tregellas said he thought there was room for improvement.

"The sound levels and mixing could have been better," Tregellas said. "Some of the harder bands sounded really soft and some of the softer bands sounded really loud."

Manhattan resident and booking agent for PJ's, Travis "Trapper" Edwards, said he likes to see who's new on the music scene and also likes the format of the competition.

"I wanted to catch a glimpse of some new bands that I haven't seen," Edwards said. "I also like the showcase style, the variety of music, and the fact that it's in a good setting."

Opus isn't put on just for the enjoyment of the audience. Bands also enjoy the playing time, and use it to their advantage, said Eric Starnes, co-vocalist for Addictive Behavior.

He said the band members relish the opportunity to play in front of their peers and hone their act.

"We've played Opus for the last two years, and we have a different bass player this year and wanted to see how it sounds," he said. "It was really good."

Clayton Senne, lead singer and keyboard player for the band Epiphany, works through their set of songs at the annual OPUS band competition. Each band was allowed 15 minutes to set up and 25 minutes to give their best performance in hopes of a cash prize.

Bands aren't the only ones responsible for the quality of a concert. Support staff and crew are vital to a good show, said Chase McGillis, bass player for Addictive Behavior.

"Of course we had a few mess-ups, but the sound man was really good and he helped to cover some of the mistakes," McGillis said.

Patrick Crough, bass player for Salina rockers Emmasmine, said concerts like Opus are also a great venue to get music out to new audiences.

"We feel that we should play every show that we can so people can hear us, and we were lucky enough to be selected to play," he said.

Crough said he thought the crowd and the set up as a whole helped his band put on a good set.

"It was decent," he said. "It obviously wasn't the best set we've ever played, but with the good crowd response it really felt good."

Spears weds fiancé in surprise ceremony

Pop singer Britney Spears married her fiancé, dancer Kevin Federline, in a surprise ceremony, her record label said Sunday.

"She did marry him yesterday," Jive Records spokeswoman Sonia Muckle said. She declined to provide further details.

The wedding was held Saturday evening at a private home in the Studio City area with 20 to 30 people attending, "Entertainment Tonight" said on its Web site.

Spears, 22, and Federline, 26, announced their engagement in June after dating since early this year.

It was the second marriage in nine months for Spears.

Culkin released after drug possession arrest

Former child star Macaulay Culkin was arrested on drug charges Friday during a traffic stop, authorities said.

The 24-year-old actor, best known for his role in the "Home Alone" movies, was taken into custody on complaints of possession of a controlled dangerous substance without a valid prescription and possession of marijuana, according to the Oklahoma County Sheriff's office.

Culkin, who lives in New York City, was booked into the Oklahoma County Jail and released after posting $4,000 bond, a jailer said.

Authorities confiscated about 17 grams of marijuana from a vehicle in which Culkin was a passenger. Officers also found 16 milligrams of prescription medications used to control anxiety and seizures, according to a police report.

Madonna addresses 'Kabbalah' conference

Pop star Madonna called for world peace Sunday at a conference on Jewish mysticism, a highlight of her five-day pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

Israel hopes the star — the biggest pop celebrity to visit in years — will revive tourism battered by four years of Mideast violence.

Madonna, wearing a low-cut dress with a black and white leopard pattern, said she was hesitant to come to Israel "after seeing so many news reports about terror attacks."

"I realize now that it is no more dangerous to be here than it is to be in New York," she told the gathering.

Madonna was raised Roman Catholic, but she has become an avid devotee of Jewish mysticism in recent years.

She has adopted the Hebrew name Esther, wears a red thread on her wrist to ward off the evil eye and reportedly refuses to perform on the Jewish Sabbath.

'I Can't, I'm Going to Winfield'

Seventy-year-old shirtless hippies, over-priced corn dogs, street corners lined with tie-dyed couches and overzealous cops on bicycles. That's just a snapshot of the colorful scenery seen at the annual Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield, Kan. This past weekend marked my third pilgrimage to the festival.

Every year people from all over make the worthwhile trip to south-central Kansas in search of internationally, nationally and regionally-acclaimed bluegrass artists combined with the outdoor experiences of camping.

Walking through the bustling fairgrounds are thousands of cars, many of which have license plates from Colorado, Iowa, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Texas and other states.

These people aren't only novices and devotees of the bluegrass world, many are simply amateur fans, such as myself, who find themselves more intrigued with this historic form of music come each September.

For the past 33 years, the festival has been the renowned home of the National Flat-Picking Championships. Several other championships also provide a showcase for the wide range of instruments found in bluegrass.

For example, Walnut Valley is home to the National Mountain Dulcimer, Guitar Flat Pick and Bluegrass Banjo Championships.

Awards are given in monetary and/or in the form of a new, high-quality instrument. However, the most significant honors are the titles given to these "masters" of their respective instruments. The fans actively show an amazing sense of camaraderie for a form of music so respected

BUG BITES | Bug likely from surrounding area, researcher says

"There's no way to tie the bite with the site," he said. "I purposely walked outside to get some bites, and I did not feel any bites."

Broce said the weather probably has something to do with the resurgence of bites, however he hasn't ever dealt with this problem before.

"The weather this year was very unusual, very cool, a lot of rain," he said. "I've been in Kansas for 24 years and have never seen anything like this."

Zurek agreed. "It might be a combination of wet and cool temperatures," he said.

Zurek said whatever the bug is, it is most likely from the surrounding area, and the weather has just made it more active.

"We are looking very intensely into this," he said. "It could be something new. I don't think so, but we don't know really."

Jay Reppert, medical director with Lafene Health Center, said Lafene hasn't noticed an increase in bug bites.

"Every year we see patients with bug bites," he said. "We surely haven't seen a big influx this year."

said Sproles will work as hard as possible to cut down on the fumbles.

"He is a little frustrated about the two fumbles and that is what is so great about him," Mann said.

He looks at the little things and how he can improve on those things.

Sproles' 292 yards was the fifth time in his last eight games the Olathe, Kan. native went for more than 200 yards rushing in a game and was the 21st time Sproles has had a 100-yard game in his career.

Coach Bill Snyder said he was pleased with Sproles' performance and won't have to talk to his star running back about the fumbles.

"Darren ran well," he said. "He put the ball on the ground a couple of times, and that will make him feel badly about his ballgame. He's more concerned about that one poor throw when he missed tight end Brian Casey in the endzone in the third quarter.

He ran the option beautifully.

Maybe it didn't go for a big play every time, but Meier showcased a knack for knowing just how long to hold the ball, when to pitch it and when to run on his own.

Meier also made several audibles, or "checks," at the line of scrimmage, which more often than not led to productive plays or even touchdowns.

These are the facts now: the defense is not good, the offense has the potential to be very good.

Things could change.

There are several veterans on the defense - cornerback Cedrick Williams, defensive end Scott Edmonds, and Berry to name a few who have the fire to make the defense better.

Maybe it happens, maybe it doesn't.

But if Wildcat fans are looking for something more to count on, something to encourage them that another Big 12 North Division is possible, they shouldn't look to the defense.

It's all on the offense. Sproles, Meier, the offensive line, they are the key to K-State victories.

The offense has the skills, they have the potential and their play will be the deciding factor as to whether or not the Wildcats go back to Kansas City to play for the conference title this year.

WINFIELD | Act combines vintage, honky-tonk, country yet so obscure from popular culture.

The festival is so jam-packed with live music, it's difficult to choose who to listen to! Some of the most popular acts were Tommy Emmanuel, Hot Club of Cowtown, the Waybacks and Byron Berline Band.

My favorite bluegrass act is a little band from Kansas City called the Wilders. They give a fresh twist with the vintage sounds of early American bluegrass, honky-tonk and country. With the first note from the fiddle, the entire festival's 20-something population dances in front of wherever the Wilders play. I do believe the Wilders are the Pied Pipers of the Walnut Valley Festival!

The first time I went to the Walnut Valley Festival, three years ago, was unforgettable.

When a close friend invited me to go along with her, I thought at first, "Yeah, I'll go listen to bluegrass...then I'll go marry my cousin!"

Oh, but I was so young. I was so quickly absorbed into the sub-culture of the festival: camping in a warm tent, 5 a.m. finger-picking jam sessions in the middle of the road and the "anything goes" motto that permeates throughout the people.

My friend, having gone to the event since infancy, watched with joy as I was experiencing the festival's coined-term of the "Winfield Virgin." For the past two years I have brought "virgins" along with me and watched as friends who wouldn't typically listen to anything so "hillbilly" come back to Manhattan jamming out to a banjo riff in their Abercrombie & Fitch.

Of course, there are setbacks. For example, the 96 degree weather! And though the tickets left a hole in my purse, my body covered with bug bites and my legs sore from dancing too much.

But I did come back with a lot of awesome memories, not to mention the things I'm reminded of because I don't remember!

My point is, I turned a Slipknot fan onto the sweet singing of a fiddle, so I think the Walnut Valley Festival speaks for itself.

A popular bumper sticker sold at the festival states with finality, "I Can't, I'm Going to Winfield."

And I already have my 2005 calendar marked.

Iran defends use of uranium

Country charges U.N. with "illegal" demands to cease work

By Ali Akbar Dareini
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran on Sunday denounced as "illegal" demands from the U.N. atomic watchdog agency that it freeze all work on uranium enrichment — a technology that can be used for nuclear weapons — and threatened to limit cooperation with the agency if it moves toward sanctions.

But Hasan Rowhani, Iran's top nuclear negotiator, stopped short of outright rejection of the International Atomic Energy Agency's demands and held out the possibility of negotiations on the issue.

"We are committed to the suspension of actual enrichment, but we have no decision to expand the suspension," Rowhani said at a news conference a day after the IAEA governing board issued its demand to freeze all enrichment-related work and said it would judge Tehran's compliance in two months.

"This demand is illegal," he said. "The IAEA board of governors has no right to make such a suspension obligatory for any country."

"Actual enrichment" refers to the injection of uranium gas into centrifuges. Rowhani indicated Iran's other activities, such as production, assembly and testing of centrifuges, were likely to continue.

Such ambiguity has led U.S. and other officials to accuse Iran of hiding an intention to create a nuclear weapons and trying to stonewall the international community. Iran says its nuclear program is only for peaceful energy purposes.

"We have no dependency on the outside world to control the nuclear fuel cycle. We don't need parts or technology," Rowhani said.

"We possess all the requirements," he added, referring to the steps from mining uranium ore to enriching uranium for use either to produce electricity or nuclear weapons. Analysts say any country that controls that cycle can produce nuclear weapons at will.

If the IAEA refers questions about Iranian nuclear activities to the U.N. Security Council for possible sanctions, Rowhani said: "Iran will stop implementing the additional protocol and will limit its cooperation with the IAEA."

Under the additional protocol to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty that Iran signed last year, it is required to allow unfettered inspections of its nuclear facilities. Iran began implementing the additional protocol right away, though technically it has yet to be ratified by the parliament and made into law.

More than 200 lawmakers in Iran's conservative-dominated parliament threatened on Sunday to block ratification.

Iran is not prohibited from enrichment under its obligations to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. But for months it has faced international pressure to suspend such activities as a good-faith gesture.

The United States insists the 35-member IAEA board must refer Iran to the Security Council when it meets again on Nov. 25 if Tehran doesn't comply.

U.S. Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham, in Vienna for a conference of the Global Threat Reduction Initiative — meant to secure radioactive materials and keep them out of terrorists' hands — warned Iran to heed the IAEA decision.

"I think the board sent a very clear message that Iran must cease its pursuit of (nuclear) weapons and ... suspend its enrichment activity," he told reporters.

"We should all expect that Iran should follow the obligations" laid down by the resolution, he said. "The clock is ticking down, and I believe they should comply with the resolution."

Professor sentenced, denied attorney access

By Abdullah Al-Shihri
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — A Saudi court sentenced a university professor to five years in prison Sunday on charges of sowing dissent after he compared U.S. killings of Iraqi civilians to Osama bin Laden's terror attacks.

Saeed bin Mubarak al-Zaeer, a 57-year-old university professor, was sentenced by the court in the capital Riyadh. The sentencing took place without the presence of a lawyer representing al-Zaeer.

Al-Zaeer was detained by security forces in April after he appeared on the Al-Jazeera television station and made comments comparing the killing of civilians in terror attacks by bin Laden's al-Qaeda group with Iraqi civilians killed by U.S. forces or Palestinians killed by Israelis.

The professor was detained in April for showing "blatant support and compassion for terrorist acts, and his justification of the deeds of its perpetrators — in spite of how this goes against Islamic teachings," the Interior Ministry said at the time.

The court convicted Al-Zaeer of "sowing dissent and inciting sedition against the rulers." His sentence begins immediately.

Al-Zaeer's son, Mubarak, was detained in May for appearing on Al-Jazeera to denounce his father's arrest. He was released that same month after pledging not to comment to the media. The kingdom has since launched a high-profile crackdown on terrorists and extremist clerics and repeatedly has warned Saudis not to support terrorists in word or deed.

Saudi Arabia has witnessed several terror attacks in the past year that have killed more than 60 people. Most of the attacks were blamed on the al-Qaeda network. Al-Zaeer is a professor of mass communications who has called for greater transparency within the closely state-monitored Saudi clergy. He previously spent eight years in jail without charges before being released in March 2003.

IRAQ | More kidnapping reported

including two Americans and a Briton who are also threatened with decapitation by their captors, who claim to be from an al-Qaeda-linked militant group.

News of another kidnapping emerged Sunday, as the Lebanese Foreign Ministry said three Lebanese working for a travel agent and their Iraqi driver were snatched on the highway between Baghdad and the insurgency stronghold of Fallujah. The captives were identified as Fadi Munir Yassin, Cherbal Karam Haj and Aram Nalbandian, all Lebanese, and Iraqi Ahmed Mirza.

The slaying of the three Kurds was claimed by the Ansar al-Sunna Army, a group that has targeted Iraqi Kurds and that previously killed 12 kidnapped Nepalese workers. A statement from the group, posted with Sunday's video, said the three were abducted as they were transporting military vehicles to a base in Taji, 15 miles north of Baghdad.

The video shows three young men, two of whom hold up identity cards. Seconds later, each has his throat slit. A man is seen cutting off each hostage's head. The heads are then seen placed on the victims' backs.

The "apostate military men, affiliated with the traitor Kurdistan Democratic Party" were beheaded after being interrogated, the statement said. Their bodies were left on the road "for them to be an example to others, and for us to avenge our women, children and elderly who die daily from American raids."

The statement's authenticity could not be immediately verified. It said Ansar al-Sunna Army has targeted Iraqi Kurdish parties because they have "sworn allegiance to the crusaders and fought and are still fighting Islam and its people."

Folk life, fine art attract visitors to city festival

By Mary Renee Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women in animal skins and men in tights joined hundreds of arts and crafts vendors Saturday and Sunday for the Little Apple Festival in City Park.

This was the 29th year for the Manhattan Parks and Recreation's folk life, fine art and craft festival.

The festival incorporates a variety of crafts, folk art, fine art, folk life demonstrations, music, ethnic foods and a children's play area.

According to parks and recreation department regulations only works that are the original work of the seller — no kits, imports, resale or manufactured items were allowed.

Colleen Westerman, junior in family studies and social work, said she started working for the department during the summer as a camp counselor.

This past weekend she was working at the Make-n-Take craft booth sponsored by the department, where children could make butterflies out of coffee filters and pipe cleaners.

Westerman said she thought the turnout was good.

"It got really busy after it rained," Westerman said as she helped a girl twist a purple pipe cleaner around the center of the coffee filter that had been colored with markers.

At the festival, Tom Isaacson from Salina sold Old Home Root Beer from a trailer made to look like a wooden storefront.

He said customers could choose from a traditional bottle filled with root beer or two sizes of refillable glass drinking jars.

The drinking jars resembled canning jars complete with metal screw-on tops.

"You have got to find your own. It's like being an entertainer — you have got to find your own thing," Isaacson said. "These jars are our thing."

He said he got into craft fairs many years ago making woodcrafts, and now he travels to fairs year-round, all over the country.

"We tried lots of things and ended up with root beer," Isaacson said. "I guess the farthest place we have been would be Seattle."

Isaacson said food vending is a family affair. He said his brother-in-law was selling cinnamon roasted nuts a few yards behind him.

Isaacson said this weekend was OK, but overall business is not as good as it was and he is not sure why.

"I'd like to blame it on the economy but it could be any number of things," he said. "It could be overkill in the craft market. People only have so much money."

Brad Graves, who operates a booth for his business Missing Link, said business was good.

"I made enough today to pay for the booth and then some," Graves said Saturday evening. "Tomorrow will be all profit."

It wasn't all business, as horse and pony rides drew crowds of children who also had the opportunity to milk a goat at the festival.

The Log Cabin in City Park was open for the weekend festival.

The cabin, which is usually open from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays, April to October, was open and staffed for the duration of the festival, said Janice von Riesen, volunteer for the Riley County Historical Society and Museum.

"All the objects in the cabin are authentic; there are no reproductions," von Riesen said.

She said the cabin is set up with tools and household items from the mid-1800s.

In addition to providing information about the cabin and its history, von Riesen was handing out fliers about Celebrate 150!, the Manhattan/Riley County Sesquicentennial Celebration planned for 2005. She said there has been a lot of interest in the celebration from those visiting the festival.

Across the park sat Heather Schuler, wearing a long, green gown. She said she is a member of the Society for Creative Anachronism and a vendor at the festival.

She said she and her husband have been selling off and on for the last 15 years items including wooden bowls, silverware, hairpins, head wreaths and knives.

"This is one of the best places to meet interesting people," Schuler said.

"Not just the SCA, but there are pioneer re-enactors, food

Second soldier dies of wounds from shooting

By John Milburn
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — A second Fort Riley soldier died from wounds suffered in a shooting near Clay Center, while two suspects remain in jail on $1 million bond.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation said Monday that Spc. Christopher Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo., died Saturday afternoon. He was shot Sept. 13 at a Clay County home.

Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif., was dead at the scene.

He served two tours of duty in Iraq and was back in Kansas to have surgery on a hand he injured in a football game in Iraq about a month ago.

Prosecutors have charged Sgts. Aaron Stanley, 22, of Bismarck, N.D., and Eric Colvin, 23, of Papillion, Neb., with one count each of first-degree murder and attempted first-degree murder.

Those charges could be amended following Hymer's death. In addition, Fort Riley officials continue to conduct their own investigation. No charges have been filed in a military court against Stanley and Colvin.

All four soldiers were part of the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry of the 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division. Colvin, Stanley and Hymer were part of the rear detachment, working as liaisons between families at Fort Riley and approximately 800 soldiers from the unit deployed in Iraq since June.

Stanley also faces eight unrelated drug charges filed in Pottawatomie County in June.

The shootings occurred in Stanley's rented home, and authorities believe he called police. A rifle and a handgun were found at the scene.

Authorities have not said what prompted the shootings.

Committee mulls over fee proposal

By Scott Seel
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KSDB 91.9-FM's privilege fee proposal underwent significant cuts Monday night as the Privilege Fee Committee continues to mull over the radio station's request.

The issue of compensation for Station Manager Candy Walton and of the individual student positions received a lot of attention during the meeting.

At-large Committee Member Lucas Haag said he was hesitant to give such a significant increase to employees, because he said they are being paid more than their counterparts at the University of Kansas.

"We're already ahead of the curve," Haag said.

The proposal includes an 80-percent increase in the radio station's portion of Walton's salary — from $8,500 to $14,092.

Committee members voted to increase her salary by a rate of three percent each year.

Originally, a motion was made to increase the rate by 10 percent in the first year and leave it steady in each of the two subsequent years; however, the Local coffee spot retains popularity after name change

The name may have changed at the Bluestem Bistro, but the atmosphere hasn't. Formerly known as Java Espresso and Bakery, the Bistro still appeals to the same customers, Manager Brent Aldridge said.

"We don't really have a different crowd, but I know business is up from a year ago at this time," he said.

Jennifer Mosier, sophomore in biology, and Kelly Dooley, sophomore in art, said they have been customers for about a year.

"We lived in the dorms last year, so we needed to escape," Mosier said.

Dooley said they like the Bistro for more than just their menu.

"We have met a lot of people here," she said.

Joe Sipe, third-year student in veterinary medicine, said he enjoys the staff at the Bistro.

"I've made friends with the people that work here," he said.

The name isn't the only thing that has changed at the Bistro.

Aldridge said there have been renovations, including new paint on the walls and a new deck.

Sipe said he especially likes the new deck.

"I love being able to sit outside when it's nice," he said. "It's also a great place to hang out with friends."

The new paint includes a color palette of yellow and red.

"I like the new colors; they have a warm feeling to them," Mosier said.

Dooley said she likes the new artwork on the walls, as well.

"The artwork is cool, but I kind of miss the student artwork that used to hang on the walls," she said.

The Bistro also offers a new wine selection, and the staff is in the process of Kerry speaks out on Iraq war, Bush's policies

By Nedra Pickler
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On Monday, Sen. John Kerry said mistakes by President Bush in invading Iraq could lead to unending war and no responsible commander in chief would have begun the war knowing Saddam Hussein didn't possess weapons of mass destruction and wasn't an imminent threat to the United States.

"Yet today, President Bush tells us that he would do everything all over again, the same way. How can he possibly be serious?" the Democratic presidential candidate said at New York University.

Kerry, a fourth-term Massachusetts senator, voted to give Bush authority to wage the war and he said in August he still would have voted that way had he known there were no weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

The Democrat makes a distinction between his voting to grant a president war-making authority as a member of the Senate and Bush, as commander in chief, actually taking that fateful step. Republicans have accused Kerry of waffling on the war.

Kerry said Monday, "Saddam Hussein was a brutal dictator who deserves his own special place in hell," Kerry said. "But that was not, in itself, a reason to go to war."

Bush campaign spokesman Steve Schmidt said Kerry's goal of pulling U.S. troops out of Iraq in his first term sends "a clear signal of defeat and retreat to America's enemies that will make the world a far more dangerous place."

CAMPUS PULSE

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

Some suggest the Collegian created a monster when it created the Campus Fourum.

The Fourum was created to give a voice to the student body. It has accomplished that, and much more.

The Campus Fourum, located at the bottom of the opinion page, is what many students considered to be the Collegian, even though the Collegian has much more to offer.

Setting aside the fact that the Fourum is a great way for students to get their voices heard, we as a public newspaper have to be careful of what we are letting be heard.

Some of the things that we are seeing come out of the Fourum are hateful and bash our fellow students and faculty.

Giving people an open avenue to voice anything they so well please can be very dangerous.

It can also be healthy.

Don't get me wrong; I like the fact that K-State students have a chance to get their voices heard.

Unfortunately, some will use that voice for no good.

This past week the Collegian staff spent many hours discussing how or if we should change the format of the Fourum. Like anything else, when it comes to change, there were many different views offered both for and against changes to this Collegian staple.

I now know how others who have been bashed by the Fourum feel. Is this what we have come to as a society? And if so, should we as a student publication allow this kind of trash in our school's newspaper?

Discussing this issue with my faithful readers this week, I found out they don't want the Fourum to go bye bye, but suggest they would like to see some better judgment displayed by the staff on what they print in the Fourum.

I've read lots of constructive ideas on how the Collegian staff could improve the Fourum, but as I've said before, change is a long and often difficult process.

If you have legitimate proposals on how we can improve the Fourum, without destroying the voice of the students, please feel free to e-mail me.

The Collegian staff is not trying to take your voice away. We're just trying to put out a great paper we all can be proud of, and with your support we will succeed.

Chili's program supports children's research hospital

Pictures of peppers colored by patrons of Chili's hang at the entrance to the restaurant and throughout in support of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital on Monday night. The restaurant, along with 850 other Chili's restaurants, gave all of their profits earned Monday to the hospital. The goal was to raise $2 million.

Donations top $6,000 as patron drawings are displayed at restaurant

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eating at Chili's had a whole new meaning Monday.

Shane Allen, Chili's manager, said the restaurant has been working in connection with St. Jude Children's Research Hospital to raise money for the hospital.

Throughout September, Allen said, patrons have had the opportunity to create a pepper for one dollar. Customers are able to decorate their pepper as they see fit and the peppers are hung throughout the restaurant.

"It creates a really neat atmosphere," he said. "They're real bright and stuck throughout the whole restaurant."

Allen said the Manhattan store, despite being in a relatively small market, is leading the region in the Create a Pepper contest and in the top 10 in the nation.

"We've got about $6,000 from everybody building a pepper," he said. "We're looking by the end of the month just from the peppers to hit the $7,000 mark."

In addition to the pepper contest, Allen said Monday was a very special day at Chili's throughout the country.

"On Sept. 20, every Chili's in the country will be donating all of its profits to St. Jude," he said.

Allen said he expected to bring in around six or seven thousand throughout the day for the hospital.

"Tonight we also got a hold of some local area businesses and are doing a silent auction," he said.

Some items included in the auction were a football autographed by Coach Bill Snyder and a basketball signed by the women's basketball team.

Andrea Bannister, general manager of Applebee's in Manhattan said her restaurant takes part in philanthropy as well.

"We do a lot of support, but our main philanthropy is education," Bannister said. "We do 'A' is for Apple coupons for all the schools."

She said the program allows teachers to give children certificates for free meals.

"We also have the student of the month program," Bannister said. "We have a deal with one of the elementary schools where every month, the school chooses a student of the month and that student and teacher get a free meal."

She said the restaurant takes part in many other events to give back to the community.

Professors identify mysterious insect

Bites from mites have plagued region

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The type of insect that plagued the Midwest with bites is now known.

K-State professors found that the bug is a Pyemotes, which is commonly known as a straw itch mite or grain itch mite.

The bugs are biting people from throughout the area, but the worst outbreaks are in the Pittsburg, Kan., and Lincoln, Neb., areas, Alberto Broce, professor of entomology, said.

Broce said the mites are only 1/25 of an inch in size and are parasitic.

"The mites feed on larvae of insects that develop in straw or grain," he said. "The mites suck the blood of the insect."

If there are enough mites, they can kill insects, Broce said.

"When there are too many mites, they can be blown out by the wind," he said.

When blown by the wind, mites will land on people and animals, and that's when bites occur, Broce said.

Since the mites are very small, the bites could not be felt, so it took several days to obtain a sample of the insect. They finally were able to do so Sunday from Pittsburg, said Ludek Zurek, professor of medical entomology.

Zurek said they are being found mainly on oak trees.

"We would like to find out if there is any correlation with oak trees," he said.

Broce and Zurek said they are unsure why there are so many Straw or hay itch mites have been plaguing the area, particularly Pittsburg, Kan., and Lincoln, Neb. The bugs are about 1/25 of an inch in size, but when they are gravid, or pregnant, such as shown in the above picture, the abdomen grows up to two to three times the size of a normal bug, because the mites are born as grown adults, Alberto Broce, K-State professor of entomology, said.

mite bites, but it could have something to do with the density of the trees or the mild and wet summer the area experienced.

The bites are not expected to be too serious, but they could cause a rash or itch, Zurek said.

"So far, we don't know of any cases that have developed serious bites," he said.

Zurek said insect repellents that contain DEET are likely the best defense against the bug because of its effectiveness on chigger bites and other such bites.

He said spraying trees with insecticide will not help, however, because the mites protect themselves by hiding in galls, which are bumps on leaves created by flies and wasps.

"Spraying insecticide is just a waste of time and money," Zurek said.

Spam filtering added to Webmail accounts

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A spam-filtering system on Webmail may be cause of lightened inbox loads since Aug. 22.

Charlotte Kerstein, junior in radio and television, said spam has not been in her inbox thus far.

"(Not having spam) makes me want to check my e-mail more often," Kerstein said.

Brady Sorensen, sophomore in accounting and finance, said he is pleased he does not have spam in his inbox.

"I don't have to go through and delete a bunch of crap I'm not going to read anyway," Sorensen said.

Julie Bell, Unix system manager at Computing and Network Services, said she warns students not to buy items from unsolicited e-mail messages.

Bell said the college receives between four and five million e-mails a week, and approximately 1 million of them are spam.

"At this time, we have set (the system) up so, that after a two-week period, if mail is still in a junk folder, we can delete it for them," Bell said.

Students have the option of "opting" out of having their spam-filtering system in their Webmail. Bell said the option is accessible from the e-mail section of the K-State eProfile page.

Bell said all e-mail goes through a virus check before reaching a student's inbox.

By using their eProfile page, students can disable spam filtering, adjust their spam sensitivity, change the destination of their spam, select languages of e-mail and allow specific e-mail addresses.

According to Bell, the spam-filtering system is not fool-proof.

"If (the system) is still not catching spam, students can tweak their level of sensitivity," she said.

Students also may block one person or domain by entering it in as an option.

TO THE POINT Campaign news requires careful citizen review

The recent fiasco involving CBS News' handling of documents related to President Bush's National Guard service highlights the continued need for the critical eye of the American public when questionable evidence is used.

Since the original broadcast of an examination of memos related to Bush's service during the Vietnam era, numerous independent sources examined the evidence for themselves and sought an explanation from CBS.

As the situation progressed, more and more sources have proved unreliable, and CBS released an official apology concerning the "mistake in judgment."

While news organizations strive to provide adequate and accurate news pertinent to the upcoming elections, their best efforts can be misled.

At the same time, CBS' decision to focus on President Bush's Guard service is questionable, at best, in its relevance to the issues most important to Americans in the presidential election.

The media must hold itself to a high standard of accuracy, but the public also must examine the reports issued forth with a constantly critical eye. A strong and smart citizenry is vital to stronger and smarter journalism.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Picking up after ourselves

Foreign policy requires generation to step up and work

Ever wonder why Dan Rather called our grandparents the greatest generation?

My theory is they listened to their mothers' advice and actually picked up after themselves.

CHAZ STEIMEL

Think about it. The biggest mess they made is easily what was left of Japan and Europe after World War II. We're talking whole cities burned out and two radioactive pits.

Their immediate response was to spend billions upon billions of dollars in rebuilding their mess. Mind you, this was back when a billion could buy a lot more.

And what a great job they did, too. We haven't fought either Japan or Germany in over 60 years and better still, Germany and Japan are considered a couple of the best economies around.

Sometimes I wish the greatest generation's kids picked up after themselves as well.

To tell you the truth, if Bush or Kerry does not turn the whole Iraq reconstruction around soon, it will be our generation picking up the pieces.

The New York Times pointed last week that the best in our intelligence communities put together a National Intelligence Estimate, which is jargon for "our best guess," on the direction of Iraq.

Well it turns out that "our best guess" from our best minds is that Iraq's next 18 months are going to be shaky.

The best thing that could happen is Iraq's economy and government will remain unstable at best.

On the other end of the spectrum, complete civil war and all the great things that come with it, particularly death and pestilence.

This year's presidential election will decide who will be making decisions about Iraq, but neither candidate has said much about how they plan to help Iraq.

We need to call upon both to stop shirking debate over Iraq and lay out in front of all America how they plan to clean up our collective mess.

Sen. Kerry attacks Bush for "living in a fantasy world," while President Bush claims that Sen. Kerry would "lead us drift toward tragedy."

As Americans, we need to remember what Secretary of State Colin Powell told us, "Now is not the time to be faint at heart."

Hear, hear Mr. Secretary. America needs not to argue amongst ourselves how we got here, but we need to increase our activities in Iraq if we want a peaceful resolution.

Foreign Affairs, a leading journal on international relations, looks to Larry Diamond, a former senior advisor to the temporary Iraqi government, as he pointed out that America has tried to rebuild Iraq on the cheap.

This is exactly the problem. Rebuilding an entire state is not easy, simple, and or ever cheap. America needs to expand its economic, political, and security programs in Iraq.

We need to make more jobs available. By employing more Iraqi's, fewer and fewer militants will sign up.

In the political realm, the coalition needs to focus on establishing self-rule as soon as it can. The quicker the average Iraqi has a stake in the new government the sooner violence will subside.

Finally, neither economics nor politics can succeed without a guarantee of basic security.

Unfortunately for the United States, that means us. Without security, elections and commerce cannot happen, the people are will simply be too afraid.

Immediately, the United States needs to spend more, at least triple the amount that was originally planned.

We may eventually have to double our current troop deployments as well, as Diamond noted.

The consequences of not piecing Iraq together are severe. If America abandons Iraq, it would create a power vacuum which would only encourage tyrannical and malicious leadership.

Bush, Kerry - I will not tell you again! Pick your generation's mess so mine does not have to cover for you.

Chaz is a senior in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

Life insurance vital to college students

Getting sick away from home is an ugly experience. Especially if you are an international student and still feeling uncomfortable with the local foods.

One moment, you may feel like God is punishing you, and the next you think God is providing a chance for the attractive person next door to make you soup.

Your illness cannot have a soup-relishing turn or a romantic twist if you have not yet become a gambler.

I could describe myself as a compulsive gambler. Each year I bet insurance marketers 120 bucks that I will get sick or die before my next birthday.

Petting the woolly beast of health insurance and feeding it piles and piles of money has become an inevitable part of American life.

Let's have a look at health care on our campus. I divide students into two categories: graduate teaching or research assistants and undergraduates.

ALTAF KARIM

Through an agreement between Mega Life and Health Insurance Company and K-State, there are two different insurance plans available for these two categories of students.

GTA and GRA health insurance is partially covered by the university, so they pay a nominal charge of $58 per semester.

Unfortunately, this option is not available for their spouses or children. To insure a spouse costs 20 times the amount of a GTA's premium. Compared to last year, the premium for a GTA/GRA spouse has increased by 130 percent.

This increment is unfair and discourages students from buying health protection for their families. On the other hand, no increase happened in GTA/GRA salaries to compensate.

This situation breeds an element of fear and insecurity in their minds. What do you expect from a GTA in terms of his performance and efficiency as a freshman class instructor if he cannot afford health insurance for his family?

Although current health insurance policies for GTA/GRA families need serious reforms, I would never recommend that they take a chance and go without insurance.

The health insurance for regular students offered by Mega Life Insurance Company through K-State looks attractive.

It covers injuries and sickness for the year at $647.50.

This plan is much cheaper than other companies, but many students still cannot afford it.

Besides health insurance issues, I have a few concerns about Lafene Health Center.

There is no doubt Lafene has provided excellent facilities and services for student healthcare since it opened. I have great respect for its passionate and professional staff and their ever-lasting cheerfulness.

However, I think Lafene being off campus makes Lafene less beneficial than it used to be.

It is not as accessible, being a much longer walking distance from campus.

When Lafene was situated on campus, it was not hard even for very busy students to spare time to visit Lafene in the early stages of their sickness. Now students with busy schedules only consult it when symptoms of their illness get into a serious stage.

Because of this, it's important for students to pay close attention to their health, especially if they've chosen not to have health insurance.

Being away from home for the first time, freshmen tend to get sick more than most people. Eating disorders are a common problem as well.

Also, lack of sleep or drinking alcohol can lessen your ability to handle things properly. And these habits can cause emotional stress as well.

Physical activity, visiting the recreational center frequently and eating well balanced meals permit your body to function at peak performance.

A balanced diet, including fruits, also helps students to protect against diseases.

And if that fails, University Counseling Services and Lafene are here to provide students proper solutions to these problems.

Altaf is a graduate student in physics. Please send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

PERSPECTIVES

Governor advocates 'state beverage' idea

THE DAILY VIOLETTE
ILLINOIS STATE U.

NORMAL, Ill. — In a move sure to spawn mixed emotions from people across Illinois, Gov. Rod Blagojevich is attempting to solve state budgetary problems with a corporate-sponsored "state beverage."

According to an article from the Washington Times, Gov. Blagojevich recently asked 19 beverage distributors if they would be interested in the possibility of signing a contract to market a non-alcoholic beverage as the "official state beverage."

The drink would be available in roughly 1,300 vending machines at state parks, rest stops and state offices. The deal would be similar to recent contracts between cities and beverage companies, like Houston and Dr. Pepper's $5.3 million contract, and the New York City and Snapple contract, which nets $126 million dollars for the city over five years.

Supporters of the idea say the partnership could help solve some of the intense budget problems facing the state, while opponents are crying that the state should not be whoring itself out to a faceless corporate sponsor.

And the opponents are right to react to this proposal with intense skepticism. The State of Illinois is not for sale. We are not just another arena or ball-park waiting to be baptized by a corporate savior. But apparently Blagojevich thinks Illinois is for sale, as this is his second attempt to find corporations to bankroll the state.

Last year, the governor proposed an initiative to find corporate sponsors for state programs, events and facilities.

While his administration promised residents would never visit places like "Weight Watchers" Starved Rock State Park, or Illinois "State Farm" University, they did advocate placing small advertisements on state vehicles or in state facilities.

However, once the state becomes addicted to corporate heroin, the next step could easily be naming rights sponsorship. Not only would proposals like these undermine American culture and further demean our proudest institutions, they essentially ask for corruption to occur right in front of the public's eyes.

Blagojevich was elected with a message of ending corruption and influence-peddling in state politics, but these plans invite companies to openly compete for contracts that can result in an expansion of corruption.

Corporations already have enough unofficial influence in government, is publicly increasing that going to result in anything more than "the best government money can buy?"

Yes, Illinois is still facing intense budgetary shortcomings, and some unorthodox solutions may help. But a true, long-term solution to the problem lies in reorganizing the state budget in some way.

Whether overhauling the tax system or reducing state government, something needs to be done to address the larger problem.

The state doesn't need to resort to prostitution.

Editor,

As a K-State alumnus and a former journalism major at KSU, I have to say that I agree with Abby Hiles' recent column on the crazy rise in tuition.

But I feel that she may have missed the more important aspect of this topic, as well as the true reason for the dramatic rise in tuition.

K-State is the best school in the Midwest, and one of the best schools in the country.

And yes, the $137 that you are paying right now is still a bargain.

What you may not know is that every junior college student that K-State allows in to finish their degree cheapens your diploma and raises your tuition.

With state funding dropping for state colleges and junior colleges continuing to get local funding, more and more of these thin-blooded, drop-in students are planting their junior college educated butts into my alma mater's classroom chairs to receive the same degree that I worked on for four years.

As long as President We-fald continues to allow junior college credits to transfer to four-year degrees at KSU, your tuition will rise and your diploma will cheapen.

What current students fail to realize is that the private sector, a.k.a. the real world, knows which schools allow large percentages of hybrid degrees into the main stream.

The more transfer students a university lets in, the less its degree is worth.

The private sector wants pure four year degrees from accredited universities, not watered down part junior college degrees.

PERSPECTIVES

Martha Stewart could take a lesson from OutKast's lyrics

NORTHERN STAR
NORTHERN ILLINOIS U.

DEKALB, Ill. — Apparently, billionaire Martha Stewart missed the point of OutKast's hit song "Roses" — they really do smell like boo-boo.

If anyone awaiting prison time would be more concerned about the smell of roses than about being convicted of a crime, it would be Stewart.

Wednesday, Stewart spoke at a choreographed news conference, saying she will continue to appeal her

March conviction of lying about why she sold shares of ImClone Systems Inc. stock, but will head for prison to end what she called a personal nightmare.

Stewart spoke about how much she will miss holiday traditions, her beloved, fun-loving dogs, her seven lively cats, her canaries, her horses and her chickens.

It's one thing to want to put the nightmare of public scandal behind you, but to play a sympathy card and make a mockery of the judicial system is an insult to those who abide by the law.

While Stewart clearly doesn't agree her conviction was warranted, she should take her punishment seriously.

She should not use it as an opportunity to gain more publicity.

Her tearful public appearance Wednesday served only to promote herself and her company — is it any coincidence that stock shares in Martha Stewart Living rose 3 percent that day?

Although Stewart isn't the first celebrity to do prison time, her sentence shouldn't be molded to her every request.

After all, it's supposed to be punishment — not a five-month stay in a less-than-luxurious hotel.

A prison term that accommodates "spring planting" or 400-thread-count sheets does little to teach a lesson.

To put a new twist on the OutKast lyrics: Being convicted of breaking the law really does stank, but making a public spectacle of your misfortunes doesn't smell like roses, either.

Bonds a Giants talent

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Let me start this off by pledging my allegiance to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

By default, I am supposed to hate the San Francisco Giants as much as a K-State fan hates KU, and I do. That's why this is so hard to say.

Barry Bonds does not suck, as so many fans in the $5-per-seat, left-field pavilion section chanted during a game at Dodger Stadium against the Giants. He is a great player, probably one of the three best of all-time to play the game.

That was painful to say, about as painful as watching an entire Royals' game on television.

On Friday night, Bonds hit his 700th career homerun in the Giants 4-1 win over the San Diego Padres, joining an exclusive class that includes Babe Ruth and Hank Aaron.

That does not suck. Bonds, 40 years old, leads the league in batting average this season (.372), is first in slugging percentage (.827), first in walks (208), first in intentional base on balls (106) and third in homeruns (43).

He set the single season homerun record in 2001 with 73, and is also the all-time walks leader with 2,278 and has been intentionally walked 590 times in his career — Aaron is second on the all time list with 293 free passes.

I wouldn't say those stats suck.

This was not supposed to be the path of Barry Bonds. He was always the best all-around player in baseball but was never mentioned in the same breath of Aaron and Ruth. The ones that were supposed to chase down the homerun kings were Mark McGwire (out of baseball and making a run at joining the PGA tour) and Ken Griffey Jr. (out of baseball, because he is always injured).

Griffey Jr. has sucked since he signed with the Cincinnati Reds.

I'll stay away from the Griffey Jr. bashing, because that would be too easy and I'll get back to — first take a deep breath — praising Bonds.

Bonds is not fake, as so many athletes are. Whether its standing at home plate and watching a homerun sail into the water at SBC Park or sitting in his leather recliner in front of his big screen television in the clubhouse, while his teammates are relegated to wooden stools and their own personal radio, that is Barry Bonds.

Sucks for his teammates but not for Bonds.

Bonds is, by far, not a media darling; he has about as much love for the medium as Bill Snyder does. When was the last time you saw Bonds promoting a product on television? He probably never will. He is the one on the MLB 2004 video game without a name, just a number, because he refused to join the player's association and allow the game-maker to use his name for their product.

He could be, he should be, the most marketed athlete in baseball, but he is not.

He chooses to be Barry Bonds.

A one-earring wearing, leaning over the plate — because I'm not afraid to get hit because I have this big elbow pad on to deflect the ball off of — enlarged forehead and no neck, steroid-using freak that sucks.

Sorry, I couldn't take being nice to Bonds anymore; I had to get that out. After all, I am a Dodgers fan.

Exceeding expectations

Former Cat's NFL journey leads him to Indianapolis

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ryan Lilja's life seemed too good to be true.

After going unpicked in the NFL draft last April, the former K-State offensive lineman was invited to the Kansas City Chiefs' training camp in August.

"Playing with the Chiefs was unbelievable. It was so exciting to step into a huddle with players like Trent Green and Priest Holmes," Lilja said.

Soon enough, he was playing in the Chiefs' final exhibition game against the Dallas Cowboys in Texas.

He never imagined he would be in Indianapolis four days later.

Lilja said the month of Chiefs' training camp was difficult, but very beneficial to his physical and mental game.

Lilja said he received a great deal of motivation from Chiefs' Coach Dick Vermeil.

"Coach Vermeil is a really genuine guy — the kind of guy who makes you want to play harder for him," Lilja said.

Bob Gretz, sports director for 101.1 FM in Kansas City, said Vermeil was optimistic about Lilja's chances.

"Vermeil was Ryan's biggest supporter," Gretz said.

Vermeil was a big enough supporter to give Lilja the opportunity to start on the offensive line against the Cowboys in the Chiefs' final exhibition game Sept. 2.

"I found out I was going to be playing two nights before the game," Lilja said. "I think I maybe got about six hours of sleep in those two nights."

Not only was Lilja competing in his first start in a professional game, but he was facing off against Dallas' La'Roi Glover, a five-time Pro Bowl selection.

"I was extremely nervous. It's a very intimidating situation," Lilja said.

Lilja said he quickly learned the biggest difference between the college and professional levels — the quickness of the game.

"The pace is much faster in the NFL — that is the most difficult thing to get acclimated to," Lilja said.

On Sunday, Sept. 5, the Chiefs informed Lilja they were cutting him, but were anticipating signing him onto the practice roster after 24 hours.

According to NFL regulations, once a player is cut from a team, there is a 24-hour grace period making them available to interested teams.

"Ryan's role with the Chiefs would have been an emergency player on the offensive line, and he would have been playing against Ryan Lilja was a second-team All-Big 12 offensive lineman during K-State's run to the 2003 Big 12 Conference Championship. Lilja is now on the roster of the Indianapolis Colts after going through preseason camp with the Kansas City Chiefs.

some of the best starters in the league," Gretz said. "The coaches already knew they were keeping rookie Kevin Sampson, and they didn't feel comfortable keeping two rookies on a nine-man offensive line. They didn't cut Ryan because of his holding penalty (against Dallas). It's just the nature of the game."

Ryan's mom, Linda Lilja, said Ryan was content with his role on the practice roster.

"Ryan was happy about making the practice roster," she said. "He never thought he'd make it that far," she said.

The next day at noon while Lilja was practicing with the Chiefs, he received word he'd been claimed on waivers by the Indianapolis Colts. Unlike his situation with the Chiefs, Ryan had been added to the Colts' 53-man roster and positioned as third guard on the offensive line. Not only that, but he would be earning an NFL salary with the Colts.

By 8 p.m., Ryan was on a plane to Indianapolis.

"Of course, I am thrilled to play for the Colts — they're a great team. They barely lost to the defending Super bowl champions (earlier this season), so they're definitely talented," Lilja said.

Linda said she remained positive towards Ryan's switch.

"We all got our hopes up that he'd play for the Chiefs, but I think his going to the Colts is awesome. I mean, every little boy dreams of playing in the NFL," Linda said.

The Chiefs, Gretz said, hoped Lilja would stay in Kansas City.

"The Chiefs were very disappointed when Ryan got picked up by the Colts," Gretz said. "They were hoping to get him back on the roster, so they could work with him."

After an unexpected move to Indianapolis, Ryan said he was surprised and assured when he received a phone call from Vermeil soon after he'd arrived in Indianapolis.

"I thought it was very classy for Coach Vermeil to call me. He called to tell me he was sorry how it all ended, and that if I had any questions in the transition process, to give him a call," Lilja said.

With the Chiefs in his past, Lilja said he is looking forward his future with the Colts.

"The Colts' offense isn't quite as advanced as Kansas City's, but they are just as talented," Ryan said.

Always the hard worker in high school and college according to mother Linda, Lilja said he hopes to prove himself with the Colts.

"I want to be able to back up both guards and not miss a beat. I don't want anyone to be able to tell I'm a rookie," he said.

Though Ryan's football career looks promising, it was only five years ago his future was not looking as bright.

As a senior in high school at Shawnee Mission Northwest, Lilja was kicked off the football team two games into the season for attending a party where there was underage drinking. According

CFB | Sproles named Big 12 offensive player of the week

Following a game in which he broke his own K-State single-game rushing record, senior running back Darren Sproles was named Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week, conference officials announced Monday.

Sproles

Sproles dominated Louisiana-Lafayette in the Wildcats' 40-20 win at home on Saturday, running for 292 yards and a touchdown on 38 carries.

This is the first time this season and third time in his career that Sproles has been named conference player of the week.

Currently, Sproles is No. 4 in the nation in rushing.

CFB | Texas A&M game to be nationally televised

TBS/Superstation will broadcast the Oct. 2 K-State at Texas A&M game, the K-State Department of Athletics learned Monday.

The national telecast will kick off at 6 p.m.

K-State is a perfect 4-0 all-time on TBS, with the last Wildcat appearance on the Superstation coming last year in a win at home against Missouri.

This is the second time this year a K-State game will appear on national television, as the Sept. 11 home game against Fresno State was televised on Fox Sports Net.

General | University of Kansas must release records

The University of Kansas must release its athletic director's employment contract and other details related to his compensation, a district judge ordered.

Douglas County District Judge Jack Murphy, in a ruling made public on Monday, said the Kansas Open Records Act requires disclosure of the documents. He rejected the university's claims that they fall under an exception that would allow them to be withheld.

Murphy ordered the release of the employment agreement with Athletic Director Lew Perkins and a separate agreement for potential supplemental compensation known as a retention payment agreement.

However, Murphy said the university does not have to disclose them before Oct. 18, the deadline for appealing his decision. While the judge had specified an immediate release in his order, he later modified his ruling in a telephone conference call with attorneys.

Later, the university issued a statement.

"We are reviewing our legal options, one of which is whether to appeal the judge's ruling. That decision will be made soon."

Perkins' records were sought by several media outlets. The World Company, which publishes The Lawrence Journal-World and operates cable television station 6News, filed a lawsuit in January to obtain the records. The Associated Press and the Kansas Press Association later joined the litigation.

NFL | Holmes' status questionable for Sunday

Priest Holmes, who missed much of the last quarter of Kansas City's 28-17 loss to Carolina, sprained his ankle, and the Chiefs aren't sure if he'll play against Houston, coach Dick Vermeil said.

Holmes

Holmes, who set an NFL record last season with 27 touchdowns, had his leg bent back on a play midway through the fourth quarter Sunday and walked gingerly to the sideline.

As the Chiefs tried to fight back from an 11-point deficit and avoid starting the season 0-2, their three-time Pro Bowl running back did not return.

Vermeil said after the game that he had been assured that Holmes was all right, but on Monday morning he was told about the ankle problem.

Asked if he expected Holmes to be ready on Sunday, Vermeil said, "I don't know. All I can say is questionable to doubtful. I know it's not a serious ankle sprain. It's just how quickly he can mend."

Breaking it down

Senior Matt Van Cleave reads the break of the putting green on the 11th hole during the KU Invitational Monday morning.

After two rounds, Van Cleave is tied for the tournament lead with University of Texas-San Antonio's John Elizondo at 2-under par. K-State is in third place as a team, two strokes behind second-place University of Kansas and three strokes behind tournament-leader Texas-San Antonio. The Wildcats begin the final 18 holes at 8:30 a.m. today.

"The Libertines"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Drugs and rock 'n' roll — the two are synonymous with each other. While drugs can spur creativity within artists, they can bring great strife to the band members.

There is no more clear a case than with The Libertines — the band often heralded as the "British Strokes."

There is an incredible chemistry between front men Carl Barat and Pete Doherty echoed in their brilliant music and lyrics; however, heroin and crack are quickly driving a spike into that chemistry.

Doherty has been in and out of rehab countless times since 2003. In June, he robbed Barat's London apartment to get money for drugs.

With so much drama it is surprising and incredible that a full album could be recorded and released.

The Libertines' second album, which is self-titled, is a harrowing and frustrating listen, as you can hear the tension of a band trying to keep itself together while slowly falling apart.

The first track, "Can't Stand Me Now," shows Barat and Doherty trade verses with poetic lyrics that attack the other and show the aggravation of a friendship being upended.

"You twist and tore our love apart/your light fingers threw the dark/that shattered the lamp and into darkness cast us" chides Barat.

Doherty counters with "No you've got it the wrong way round/you shut me out and blamed it on the brown." The song is a squeamishly enjoyable listen.

Another brilliant track is "What Katie Did," which harkens back to 50s girl groups and the 60s British invasion, all in one track.

Some of the songs seem unfinished though. While it isn't surprising given the conditions of recording, it can leave the listener wanting more.

That small complaint aside, The Libertines manage to give us a thoroughly enjoyable album through all their adversity.

One can only hope that this

For local band, Middle East tour shows support for troops abroad

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For Pomeroy, the most genuine way to support troops in the Middle East is with music.

The band, which got their start in Manhattan, began a three-week, six-nation tour of the Middle East on Sept. 19.

The tour will take the band through Afghanistan, Pakistan, Bahrain, Djibouti, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates.

"Our band manager really got us involved in this," Pomeroy band member Matt Marron said. "Our manager submitted a CD to the Air Force Entertainment committee, and they have a selection process for bands. They get feedback from the troops about each band, and we were the most requested band. This is something that we were looking to do since last Christmas, and it has just now materialized."

Pomeroy, now based in Kansas City, has completed three albums since leaving Manhattan, Marron said.

"We've been touring for quite a while, and it's really nice to have something totally different on our plate," Marron said. "We have new management — Fresh Tracks Entertainment out of Chicago — and a new booking agent from Atlanta."

"As a band, we are really looking to expand our fan base. We've been playing 16 or 17 shows a month."

Marron said Pomeroy is looking forward to the opportunities a tour like this generates.

"This is a great opportunity to see a part of the world that we would probably never have the opportunity to see," Marron said. "It's a good opportunity to get our music to a new fan base. The troops are from all parts of the country and when they go home and they like our music, they might come to our show if we travel to their part of the country. Then our music can generate fans all over the country."

Marilyn Valley, publicist for Pomeroy, said she is excited to see the band be able to show their support through music.

"They really love their music, so this is very important to them," said Valley.

Marron said the band is a bit nervous about traveling, but Pomeroy has been promised total safety.

"Obviously there are some risks," Marron said.

"On one hand, we will be safe, but on the other hand we will be wearing bullet-proof vests when we are transported between countries," he said.

The band will tour for 16 nights, and only five of those nights will be spent in hotels, with the other nights being spent on base with the troops.

Pomeroy fans in Manhattan are impressed with the effort that the band is making to show support for U.S. and allied troops, Jill Everett, sophomore in open option, said.

"It shows a lot of character and it could be great publicity for them when they come back home. It makes me respect them even more," Everett said.

Marron said the band feels privileged for the opportunity.

"Our main driving force is to do something for the troops. Those guys are going through some pretty heavy stuff everyday, and we just want to give them a bit of a release," Marron said.

Ten Mile Tide release lacks innovation, but kicks out the jams

"Ten Mile Tide"

Album review by Jessica Grant

Ten Mile Tide is a San Francisco-based sextet with a hectic touring schedule that frequently brings them through Manhattan.

Over the years the band has shared the stage with such acts as Dispatch, moe., MOFRO, Karl Denson's Tiny Universe, Strange-folk and Railroad Earth.

Ten Mile Tide is a sort of grooving, bluegrass, folk-rock band, who caught a glimpse of national fame after being featured on CNN in 2003 for their support of the file-sharing program Kazaa.

Ten Mile Tide lauds Kazaa and attributes part of their success as a band to the program. At the time, it was uncommon for most musicians to praise any sort of file sharing program.

However, it is important to note that many bands within the jam genre rely heavily on bootlegging and file sharing for their success.

"Midnight is Early" is the latest release from Ten Mile Tide, produced by Jack Gauthier, who is most noted for his work with Dispatch and artist Pete Francis.

The album begins with "Carry On." Given the subject matter of the song, it is bizarrely upbeat.

The song juxtaposes the subjects of paternal abandonment and heart break over a chorus of "La, La, La, Nothing's wrong/La, La, La, La Carry On."

This chorus of this song actually highlights Ten Mile Tide's biggest hindrance. Musically, there isn't very much that really separates Ten Mile Tide from other bands in its genre.

Sure, they are pretty good musicians with a great sense of melody (and they can play a mean Bluegrass tune), but as a whole, there is nothing in their sound that really elevates them to a new and unique level within their genre.

That said, it must also be noted that Ten Mile Tide has a real knack for storytelling within their lyrics. "Don't Follow," a Phish-esque piece, with subtle violin highlights, tells a story about forging individuality.

"Alive on the Wall" is one of the most notable songs on the album. A subtle funk bass line and quickly plucked guitar make for a perfectly danceable combination.

Courtesy Art

For those who love rock 'n' roll, Ten Mile Tide may not be the band for you, but "Midnight is Early" is the perfect album for fans of the jam band genre.

'Sopranos,' 'Angels' win big at Emmys

An estimated 14 million viewers watched the triumphs of HBO's "The Sopranos" and "Angels in America" on the Emmy Awards Sunday night on ABC — an alarmingly low number for what is supposed to be television's big night.

"The Sopranos" was the first cable series to be named best drama, while "Angels in America," the miniseries about AIDS in America during the 1980s, had a record-breaking night.

"We've put a lot of work into it, and I think we've gotten better. It's good that it finally paid off," series creator David Chase said of "The Sopranos," which enters its sixth and final season in 2006.

"The Daily Show with Jon Stewart," which spent this election year skewering the candidates for Comedy Central, won an award for best variety series for the second year in a row. Stewart's writing staff also won an Emmy.

HBO received a dominant 32 awards. Fox collected 10, followed by NBC with eight.

Groups localize voter registration

Campus efforts for upcoming election scheduled for this week

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no need for students to look further than campus when registering to vote.

This week Alpha Phi Alpha is sponsoring a voter registration booth in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Rickey Frierson, director of educational activities for the Kappa Tau chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha, said Alpha Phi Alpha is working with several organizations to make voter registration easier.

"We are working with other organizations to create a better registration drive," said Frierson, senior in business finance and entrepreneurship.

The booth offers students the option to register to vote or to sign up for advanced voting, he said.

"We're making sure that if you're going to be here in November you'll be able to vote," Frierson said.

Brandon Clark, special programs coordinator, said there has been confusion with absentee ballots and where people can vote.

Clark, senior in social science, said after speaking with the Riley County Clerk's office, he found that students can only vote where their permanent address is, and if students want an absentee ballot, they will have to contact their county.

Students can write Manhattan in as their permanent address, but especially for out-of-state students, this isn't necessarily advised, he said.

"If students want their vote to go to Missouri, because that's a battleground state, then they should vote in Missouri," he said.

The goal for the registration drive is 1,000 registrations, which is twice the number that registered at the drive in 2002, by the end on Friday, Clark and Frierson said.

"This is one of the most important presidential elections. Every year is an important election, but especially this one. We want everyone to have a voice," he said.

Frierson said this election is important for a number of reasons.

"It was such a close vote last election, and with all the controversy between Bush and Kerry," he said.

The other organizations involved are Political Issues Committee, Multicultural Business Student Association, Black Student Union, Zeta Phi Beta, Delta Sigma Theta, Omega Psi Phi, Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Mortar Board National Senior Honorary and Native American Student Association.

Karen Marshall, who was helping at the booth Monday, said she is scheduled to work again on Wednesday and Friday.

Marshall, who is a member of Zeta Phi Beta and a senior in digital art, said she also wants students to realize how important voting is.

"You don't want someone who's not qualified to be a leader as president," she said. "It's important for you to vote on who determines what you can and can't do."

Jamie Osby, graduate student in marriage and family studies, said she was going to register but hadn't yet, and was glad the booth was in front of the K-State Student Union because it was easily visible.

"I just happened to be passing by," said Osby, who is originally from Mississippi. "I didn't know how to go about doing it, so I was glad they were here."

Fatalities from Tropical Storm Jeanne top 100

By Amy Bracken
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GONAIVES, Haiti — Raging floodwaters from Tropical Storm Jeanne killed more than 100 people in Haiti, where roads and fields were still inundated Monday, and survivors were taking to rooftops and trees days after the storm passed.

The confirmed total of deaths, mostly in northwestern Haiti, rose to at least 109 Monday based on reports from government and humanitarian officials.

Officials said they expect the total to rise further.

Jeanne was churning over the open Atlantic east of the Bahamas and was forecast to strengthen over open seas this week, heading away from the U.S. mainland.

But officials in Haiti were still trying to determine the toll from flooding that swept over parts of the country Saturday after Jeanne swept by.

In the northwestern coastal town of Gonaives, Haiti's third largest city of about a quarter million people, people on Monday waded through ankle-deep mud outside the mayor's office, where workers were shoveling out mud.

Aid workers inside helped a woman give birth. Floodwaters covered crops and turned roads into rivers in the town and surrounding areas.

Katya Silme, 18, said she, her mother and six siblings spent the night in a tree because their house was flooded.

"The river destroyed my house completely, and now we have nothing. We have not eaten anything since the floods. We have no money and we need food," said Silme, who added that she had seen many neighbors swept away in the waters Saturday.

Nearby two dead children, their faces covered with cloth, lay on a porch just above the receding waters. The water was still near knee-deep in places.

Rev. Venel Suffard, director of the Catholic humanitarian agency Caritas in Gonaives, said his workers had picked up 62 bodies in pickup trucks and counted another 18 at a morgue in Gonaives alone.

Floodwaters also left much destruction and at least 24 dead in the northwestern town of Chansolme, civil protection director Maria Alta Jean-Baptiste said.

She also reported at least four dead in northwestern Port-de-Paix and one dead elsewhere in the south.

The deaths came four months after devastating May floods along the southern border of Haiti and the neighboring Dominican Republic. In those floods some 1,700 bodies were recovered and 1,600 more people were missing and presumed dead.

Interim Prime Minister Gerard Latortue and his interior minister toured the area in a U.N. truck Sunday, but were not able to reach many areas because of washed out roads.

"We don't know how many dead there are," Latortue said, adding "2004 has been a terrible year."

BLUESTEM BISTRO | Name change coupled with menu additions expanding food options on the menu, Aldridge said.

The changes are part of an ongoing plan, he said.

"We have always wanted to make these changes, and I think we are right on track," he said.

Aldridge said he plans on introducing a complete menu within the next month.

"We have introduced small menu items to test the market, and they have gone over well," he said.

The new wine selection also is doing well, Aldridge said.

"It is slowly picking up," he said. "It took a while for people to adjust for us to have a liquor license."

Aldridge said he is planning on adding more alcohol to the menu.

"We plan on having premium beers — bottled beers, nothing on tap," he said. "We will also have some liqueurs to add to coffee drinks."

The total cost of all the changes is undetermined, Aldridge said.

"We didn't have a set amount for how much we wanted to spend," he said. "We've just kind of made it happen. As we make changes and spend money we're going to see the return on it."

Overall, the Bistro's atmosphere welcomes people from all groups, Aldridge said.

"We want people to come in and relax and enjoy a smoke-free environment," he said.

PRIVILEGE FEES | Committee pushes forward portions of proposal

committee decided keep it consistent each year.

The committee also voted to increase student salaries by 3 percent annually, though the committee only dealt with the total amount for student salaries, leaving the distribution between positions up to the station's management.

Committee Chair Michael Burns said he did not want the committee to start to focus on line-item details of the proposal.

"If we do that, we are beginning to micromanage something we are not experts on," Burns said.

KSDB News Director Aaron Leiker said Associated Press Wire Reports would provide them not only with hourly text-based news, but also audio feeds for hourly news and breaking news and sound bites from speeches and other national news.

The committee voted 7-4 to give KSDB access to just the text reports.

The committee voted to cut KSDB's request for convention and contest funding, citing consistency with funding restrictions on every other organization if they were applying through the Allocations Committee.

"If we're going to allocate them for competition and contests, I think that's fine, but I don't think they should get anything above and beyond the $100 per student total," Haag said.

In addition to these cuts, the committee moved funds from the operations budget, totaling $9,500 for equipment and maintenance, to be considered in the overall repair and replacement budget for the station to be discussed next week.

Walton said the reason those funds were not in the repair and replacement budget was they were largely for upkeep on the McCain studio, and the privilege fee allocation from their last review restricted those funds to the K-State Student Union Studio.

Burns said the committee will consider lifting that restriction.

Despite not receiving all the increases they wanted, Leiker, program director Andrew Latham and Walton all remained positive. "I think we're generally pleased that we have some increases," Latham said. "Especially the news wire."

Leiker said the review was something that needed to be done.

■ The initial motion was to increase the salaries by 5 percent in fiscal year 2006 and three percent in the next two years, but was amended to 3 each year after some deliberation.

"I respect what they're doing immensely," he said. "We're talking about raising student fees, they're doing what their job is."

As a student, Leiker said he is glad to see the committee is being so careful about what student fees are going to.

However, he said he didn't expect the proposal to be cut as much as it has been.

"I didn't expect cuts to this extent," he said. "That was somewhat of a surprise, but what they're giving us will still let us operate very nicely."

Latham said the tendency is to ask for as much as they can.

"We want to get as much as we can," he said. "They're not going to see things the same way as we are and that's fine."

Leiker and Latham said they were very pleased the committee was not micromanaging the budget and leaving the details of the budget up to them.

The three said they were ■ KSDB requested $13,853.12 for Associated Press wire reports. The committee voted 7-4 to give KSDB access to just the text reports, totaling $5,563.22, including a $300 one-time installation fee.

■ The committee voted to cut KSDB's request for convention and contest funding, from $4,630 to $2,000.

somewhat concerned with the size of the salary increases.

Walton said the 3 percent annual increase would work out to about $2.90 per student each pay period.

"The way they were looking at it in terms of percentages is probably the correct way, but when you're dealing with such small amounts of money, you don't see much of an increase."

She said when you consider such things as rising taxes and other increasing costs, the change is nominal.

"We're thankful that they did increase it, because they didn't have to," Walton said. "We'll do what we've done for 55 years, we'll make due."

Burns said the committee will consider the whole of the operating budget next week, as well as the $50,000 one-time request for a new 24-hour newsroom, with the hopes of having legislation to present to senate following that meeting.

to the school's administration, it was a violation of the district's "no tolerance policy."

"The whole process was a real character-building experience. I didn't realize how badly I wanted to play football until I couldn't anymore," Lilja said of his high school ordeal.

Fortunately for Lilja, Coffeyville Community College offered him a two-year football scholarship.

After his two-year stint at Coffeyville, K-State Coach Bill Snyder extended Lilja a scholarship offer.

Even though he only played two years at K-State, Lilja said he believes his experience made all the difference in his ability as a player.

Lilja said Bob Stanley and the Wildcat strength coaches helped him progress physically, but it was former K-State offensive lineman Nick Leckey who made him a better player.

"Nick and I worked our asses off together and pushed each other, because we both wanted to be better than the other," Lilja said.

Leckey is currently playing in the NFL with the Arizona Cardinals.

With the Colts' season underway, Lilja said he anticipates suiting up as soon as possible.

"As soon as I am comfortable with the Colts' offense, I will be suiting up. That could be this week or it could be in a month," Ryan said.

Regardless of when Ryan is ready to suit up, one thing is for certain about his newfound situation — he is taking nothing for granted.

"I feel very lucky to have this opportunity. I never imagined in a million years this is what I would be doing when I was 22," Lilja said.

Aerobics classes, free weights among numerous options for students

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most students have made a promise to themselves at one time or another to start working out and get in shape. There are a few places on campus that offer classes to help one get started.

At the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, students can work out on their own machines and free weights or participate in an organized class.

"We try to offer a wide variety of aerobic classes, so people have a choice in a typical week's schedule of what they want to go to," Steve Martini, associate director of Rec Services, said.

Students can take their pick of classes in step aerobics, kickboxing and others designed to tone, strengthen and stretch muscles. Other "special interest" classes, such as yoga and Pilates, also focus on breathing.

The Rec also houses the Wellness Center, which offers students hands-on guidance with nutrition and fitness. Employees at the Wellness Center can do fitness testing, body fat testing and give nutritional guidance.

Students can get an exercise program designed specifically for them according to their wants and needs.

"Exercise programs can be designed depending on what activities they like to do," Jacque Craford, junior in kinesiology and employee at the Wellness Center, said.

"We don't want people to do anything they don't want to do or aren't interested in, because they won't keep up with it."

For students who love the water, they can take classes at the Natatorium. The Rec offers classes in deep water jogging and aqua exercise.

All services provided by the Rec are free to students. A schedule of classes can be found at www.recservices.ksu.edu.

A lesser known fitness program on campus is the L.I.F.E. program. Located in Ahearn Field House, L.I.F.E. offers water and regular aerobics classes. Classes include yoga, power step and cardio sculpting.

The L.I.F.E. fitness center offers a weight room, basketball court and track. Students can get fitness assessments and even work with personal trainers.

Ashley Dreiling, L.I.F.E. program employee, said many people come to their facilities to get away from the business at the Rec.

"They want to use the L.I.F.E. program because the Rec is so busy," Dreiling, sophomore in kinesiology and physical therapy, said.

"This is a place you can go to, and there's always a machine to get on and you can personalize your workout more."

Another place students can go to get fit is UFM, which holds classes to keep body and mind in shape. Aerobics classes featured at UFM included Pilates, boxing, tennis, golf and various of dance.

UFM offers classes for those looking for a more spiritual workout. Classes such as meditation, self massage and tai-chi are all focused on relaxing the mind and body.

"We've have a lot of classes that I would consider holistic," Marcia Hornung, UFM education coordinator, said.

Identifying, relieving stress boosts health

By U. Bhagavathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Like it or not, stress and anxiety have become an integral part of contemporary society.

Stress affects people both mentally and physically and prevents them from living life to the fullest. Stress can be attributed to a variety of reasons. Alison Kohler, graduate student in mass communication said she gets stressed when trying to handle several activities.

"I get stressed, primarily because of the multiple roles I need to juggle. It's the whole anxiety of doing justice to things at home, work and school," Kohler said.

Barbara Pearson, a psychologist at University Counseling Services said the key causes are the difficulty in balancing personal and professional life, peer pressure, increased workload, pressure to keep deadlines, financial crunches and conflicts in relationships.

Pearson said stress can cause lack of sleep and failed eating habits.

"Prolonged stress diminishes a person's skills to cope with day-to-day pressures.

Identifying the factors causing stress and talking to a counselor or a close confidant (often referred to as "stress buddy") can also help reduce the burden off a person's mind," Pearson said.

Moderate levels of stress can result in effects like fatigue, headaches, insomnia, mood swings, depression, aversion to food, sweating, concentration lapses, panic attacks and anxiety, Pearson said.

Kohler said she is affected when stressed.

"When I'm stressed out, I tend to overeat. I have this uncanny urge for sweet food and caffeine," Kohler said.

Extreme, chronic stress can cause severe damage to the functioning of the vital organs of the body.

Medical practitioners link stress to cancer, diabetes, breakdown in the immune system, alcohol and substance abuse and cardiovascular diseases.

Kasi Monk, senior in psychology said disorganization is the cause of her stress.

"The secret to getting my mind off things is by going to the Rec for a good workout," Monk said.

Focus on eye care necessary in college

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although important, eye care often is overlooked, especially by college students.

Contact lens misuse is the biggest problem students seem to have, said Jarad Waite, optometrist in Dr. Paul Bullock's office. He said the overwear of contacts can be harmful to the eye.

"By overwearing contact lenses, in other words, wearing longer than prescribed by the doctor, the front surface of the eye - the cornea - does not get enough oxygen. When this happens, many different problems start to occur, such as blood vessels growing into the cornea that should not. Bacteria can also deposit under the contact lens, and an ulcer can occur," Waite said.

"The front surface of the eye, the cornea, can start to develop many problems which can lead to deterioration. We examine many patients new to our office which suffer from some of these problems."

"The front surface of the eye can start to deteriorate," Waite said. "We have a lot of patients with this problem."

Another problem is the way students care for their contacts, he said.

"Number one, the should listen to their doctor," Waite said. "Number two, only use the type of solution the doctor prescribes."

Students also should avoid using saliva or tap water to clean contacts because they could result in a corneal ulcer due to bacteria, he said.

"The bacteria eats away at the cornea, which can form an ulcer and leave a scar," Waite said.

Waite said carrots only help the eyes health, not vision, and there isn't much people can do to better their eyesight.

"The whole purpose of glasses or contacts is focusing light," he said. "That cannot get any better."

Waite said another way to maintain one's eyes is by not looking directly into sunlight. Also, studying intensely for long periods of time is not advisable.

If students want to see an optometrist, they will have to look elsewhere besides Lafene Health Center.

"We cannot prescribe lenses here," Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene, said. "We can do vision screening here to tell you whether your vision is normal or not."

According to a study done this summer, 49 percent of K-State students would like to see Lafene have an optometry clinic.

"We have been interested in doing this for a long time," Reppert said.

"We don't have enough money, and we don't have enough space," he said.

Risk of meningitis often overlooked, requires attention

By U. Bhagavathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first response to a headache, fever, nausea and fatigue would be to pop a Tylenol, but severe symptoms can be indicative of a more serious disease - meningitis.

Meningitis is an infection of the fluid of a person's spinal cord, the fluid that surrounds the brain and the covering layers of the brain (meninges). Meningitis is usually caused by a viral or bacterial infection.

Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said there is a difference between viral and bacterial meningitis.

"Viral meningitis is generally less severe and resolves without specific treatment, while bacterial meningitis can be quite critical and may be fatal or result in brain damage, hearing loss or learning disability. Knowing the kind of bacteria causing meningitis is important, because antibiotics can prevent some types from spreading and infecting other people," Reppert said.

Streptococcus pneumoniae and Neisseria meningitidis are the leading causes of bacterial meningitis. There is an effective vaccine that gives long lasting protection from streptococcus.

The symptoms of meningitis usually begin with the patient feeling vaguely unwell and then developing into a headache and fever. There also may be nausea and vomiting, Reppert said.

More suspicious symptoms include neck stiffness, severe headache, photophobia or the dislike of bright light, drowsiness and a rash. In severe conditions, patients may experience seizures.

College students are more likely to contract Neisseria meningitidis. Studies show the risk of the disease is several times greater for freshmen staying in residence halls. About 1 out of 20,000 of these students get meningitis, whereas students living outside are relatively less likely to contract the illness.

"Each year about 110-120 college students suffer from meningitis and in about 10 percent of the cases it is fatal," Reppert said.

Bacterial meningitis is contagious and spread through the exchange of respiratory and throat secretions. Bacterial meningitis can be treated with a number of effective antibiotics. It is important, however, that the treatment be started early.

Lafene provides meningitis vaccinations to students for $65.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene, said they want students to know of the vaccination's availability.

"The meningitis vaccine is about 70 percent effective and lasts for about 3 to 5 years. We are trying to inform college freshmen about the availability of a safe and effective vaccine which can decrease their risk of contracting the bacteria," Kennedy said.

For details about the disease and the vaccine, visit Lafene, call their office at 532-6544 or visit the Web site at www.ksu.edu/lafene.

Healthy sleep patterns aid student lifestyles

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sleep can be difficult to come by for some college students — especially when semester obligations are in full force.

"Sometimes I am so tired that I will just skip class," said Caitlin Jackson, freshman in accounting. "I don't like going to class half-awake."

A lot of students just take on too much with their semester, said Art Rathburn, University Counseling Services counselor and biofeedback specialist.

"College has put a lot more demands on me, and sometimes I think it causes me to be tired and not get enough sleep," Jackson said.

Other new students on campus also are feeling the demands of college life.

"Finding sleep is really hard for me because of the demands of fraternity life," said Casey Anderson, freshman in biology and Spanish. "Staying up until 2:30 a.m. and then waking up at 7 a.m. is just really hard to do."

However, students, no matter where they are in their academic career, always have had problems regulating sleep with their busy schedules, said Rathburn.

Regular college life commitments can be troublesome, Rathburn said.

"But students need to learn time management and sleep regulation."

Students suffering from sleep deprivation or insomnia should seek further help through Counseling Services or other means, including using Sleep Disorder Services, located in the Lafene Center basement, Rathburn said.

Diana Fritz, R.R.T. and lead sleep technician, said sleep disorders for college students is very common.

"We will examine a student's sleep brain activity, body movement, circadian rhythm and more to understand that student's sleep deprivation," Fritz said.

Sleep deprivation can lead to yet other faults in the life of a college student.

"Students who are sleep deprived cannot normally function in their workplace or even while driving on the road," Fritz said.

"If you are sleepy and you're working at a place that requires heavy concentration, you will often convince your-

Getting a good night's sleep

Make sure you:

- Keep a regular sleep schedule
- Go to bed at the same time each night
- Get up at the same time each morning
- Exercise regularly, but not before bedtime
- Nap for up to 30 minutes only, during the day
- Have a light snack before bed
- Be comfortable, keep your bed tidy and neat
- Sleep in a dark, well-ventilated room
- Do not sleep with music or TV set running

Avoid:

- Drinking alcohol before going to bed
- Taking over-the-counter sleep pills regularly
- Having upsetting conversations before bed
- Staying in bed if you don't go to sleep within 30 minutes.
- Looking at the clock
- Drinking caffeine in the evening
- Smoking before bedtime

self that you've done a task that you inadvertently have not completed," Rathburn said.

A National Sleep Foundation report in 2000 concluded that "Generation Y," adults of mostly college age, disfunction a lot more in the workplace without sleep.

"But one of the deadliest reports is when students drive while drowsy," said Fritz. "Approximately 100,000 car accidents are caused by drowsy drivers."

The National Sleep Foundation reports that these drivers contribute to 1,500 to 1,600 fatalities every year.

"That is worse than drunk driving," said Fritz.

People who drive while tired should pull over to the side of the road, Rathburn said.

All aspects of sleep deprivation are dangerous, and both Sleep Disorder Services and the University Counseling Services cannot stress enough on students visiting their facilities.

"We understand that students are worried about whether their boyfriend is cheating on them or about their latest examination, but we are here to help," Rathburn said.

"And with sleep, you need to regulate your sleep habits and take no risks."

Manhattan abounds with exercise options

By Courtney Keith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Exercise routines come in many varieties, and there are several options in Manhattan to serve students' appetites for physical fitness.

Scott Gillan, graduate student in computer science, said exercising gives him many benefits.

"I feel better after a workout. I sleep better, eat better and just feel more healthy," Gillan said.

Jeff Lebak, graduate student in electrical engineering, said he takes his physical fitness very seriously.

"I work out because of genetics. Both my dad and two of my grandparents were diabetic. I'm predisposed to have their condition, so I fight it by exercising and eating right," Lebak said.

Like many students, Lebak uses the facilities at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex for most of his exercising.

"I go to the Rec a couple times a week to lift weights. I also go running about once a week," Lebak said. "I choose to go to the Rec, because it has all the weights I require, and the location is convenient."

Although most students do choose to go to the Rec, there are many other fitness options in Manhattan.

Curves For Women, located at Westloop Plaza, has experienced a lot of interest from students, Mary Sutterlin, trainer at Curves, said.

"We had an informational table in the Union during the first days of classes. We also distributed information at Purple Power Play on Poyntz. Many students have come in for a trial week following these events," Sutterlin said.

One benefit of the Curves program is the flexibility of the schedule.

"There are no set class times, so you come when you have time," Sutterlin said. "It only takes 30 minutes and everyone has time for a 30 minute workout."

Curves offers a student discount rate of $100 for four months. Hours of operation are 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 6 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday, and 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. Saturdays.

Another option is Prime Time Fitness Club, located at 1129 Garden Way.

Mike Reed, owner, said Prime Time Fitness Club has a lot to offer the community.

Aside from machines, weights and personal trainers, Prime Time Fitness Club also offers classes such as kickboxing, yoga and pilates are taught by local college students, Reed said.

Prime Time Fitness Club is open Monday through Thursday from 5:45 a.m. to 10 p.m., Fridays from 5:45 a.m. to 8 p.m., Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sundays from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. They can be reached by phone at 537-3003.

One other option is Maximum Performance, located at 426 A McCall Road.

Amy McKenna, therapist at Maximum Performance, said that many clients begin as physical therapy patients and then continue on as fitness members.

"We have a very helpful staff. After physical therapy clients know us they usually stay because they feel comfortable," McKenna said.

Maximum Performance is open Monday through Thursday from 5:30 a.m. to 10 p.m., Fridays from 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., Saturdays from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and Sundays from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Experts question health trends

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nutrition professors encourage students to focus more on healthy living and disregard their trials and tribulations with the scale. Attending college brings with it fears of weight gain, which leads many students to consider diet options.

Among the diets currently sweeping the nation are the South Beach Diet and the Atkins Diet. Some individuals question whether or not Atkins is a valid, dietary lifestyle.

The initial results of Atkins are very promising, said Mary Meck Higgins, professor in the department of human nutrition and a human nutrition specialist with K-State Research and Extension.

Higgins fears people are putting their health at risk by cutting carbohydrates.

"Overwhelming evidence in research is showing the phyto [plant] nutrients that help reduce cancer, heart disease, diabetes, all the leading causes of death, are associated with phyto nutrients...you don't know if you're setting yourself up to get a chronic disease because it takes a while to develop, it's an invisible harm that you're doing to your body," Higgins said.

These nutrients are essential to health, but in this society some individuals are willing to risk health for beauty.

"Unfortunately we live in a society that epitomizes thinness," said Mark Haub, assistant professor in human nutrition.

Among the sources of weight gain prevalent to college students are lack of exercise, increased consumption of calories, food choice and alcohol consumption.

Most students are athletic in high school, said Haub, and once they enter college, many students become inactive. At the very least, Haub recommends visiting the Rec and walking to class.

Students should be wary of the calories they consume and their food choices, said Jane Freyberger, an instructor for hotel and restaurant institution management and dietetics.

She said students should practice learning when

Ryan Epstein, senior in management information systems and marketing, adds shredded cheese to an Atkins meal at Kite's Bar & Grill.

they're hungry, when they're full and when they need to stop eating.

The dining centers offer a wide array of food and some unlimited servings; however, students should choose the appropriate items and portion sizes, Haub said.

Among the numerous social activities at KSU, many involve alcohol consumption. Haub said alcohol actually contains more calories per gram than both carbohydrates and protein.

"In order to metabolize alcohol, the body seems to decrease the oxidation of fat or lipids," said Haub.

In situations where fats and lipids can't be properly oxidized, men tend to gain weight around the stomach region, and women tend to store fat on the hips.

Metabolism tends to slow down in people between ages of 22 and 25, which also leads to weight gain.

Higgins, Haub, and Freyberger recommend eating fruits and vegetables, nuts and whole grains. Data indicates that whole grains are associated with lower body weight.

"You're not going to be craving something sweet or something high in fat, you'll feel satisfied," said Higgins.

For those individuals who believe starvation is the way to beauty, Freyberger said restrictive diets tend to leave individuals unsatisfied. This system of dieting may work for a while, but ultimately they can't continue this practice and they binge.

"The idea should be a healthy diet versus a restrictive diet, keeping fit should be the pinnacle of weight loss," Haub said.

Militants claim responsibility for beheading

By Alexandra Zavis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — An al-Qaeda-linked group led by Abu Musab al-Zarqawi claimed Tuesday to have killed the second of two American hostages — back-to-back slayings that have notched up the Jordanian militant's ruthless campaign of terror.

The claim, posted on an Islamic Web site, could not immediately be verified.

Al-Zarqawi's group, Tawhid and Jihad, kidnapped two Americans — Jack Hensley and Eugene Armstrong — and Briton Kenneth Bigley on Thursday from a home the three civil engineers shared in an upscale Baghdad neighborhood. Al-Zarqawi beheaded Armstrong, and the militants on Monday posted a gruesome video of the 52-year-old man's death.

The new posting followed the passing of the militants' 24-hour deadline for the release of all Iraqi women from prison and after anguished relatives in the United States and Britain begged for the lives of Bigley, 62, and Hensley, who would have marked his 49th birthday today.

"We do not have confirmation as of now that the body that has been found is Jack Hensley. We are still hopeful at this time that Jack Hensley is still with us," Hensley's wife, Pati, said in a prepared statement read by family spokesman Jack Haley outside the family's home in Marietta, Ga.

"The nation's zealous sons slaughtered the second American hostage after the end of the deadline," the first statement said. It was signed with the pseudonym Abu Maysara al-Iraqi, the name usually used on statements from al-Zarqawi's group. Claims on this Web site have proven to be accurate in the past.

The brief statement did not give the name of the hostage killed.

Several hours passed on Tuesday after the initial announcement with the promised video proof failing to appear. On Monday, by contrast, the video of Armstrong's killing was posted within an hour of the initial statement claiming he was dead.

Police arrest man for making false report

Innocent until proven guilty is usually a term used for the criminals, not the victim.

On Sept. 15, an armed robbery was reported to the K-State Police Department.

The alleged victim, Ryan Bulson, of Junction City, was arrested for falsely reporting a crime.

The robbery was declared a false report Tuesday by K-State Police Capt. Troy Lane.

Lane said they were suspicious from the beginning about the crime, but Bulson admitted it was a fake report.

Lane said every report made to K-State Police is treated like a crime. Media outlets were notified, and an investigation began, but the robbery then was deemed a hoax.

"Until it is proven a fake, we have to assume that what we are told is true. We got it out to people assuming it was a real report, and we will take all calls

Senate panel passes Goss' CIA nomination

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Senate panel on Tuesday approved the nomination of Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla., to head the CIA, overcoming Democrats' objections that Goss was too political for the job.

In a closed meeting, the Senate Intelligence Committee voted 12 to 4, with three Democrats joining the committee's nine Republicans in approving the nomination and one Democrat making no recommendation.

Goss' nomination could go before the full Republican-led Senate as early as this week.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., ranking Democrat on the committee, voted against Goss — President Bush's choice to head the CIA — saying that while chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, Goss had "repeatedly used intelligence issues for partisan purposes."

Eat, sleep, go fishing — that's the sign under Paul "Sodie" Sodamann's clock in his 7th grade science classroom. At seven o'clock on a Tuesday night, he is teaching K-State students all about fly fishing.

Sodamann teaches K-State students in a fly fishing class offered through the UFM Community Learning Center. As an option, students can earn one hour of K-State credit from their participation.

Matt Holthaus, senior in construction science, has been fly fishing since his father took him when he was three years old.

"This class is a lot more fun than I thought it was going to be," he said. "It has a lot more detail."

Holthaus said that the optional hour of credit was only a fringe benefit.

Hurricane cause for celebration at LSU

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

LSU STUDENTS PARTY AFTER IVAN

BATON ROUGE, La. — The first thing that popped into the minds of most Louisiana State University students after hearing that there was a hurricane brewing in the Gulf of Mexico last week was not fear — but rather sheer joy.

With Hurricane Ivan threatening Louisiana, the university had no choice but to close campus last Wednesday and Thursday, causing students to plan their impromptu vacation with parties and relaxation.

Many types of hurricane parties occurred Wednesday evening as Ivan made land fall on the Gulf Coast.

The weather turned out to be quite the opposite from what was expected, and students were able to actually enjoy the weather since Ivan shifted its track.

"I laid out today on my day off," said Sarah Duncan, a kinesiology senior. "Getting a tan during a hurricane is just another reason why I go to LSU."

Many students crowded Wednesday into Bogie's Bar and Grill and did their celebrating there.

"Everyone was talking about the hurricane, but the outdoor patio never felt a drop of rain," said Lydia Klotz, a graphic design junior. "It was more like a slurricon party than a hurricane party."

Traditionally, hurricanes have become the staple drink at hurricane parties.

The Tigerland Market on Nicholson sold out of Hurricane mix, where students bought enough alcohol to last over the break.

"We sold four times more alcohol than we would on a typical day," said Phillip Brown, a clerk at The Tigerland Market.

SWASTIKAS FOUND ON INDIANA UNIVERSITY CAMPUS

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Indiana University Police Department officers were called to investigate drawings of swastikas on the walls of the eighth floor of Briscoe-Gucker Saturday afternoon.

The swastikas were drawn during the celebration of the Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah, which began at sundown Wednesday. IUPD has no suspects in the case, and the graffiti has already been removed from the walls, according to IUPD reports.

Resident Assistant Josh Colbert called in the complaint, and officers arrived at 4:15 p.m. to discover three swastikas drawn in the hallways, according to IUPD reports.

The swastikas were drawn in pink and black dry erase markers, and ranged from one and a half to two feet in diameter.

Dean of Students Richard McKaig had not yet been briefed on the incident, but said the police and Racial Incidents Team are both called in when situations like this occur.

UNIVERSITY CREATES UNDERGRAD TERRORISM EDUCATION COURSES

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — As a response to the threat of worldwide terrorism, many Pennsylvania State University undergraduate programs are starting to include terrorism education in their curricula.

Penn State's response represents a trend among universities nationwide to implement the increased study of terrorism.

"Given that the risks of terrorism will not be eliminated anytime soon, I believe we will see increased demand for individual courses, certificate programs and even degrees in counterterrorism at colleges and universities in this country," Vice President and University Provost Rodney Erickson said in an e-mail message.

One professor participating in expanded terrorism education is political science professor Navin Bapat, who teaches The Politics of Terrorism.

"We first start talking about patterns in terrorism," he said. "Our main goal is to try to explain what is going on."

POLITICS MAKES STRANGE BEDFELLOWS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Get involved — and get laid.

Many political groups have tried to arouse the interest of college-age people, notorious for their absence from the polls.

But so far, efforts to energize the collegiate crowd have failed to crack the apathy, and now activists are just trying to arouse them — literally.

Michelle Collins, along with some other recent graduates, launched VoterGasm.org.

The site encourages visitors to take a pledge promising to have sex with a voter on election night or withhold sex from non-voters.

"We were thinking, 'How can we make voting something sexy?'" Collins said. "It should be scintillating."

She said the mission is still essential in states such as Nebraska, where the presidential race is not in doubt.

"If your state is solidly one color," she said, "it's still important to vote. And it's more important that you have sex with each other."

Commission passes flood-prevention plan

Project estimated at $623,000

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City Commission on Tuesday approved a project that should help prevent flooding on the east side of Manhattan and open about three acres of city property for private development.

Commissioners approved a project to increase the pumping capacity of the area north of Wal-Mart — a move that should prevent flooding that occurred in 1993 and threatened as recently as Aug. 23.

"We need more storage space," Commissioner Mark Hatesohl said. "We can't wait for another big storm."

The motion passed 4-1, with Commissioner Mark Taussig dissenting. He said other options might be more beneficial for economic development.

"Sometimes you can have too much insurance," Taussig said. "That may be the case here."

City Engineer Jeff Hancock said the project would help avoid severe flooding in the area by pumping excess water from storage reservoirs.

The 3.1 acres left available for development are near Tuttle Creek Boulevard and McCall Road. Taussig said the limited access to the area could hinder development.

The project, with an estimated cost of $623,000, will be paid for from the water treatment utility and money from the land transaction with Wal-Mart.

City Manager Ron Fehr announced at the beginning of the meeting other news that might improve business development in Manhattan.

The city's 2003 population projection was adjusted to

Other Commission news

■ Commissioners approved a three-year contract for Salina firm Insurors & Investors to provide insurance for the city.

■ Commissioners tabled a proposal to alter the architectural and engineering consultant selection process.

■ Commissioners granted permission to city administrators seek proposals for local projects, including adding a right-turn lane at Denison and Anderson avenues.

46,803 after the city appealed the original estimate of about 44,000. Fehr said the new numbers could make Manhattan more appealing to developers.

"With this challenge being upheld, we'll be able to show them a different picture," he said.

The U.S. Census Bureau and U.S. Department of Commerce did not account for incoming K-State students, which created an inaccurate measure of the city's population, Fehr said.

Government to view traveler data

Terror, travel lists compared

By Leslie Miller
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Transportation Security Administration announced on Tuesday that it will order domestic airlines to turn over personal information about passengers to test a system that will compare their names to those on terrorist watch lists.

The system, called Secure Flight, replaces a previous plan that would have checked passenger names against commercial databases and assigned a risk level to each. That plan, which cost $103 million, was abandoned because of privacy concerns and technological issues.

The airlines will have 30 days to comment on the proposed order, which Congress gave the TSA authority to issue.

Air carriers will then have 10 days to turn over data that they gathered in June, called passenger name records.

The amount of data in passenger name records varies by airline, but it typically includes name, flight origin, flight destination, flight time, duration of flight and form of payment. It can also include credit card numbers, address, telephone number and meal requests, which can indicate a person's ethnicity.

Justin Oberman, who heads the office that's developing Secure Flight, said he hopes that the program can be implemented by mid to late spring. He said he expects the airlines to cooperate.

"We are going to work very closely with them," Oberman said.

The TSA also will conduct a limited test in which they'll compare passenger names with information from commercial databases to see if they can be used to detect fraud or identity theft.

Speaker addresses detainee treatment

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Indefinite imprisonment, combined with torturous conditions and no court access, should never be allowed to happen, the lawyer who represented Guantanamo Bay detainees said Tuesday night.

Michael Ratner, president of the Center for Constitutional Rights in New York, spoke in the Union Forum Hall Tuesday night as part of the Dorothy L. Thompson Lecture Series. The lecture was titled, "Guantanamo, Enemy Combatants, and Torture: The End of the Rule of Law in America."

Ratner spoke about the treatment of detainees held in Guantanamo by the United States and its effects, as well as recent legislation on the issue.

"Prisoners were taken, especially Muslims, but any non-citizens, and held indefinitely in torturous conditions without access to courts," Ratner said.

As a lawyer, Ratner represents the families of detainees held in Guantanamo.

"Despite the criticism I got for taking the case, I felt that the issue addressed the fact that any person could be thrown in an off-shore prison without access to courts and have the key thrown away, and these people deserved to be represented," Ratner said.

On June 28, Ratner and his office won the Supreme Court case, Rasul v. Bush, in which they represented the Guantanamo detainees.

"It is being called the most important civil rights case in the last 50 years," Ratner said.

However, Ratner said the decision has been treated more as a suggestion than a ruling so far.

Besides the suffering of the detainees, the situation at Guantanamo has created other issues for the United States and the world.

"It is signifying an end to checks and balances, and more importantly, the end of moral authority in the U.S.," Ratner said.

As for repairing the damage that has been done, Ratner said the United States is a long way from finishing its work. However he saw the Rasul decision and the demonstrations at the Republican National Convention as a start.

Chad McKown, sophomore in sociology, agreed with Ratner's views on the situation.

"It is unjust what we are doing over there," McKown said. "It is easy to ignore what is going on, but Ratner's lecture helped serve as a reminder. I think it's something that should be said more often."

TO THE POINT

Use of data from airlines violates privacy rights

The government demanding airline passengers' information is a violation of citizens' basic privacy rights.

The Transportation Security Administration announced Tuesday it will demand airlines hand over passenger information in order to compare with terrorist watch lists.

This information includes not only names, addresses and flight information, but also credit card numbers, ethnicity and meal requests.

It seems much more practical for the government to give the watch lists to the airlines rather than this new system. There is no need for the government to know what meals passengers are eating or the things they buy with credit cards.

While security is of high importance with air travel, there is a line where security precautions violate Americans' privacy – and that line has been crossed.

The government also has said the information could be used to detect identity theft.

However, none of these benefits to turning over personal information outweigh the violation of basic rights.

In the face of fear, we must hold tight to the very rights that make us American.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

You've probably all heard that Bowling for Soup song that asks, "what ever happened to sitcoms and game shows?"

If you have Nick-elodeon, you've probably noticed that's the only place you can find such family friendly fare. And that's only after 9p.m.

The truth is they've all been replaced by a rash of increasingly ridiculous and horrible reality TV shows.

It all started with "The Real World." That's supposedly "where people stop being polite, and start getting real." The funny thing is that "The Real World" is about as real as all those Louis Vuitton bags everybody's carrying around.

This is probably how the pitch went for that show: "Let's get seven moderately attractive kids from different racial, ethnic, and sexual backgrounds, give 'em jobs and watch 'em make sweaty love in a hot tub."

Yep, that's my idea of real all right. And things have only gotten worse.

Who would have guessed that watching complete strangers try to form an everlasting relationship and get married in six weeks would be the basis of a television show?

Or that watching people demean themselves for money by bolting down pig intestines was supposed to be entertainment?

Or that "Trading Spouses" would be a theme heard outside of a group of swingers? Have you seen this? There's even another show similar to "Trading Spouses" entitled "Wife Swap."

Don't even get me started on why it's not "Husband Swap." That's a whole can of worms we don't want to open today.

The premise of "Trading Spouses" (airing on Fox, naturally) is that two families switch moms for a week. In case you're wondering, yes, there is money at stake.

Basically, if they live through it, the "new" mom bequeaths $50,000 on her surrogate family in any way she sees fit after her departure.

During the "new" mom's stay, all kinds of embarrassment and discomfort ensue. Apparently, this is supposed to be funny.

Where did television executives get the idea that we enjoy watching the pain and discomfort of others? Because people watch it! They watch it because they can sit in their living rooms and think "I'm glad that's not me."

Shows like this only increase the growing amount of apathy we have for fellow human beings. Laughing when someone falls down is normal. What isn't normal is not even trying to help them up.

By watching shows like this, we are delighting in the pain and humiliation of others. It seems okay getting because they're money out of it in the end.

But it's not okay to enjoy watching the emotional suffering of another human being.

I am horrified to even try to dream of what those television executives will think of for next season:

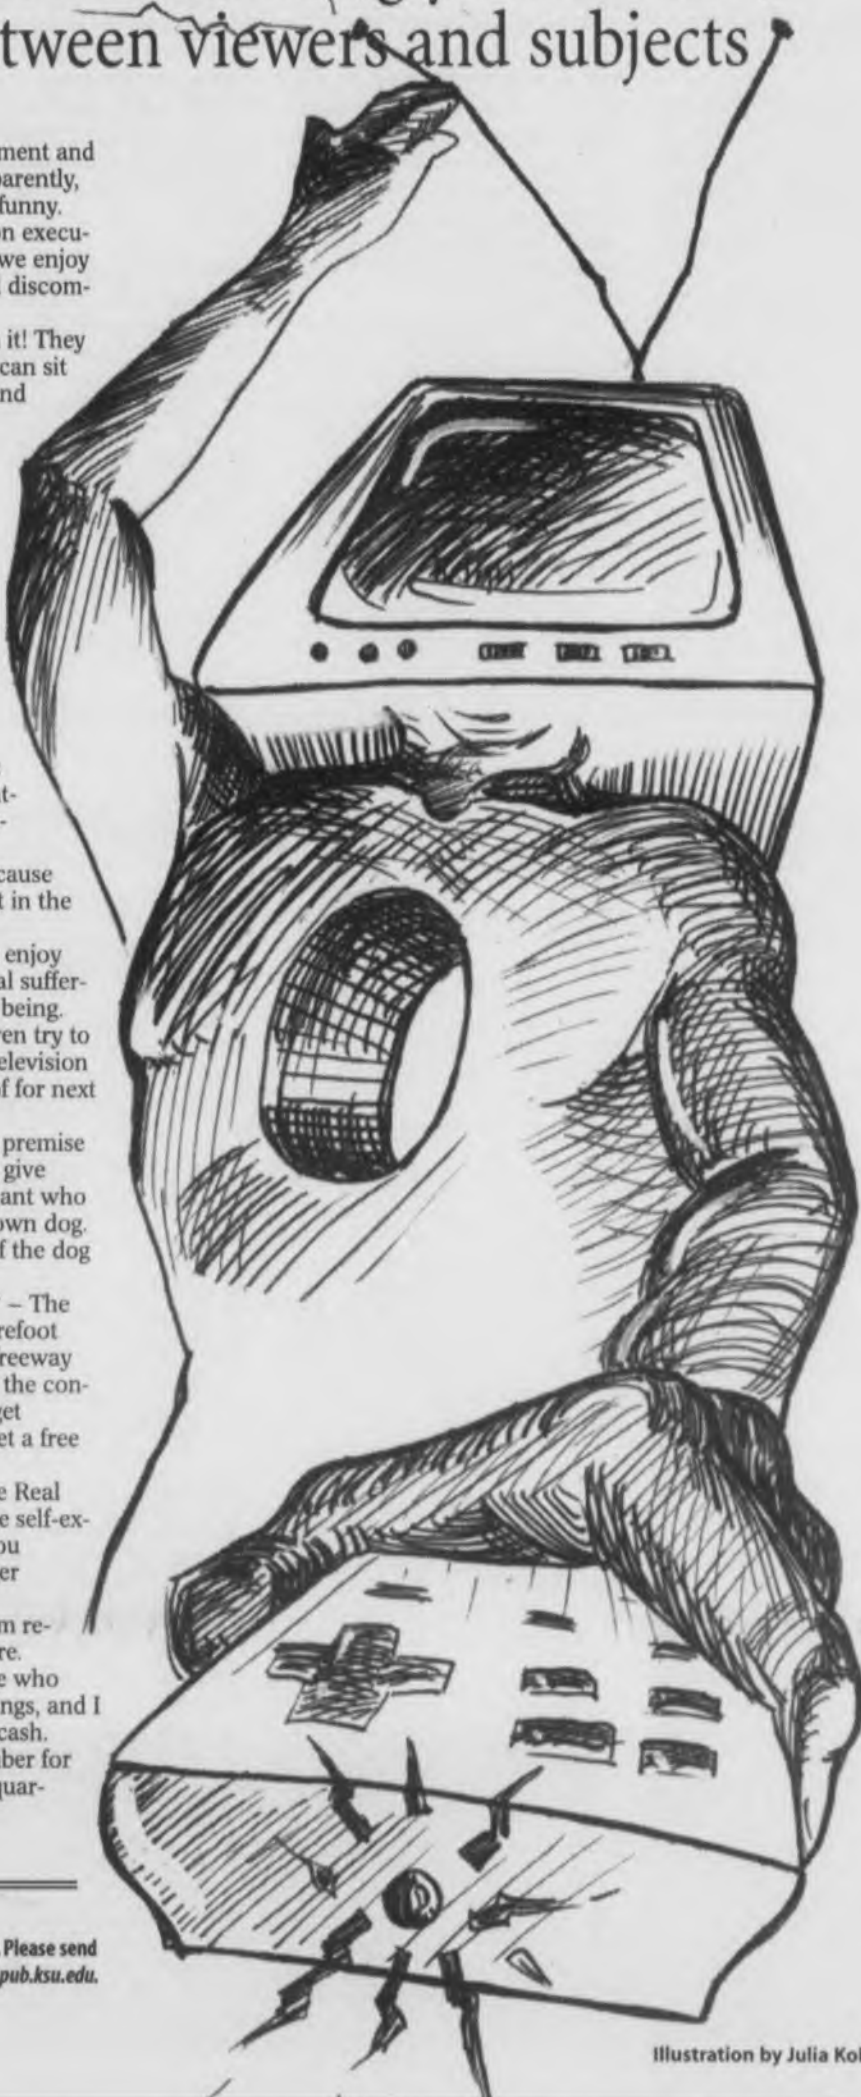

"Dead Dog" – The premise of this show will be to give $10,000 to the contestant who willingly shoots their own dog. They only get $5,000 if the dog doesn't die.

"Frogger: Extreme" – The contestant will run barefoot across a Los Angeles freeway and back five times. If the contestant survives, they get $50,000. If not, they get a free funeral.

"Running Man: The Real Deal" – This should be self-explanatory for any of you Arnold Schwarzenegger fans.

I'm wondering if I'm really not that far off here. I'm sure there's people who would watch these things, and I could use some extra cash. Anyone have the number for Fox's corporate headquarters?

THURSDAY'S OPINIONS

Chance York examines the use of patriotic yellow ribbons.

James Hurla discusses the latest power-nap fad.

Cable TV menu should include a la carte

Last week I went into the offices of a local cable provider to sign up to have cable installed at my apartment.

I wanted local channels, and a couple cable channels and I wanted a package that'd cost me around $20-25 per month.

I went up to the counter, and I must admit, the service was good and they were very kind to me in showing me my options.

Unfortunately, they didn't have what I wanted.

You see, there are no middle steps between their limited ($10.35) and expanded ($40.68) packages more and one was nearly four times than the other.

Before I go further, let me make this clear: I am an absolute, complete, total capitalist pig and very proud of it.

I do not allow businesses to dictate to me what I buy. I do not simply accept whatever is on the shelf. If you can't give me what I want, I go somewhere else.

The limited package consisted of 18 channels, including the weather channel, local broadcast channels, and C-SPAN.

I like these channels, but they are not enough to satiate this little piggy's entertainment desires.

The expanded package added 49 more, almost 50 of which I did not want.

They have lots of little things you can tack on to the expanded one, but I was not interested.

Thus, both products were left behind by yours truly. There may those who would be content paying for all the extra channels just to watch less than half, and such people are without a doubt very weak-minded.

I'm not going to pay for channels like Lifetime, HGTV, Nick-elodeon, Court TV, BET and others that I do not watch.

I'm tempted to just get the limited package, and I may, but I don't feel like settling just yet.

I know that this is probably the case for every cable company across the nation. Note that I did not say that I cared.

I suggest that cable companies offer a la carte packages to their customers next to their lumped groupings.

That is, assign a per-channel-rate and let the people pick and choose.

This way, people won't have to buy both Lifetime and Spike TV, they can get MTV or VH1 or CMT, or all three, depending on their tastes.

I'll admit, it seems a little daunting. It could become difficult to organize all that programming.

That, however, is what they probably thought when they first considered offering cable TV. I know they can decide who gets premium channels, who gets adult channels, and who gets special children's programming.

All they need to do is expand the choices. This isn't just for my needs, though.

I wonder how many others would like to have their channel list comprised of nothing but channels they want.

Imagine how well such a change would be accepted. Finally, the consumer would cease to be subject to the whims of the cable company and be free.

It won't just benefit the customers, however.

The cable companies would no doubt start raking it in once they allow their customers to add one or two more channels instead of having to get them all together.

To sum up, all I'm asking for is an increase in choices for myself and other consumers.

Until that happens, I'll be trying to decide between the limited package or an antenna.

Forget Bush and Kerry. Dan Rather for president. At least he's man enough to admit when he's made a mistake.

Officiating not an easy task

MATTHEW GIRARD

Since the beginning of the intramural flag football season, I have been an official for the sport, and in the past few weeks I have learned officiating a football game is a lot harder than it looks.

As a former player and later, an avid watcher of games, I often wondered how officials missed calls or made calls that no one else in the stadium saw.

I now know, no matter how hard you study the rule book and try to go over every possible situation in your head, things on the field happen entirely too fast for officials to catch everything.

Depending on where you are at on the field during a flag football game, three officials have zones to watch over, and there are 14 players trying to gain an advantage without you seeing it. It's not an easy task.

That being said, on Saturday night I saw one of the most bone-headed calls made by an official.

In one of the biggest college football games of the young season, the Florida Gators were taking on the Tennessee Volunteers. At a critical point in the game, a Florida defender was called for a personal foul after the play was finished.

Upon seeing the replay, I was astounded at what I saw next.

The altercation took place between a Volunteer receiver and a Gator cornerback away from the play. The Tennessee receiver blatantly shoved the cornerback. In retaliation, the Florida cornerback slapped him in the face.

Now, most of the time officials don't see the first punch, and the retaliation gets players in trouble, but this time the official was facing the players — two feet away — when the first punch was thrown. He threw his yellow flag high in the air and called the personal foul on the Florida cornerback.

The official was two feet away, staring at the two players. How did he not see who hit who first?

Apparently it is legal to start a fight, just as long as you don't hit back. If I would have known that in my playing days, I might have tried to instigate a few fights to get my team an extra 15 yards and maybe, just maybe, we wouldn't have finished with a 2-7 record.

Tennessee went on to win the game on a 50-yard field goal and beat Florida for the first time since 1998 — when the Volunteers won the national championship.

Usually, I'm not one to say officials cost teams games, but this time the men in stripes just might have.

I can say that, because I'm an official.

Golfers edge into second at Lawrence tourney

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team edged past Texas-San Antonio Tuesday in the two-day Kansas Invitational to take second place out of 13 teams at Alvarado Country Club in Lawrence.

The Wildcats' three-round total of 877 fell seven strokes behind Kansas' 870 on 54 holes. Texas-San Antonio finished just shy of K-State with a score of 882.

"When you're playing a team on their home course and only lose by seven, that's just great," Coach Tim Norris said.

After Monday's action, K-State was in third place behind Texas-San Antonio but managed to catapult ahead Tuesday by shooting a 294, compared to the Roadrunners' 302.

"Our team played solid golf from top to bottom," Norris said.

It took a sudden-death playoff between senior Matt Van Cleave and KU's Kevin Ward to decide the individual title.

Both players birdied the first playoff hole, but Ward claimed victory by paring the second

WCBB | Lindy's tabs Wecker first team All-America

Senior K-State forward Kendra Wecker was selected as a preseason first-team All-American, and the Wildcats were picked as the No. 19 women's basketball team in the country in the 2004-05 edition of Lindy's College Basketball Annual.

Wecker

Wecker — an All-Big 12 selection last season and candidate for numerous preseason awards — was honored on the first team along with LSU's Seimone Augustus, Minnesota's Janel McCarville, DePaul's Khara Smith and Notre Dame's Jacqueline Batteast.

Coming off its Big 12 Championship last season, the Wildcats were among five conference teams in Lindy's top 25.

Along with Wecker, the Wildcats return seniors Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney — both were All-Big 12 selections a year ago.

Olympics | Cyclist proclaims innocence in steroid scandal

Olympic cycling champion Tyler Hamilton declared his innocence Tuesday while awaiting results of backup tests for possible blood doping that could cost him the gold medal.

"I have always been an honest person. I am devastated to be here tonight. My family is devastated. My team is devastated. My friends are devastated," Hamilton said, adding that he would "fight this until I don't have a euro left in my pocket."

Tests at the Athens Olympics on Aug. 19 and at the Spanish Vuelta on Sept. 11 showed evidence of blood from another person, cycling's governing body said, according to a spokesman for Hamilton's team, Phonak.

Follow-up tests were started Tuesday and will be finished Wednesday, although it isn't clear when the results will be announced, Hamilton said.

If found guilty of a violation at the Olympics, Hamilton would lose his gold. Three athletes had gold medals revoked for doping during the Aug. 13-29 Olympics; a record 24 athletes — none American — from various sports were cited for drug-test violations at the Athens Olympics.

"I am 100 percent innocent," Hamilton said. "I worked hard for that gold medal, and it isn't going anywhere."

MLB | Giants keep Bonds on board through 2006

Now that Barry Bonds is assured of staying with the San Francisco Giants for two more seasons, he already is looking beyond. His children won't let him think about retirement just yet.

Bonds

Bonds will have at least two more seasons to break Hank Aaron's career home run record while playing for the Giants, who decided Tuesday to drop their right to void the final year of his contract.

Under the $90 million, five-year deal agreed to in January 2002, San Francisco could have voided the 2006 season if Bonds failed to reach 500 plate appearances next year or 1,500 combined from 2003 to 2005, including at least 400 next season.

Bonds, who needs 55 homers to pass Aaron's mark of 755, will make $20 million in 2005 and $18 million in 2006, with $5 million of each year's salary deferred at 3.5 percent and paid from 2007 to 2011.

CFB | Idaho corner killed in shooting, motive unclear

A University of Idaho football player was shot to death, and police arrested two brothers from Seattle after a car chase that extended across two states.

Eric McMillan, 19, was pronounced dead early Monday at an area hospital, Moscow police Capt. Cam Hershaw said.

McMillan was a starting cornerback for the Vandals. He played Saturday against Washington State.

A motive for the shooting was not immediately clear.

Idaho players will wear a decal with McMillan's initials on their helmets when they play Saturday at Oregon, coach Nick Holt said Tuesday.

Netters face No. 11 Texas A&M Aggies tonight

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team returns to Big 12 play against Texas A&M in its conference home opener at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The No. 19 Wildcats (6-4, 0-1) face a challenge in the No. 11 Aggies, who come into Manhattan on the heels of a win over No. 21 Kansas that moved them to 6-2 overall and 2-0 in the Big 12. The Aggies' ranking is the highest for the team since 2001.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the Wildcats will have their hands full.

"(The Aggies) are very good, they're a team that has no glaring weaknesses. They're very physical," she said. "They've always been a good ball control team that can dig balls and pass very well, and they're well-coached. I think they're going to give us everything we want on Wednesday."

Texas A&M returns three starters from last year's squad that tied for third in the Big 12. Senior middle blocker Melissa Munsch is a preseason All-Big 12 selection, and thus far this season she is averaging 3.85 kills, 2.08 blocks and 3.12 digs a game.

Teaming up with Munsch is junior outside hitter Laura Jones, who leads the Aggies with 4.54 kills per game.

With one conference loss already this season, the game has added meaning for K-State.

Fritz said the challenge of playing quality teams every game in conference play is tough, but it's something she thinks the Wildcats can deal with as the season progresses.

"It's a difficult task, but it's one that every team has to deal with," she said. "We're not the only ones having to go through that. Usually the more experienced team, the better they handle that ongoing pressure. I think we're maturing in our team, we're developing into a more experienced team."

After 10 matches this season, Fritz said she is unsure about what kind of squad the 2004 Wildcats are, but she likes what she sees so far.

"I don't know if I have one word that would describe their personality," Fritz said. "They seem to be very driven, they seem to compete and enjoy competition."

Hitching a ride

Students, families without cars find alternate forms of transportation

By Mahalakshmi Ganapathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are some students that haven't been off campus much.

Gayathri Pidatala, graduate student in apparel, textile and marketing, said she hasn't even seen the Manhattan Town Center mall yet.

"Where is the mall?" Pidatala said. "I have not visited it. I got a chance to go to Wal-Mart once last week, but I do not know when I would go next. I'll have to ask someone."

This is because Pidatala does not own a car — Pidatala is one of several others on campus without a car who have difficulty getting around Manhattan.

She said there are several problems with investing in a car, mainly money.

She said she waited almost two weeks until someone could offer her a ride to get her groceries.

"We had to wait for someone, because it is not a walkable distance, and there is no other transportation," Pidatala said. "My professor, friends, classmates said they would give me ride next when I want to do groceries."

However, she said she does not feel it is right to disturb someone every time she wants to buy something.

"They might have something else scheduled for the day," Pidatala said. "I am planning to try the Saturday shuttle from the Union, I haven't tried it before. If it works, then I don't have to bother a friend."

The shuttle, which travels to Wal-Mart, the Manhattan International Food Center and ALDI food store, is definitely helpful, but only students can ride in it, said Mary Beth Cook, graduate assistant in the Office of International Programs.

"Spouses or children of students or faculty are not allowed to ride in the shuttle," Cook said. "The vehicle is from the Motor Pool, and that's the rule."

"We are trying to include everyone in the KCI shuttle that runs during the breaks."

Youfeng Wang, graduate student in geography, said he went through the same period without a car. He said he recently bought a car and feels independent and able to enjoy more time outside campus.

"Without a car, it was difficult to go to different places," Wang said. "My life was limited to campus. I would go to school and then back to the apartment."

Going to the airport could be troublesome as well.

The KCI Roadrunner transport is a possibility, but is expensive, said Avanthi Koneru, graduate student in computing and information sciences.

Koneru said you have to plan ahead to take the Roadrunner.

"The Roadrunner was packed," Koneru said. "There were too many people. Also it's overpriced. It costs as much as an air ticket. Taking a flight and Roadrunner is very expensive."

Pidatala said a public transportation system is badly needed in Manhattan.

"I would buy a car, but have to wait and check my finances. I have other things to buy before this big investment. If I have a car, then nothing like it," Pidatala said.

"With a diverse population such as this, a shuttle system must be designed at least to meet the basic necessities of people such as groceries and the health center."

Dangerfield in coma after heart surgery

Rodney Dangerfield has been in a coma for a couple of weeks after undergoing heart surgery, but has begun to show some awareness, his wife said Monday.

The 82-year-old comedian was stable and had been breathing on his own for 24 hours, Joan Dangerfield said in a statement released by the comic's publicist, Kevin Sasaki.

Dangerfield had a heart valve replaced Aug. 25 at the University of California, Los Angeles, Medical Center.

There was no mention of a coma in a condition update from the publicist last week. Sasaki did not return calls for comment Monday.

Joan Dangerfield said in her statement, "My husband slipped into a light coma a couple of weeks ago while recovering from his heart surgery. His overall condition, however, remains stable."

She said Dangerfield was receiving "extraordinary care" from his doctors and nurses.

Lelouch shells out $186,000 for free screenings

For French director Claude Lelouch, his art comes at a price.

To counter critics who panned his latest movie, "Les Parisiens," Lelouch paid for free screenings nationwide last Friday so the moviegoing public could make up its own mind.

Thousands took him up on his offer of free tickets — leaving him with a big bill.

"It's going to cost me about a million francs (about $186,000) for some 40,000-45,000 spectators who came to see the film for free," Lelouch told RTL radio.

He has no regrets, he insisted.

"What happened in the cinemas was fabulous," Lelouch said Monday. "The viewers were really enthusiastic — standing ovations everywhere. People loved it."

Lelouch again lashed out at critics who "massacre all popular films," saying he had "kept my mouth shut" while enduring 40 years of tough reviews.

Painter's inspired views of Flint Hills on exhibit at Strecker-Nelson

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most of the featured painter's work in the Strecker-Nelson Gallery's latest exhibit, "At Home in the Flint Hills," comes from her front yard.

Judith Mackey lives in Cottonwood Falls, Kan., and paints in any weather, usually close to home.

"I paint what I see," she said. "The goal is to get other people to see and appreciate the Flint Hills."

Mackey has painted for the past 40 years, but other than a few workshops she said she has no formal training.

Gallery owner Barbara Nelson said this shows Mackey's real determination.

"She started painting and realized she had an eye and a skill for it," Nelson said. "Some painters do take a lot of workshops. Often the painters, it seems, have their own unique style. Judy's style, people can walk in and say 'ah, Judy Mackey' and clearly see what she is doing."

Mackey said her lack of training is not something she thinks about.

"I'm a Christian and inspired by God," she said. "It's my duty to paint what I'm inspired by."

The uniqueness of the artist's style is something Nelson said she and husband Jay look for in an artist.

"They are not following the teacher," she said. "They are using what they learned in the workshop to apply it to the work they are already doing."

Nelson said featured sculptor Donna Cole is just as unique.

Cole, who received her MFA from K-State in 2003 and is now an associate professor at Portland Community College, uses crystalline glaze and crushed glass to make ceramics that look like rocks. Cole said her work represents the wet and dry contrast of the Pacific coast.

The relationship between geology and the Flint Hills is what prompted the Nelsons to bring Cole back to the gallery.

"Nobody else is doing it," Nelson said. "Other people use crystalline glazes, but no one does this form which she does in a sort of geode way."

The exhibit includes Margo Kren and Oscar Larmer, art professors emeritus, who Nelson said are popular because both have great reputations.

"A lot of people were very enthused about her work being here," Nelson said of Kren. "There were people who knew her before, but also enthused because they didn't ever see her work."

The exhibit's two other painters — Judi Greer Kellas and Heather Smith Jones — each use assembly in their work.

Kellas has a large painting, "Water-flowers — Lotus Pond," which are three pieces placed side by side.

Gallery owner Jay Nelson said if the piece on the right side is moved to the left side, the painting is still correct.

Jones juxtaposes painting and pin-hole marking together, something Jay said is a tension between the tightly rendered and loosely painted.

"Constellation" is a four-inch painting covered with pin holes so it looks like a celestial constellation.

"That's partly why she breaks the canvas up into these rectangles," he said.

"Then the words also are juxtaposed with visual language and I feel they complement each other. The works explain the painting, but because of the way she does the pin holes, you don't have to read them."

Tawhid and Jihad has claimed responsibility for killing at least seven hostages, including another American, Nicholas Berg, who was abducted in April. The group also has said it is behind a number of bombings and gun attacks.

The violence continued unabated. A car bomb wounded four U.S. soldiers Tuesday, and two Marines were reported killed in earlier attacks west of Al-Zarqawi, standing alongside four other masked militants clad in black, personally cut off Armstrong's head, the CIA confirmed after analyzing his voice on Monday's footage.

Armstrong's body was discovered only blocks from where he lived, officials and witnesses said.

CIA | Democrats on intelligence committee split confirmation votes

"While I appreciate his testimony and commitment to non-partisanship if confirmed, I must vote on his record, not his promises," Rockefeller said. "I sincerely hope that Porter Goss proves my vote wrong and becomes an independent and exceptional" CIA director.

Goss served as House Intelligence chairman for nearly eight years. He would be only the second CIA director who served in Congress, after former president and House member George H.W. Bush.

Even before Bush nominated Goss in August, Democrats complained that Goss lacked the independence to lead the U.S. intelligence community.

Republican Senate Intelligence Chairman Pat Roberts said Monday that Goss is independent, nonpartisan and aggressive — and qualified for duty outside Congress.

"I am pleased the committee acted quickly and voted strongly in favor of the nomination of Porter Goss," Roberts said after Tuesday's meeting. "His experience in both oversight and as an intelligence officer makes him uniquely qualified to lead the intelligence community as we debate its critical reforms."

In addition to Rockefeller, Democrats who voted against the Goss nomination were Carl Levin of Michigan, Richard Durbin of Illinois and Ron Wyden of Oregon.

Democrats voting for the nomination were Dianne Feinstein of California, Evan Bayh of Indiana and Barbara Mikulski of Maryland.

John Edwards of North Carolina, the Democratic vice-presidential nominee, made no recommendation.

Van Cleave began Tuesday's round tied for first with USTA's John Elizondo, but Elizondo fired a 76 in the final round to give him a final score of 218 and sixth place finish.

"Matt played fabulous golf - every time he missed a green, he was able to get right back up," Norris said. "He just couldn't convert in the play-offs."

By putting up scores of 71-71-70, Van Cleave finished 4-under par at Alvamar - his second best career finish behind his 11-under par performance at the 2003 Purina Classic.

Van Cleave said his success was no accident.

Sproles moved into second place on the Big 12's all-time rushing yardage list with 4,211 career rushing yards - 1,079 yards behind former Texas Longhorn Ricky Williams.

In the last four years, the Wildcats are 2-2 in games following a bye week and have not won a game coming off a bye since a 64-0 win over New Mexico State in 2001.

Coach Bill Snyder said during his weekly press conference Tuesday that the team will spend the week working on fundamentals and preparing for the Aggies (2-1).

MORE MOVES ON DEFENSE

The coaches made another depth chart change on defense this past week, with junior defensive back Bret Jones moving into the starting free safety position and senior defensive back Jesse Tetuan switching to strong safety.

"He's just one of those guys that seems to have a knack for being in the right place at the right time and has consequently been able to make some plays for us," Snyder said of Jones. "He can run well, and he's got good ball skills, and that's evident by the interceptions he's had. He's just earned his way there."

Jones came into the game against Louisiana-Lafayette with two interceptions, leading the Cats with six tackles and a sack against the Ragin' Cajuns.

Snyder said more moves may be on the way for the defense.

"We are still trying to keep it competitive, and that creates some uncertainty," he said. "Yes, there is still some progress to be made."

BOOST OF CONFIDENCE

After bouncing back with a win against the Ragin' Cajuns, several Wildcats said the victory gave the team a renewed energy heading into the bye week and conference season.

Snyder said the win was a sign of his team's improvements.

"I hope, as always, that we continue to improve and continue to make strides, and I think that if you go across our football team, that was evident this past week," Snyder said.

Tetuan said having no game on Saturday gives the team a chance to get better and takes the pressure off.

"It's a chance to not rush, to relax and a chance to get better without feeling the pressure of a game," Tetuan said. "It gives us a week to practice tackling, without having to be worried about being tight on Saturday."

CATS ON THE ROAD

For the sixth season in a row, K-State will open its Big 12 Conference schedule on the road when the team travels to College Station, Texas, in two weeks. In that stretch of road conference openers, the Wildcats are 2-4.

K-State will take on the Aggies in one of the largest stadiums in the Big 12 - Kyle Field, which holds more than 82,000 fans.

Junior tackle Jerome Clary said it is one of the loudest stadiums in which he has played.

"Kyle Field is definitely going to be a tough place to play," Clary said. "It holds a lot of people, and they are right on top of you."

Local soldiers charged with deaths of 3 Iraqi citizens

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The U.S. military charged two U.S. soldiers for the deaths of three Iraqis, the U.S. command said Wednesday.

“Sgt. Michael P. Williams and Spc. Brent W. May ... have been charged with premeditated murder,” the military statement said. Williams also was charged with obstruction of justice and making a false official statement, the military said.

The two soldiers serve with the Army's 1st Cavalry Division and are members of Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment out of Fort Riley, Kan., the statement said.

Approximately 800 soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry are serving their second tour in Iraq. Post spokeswoman Sam Robinson said the unit, which is part of the 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, is temporarily serving with the 1st Cavalry while in Iraq.

The charges were the second murder charges filed in the past two weeks against soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry. On Sept. 15, prosecutors charged Sgts. Eric J. Colvin, 23, of Pappillion, Neb., and Aaron R. Stanley, 22, of Bismarck, N.D., with the shooting death of Staff Sgt. Matthew H. Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif., at a rural Clay County home.

A second soldier, Spec. Christopher D. Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo., was wounded in the incident and died Saturday in a Wichita, Kan., hospital. Prosecutors had charged Colvin and Stanley with attempted first-degree murder in his shooting and expect to upgrade the charges.

Colvin and Stanley remain jailed on $1 million bond each.

Deadline approaching to secure password

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students are required to respond to secure connectivity by Oct. 18.

Secure connectivity is a part of the Webmail service and ensures secure passwords for all Web-mail users.

The service has been extended to other e-mail clients used by the university, said Julie Bell, Unix system manager at Computing and Network Services.

Students who do not update to this connectivity will be unable to retrieve mail from the central servers, she added. Bell said secure connectivity provided encrypted passwords, which could not be sniffed and protected the user.

“Enabling SSL on your e-mail clients such as Mozilla, Netscape, Pegasus provides an added level of privacy and security for the data you are sending over the network,” she said.

Clients could be updated by visiting the Web site www.k-state.edu/Info/Tech/e-mail/docs/ssl.html and following the instructions there, said Cathy Rodriguez, information technology consultant at the Information Technology Assistance Center.

“It is part of an overall long-term strategy to eliminate situations where eIDs and passwords are transmitted without encryption,” said Harvard Townsend, director of Computing and Network Services.

The risk of plain text information over the network being intercepted was greatly reduced, he said.

Rock-A-Belly Deli

Loyal patrons continue their support

The kitchen is small, and the cook is half-fast.

Despite warnings on the sign, Rock-A-Belly Deli's customers keep coming back.

The restaurant, which opened in 1987, has a faithful following. Robert Clark, professor of French, has been coming almost every day since 1992 for lunch and dinner — sometimes both.

“I really like who works here and the food,” Clark said. “It's the people and the atmosphere.”

Clark isn't the only one. Alie Stonestreet, chief designer at an aerospace company in Manhattan, sits down at the Rock-A-Belly bar counter once a week for lunch. He's been a loyal customer since the early 90s when he attended K-State as an undergraduate.

“I get whatever the special is,” he said. “I haven't had a bad one yet.”

What keeps the customers loyal might be the atmosphere, the food or the customer service.

Bruce Broce, deli employee, said the philosophy of the employees is upholding the standard of the Golden Rule, whether it's greeting customers when they walk in the door, remembering their favorite sandwich or chatting about their day.

“Even though you are trying to be expedient, you can definitely take time out to talk to people and get to know them,” Broce said.

That attitude can be attributed to the fact the deli's owners are part of the daily operations, Broce said.

Casey Brassfield JUNIOR IN HISTORY	"Pretty sweet at first, leaves a bitter aftertaste — probably the best tasting."	"Less taste than number one. Number one is still better."	"Good tasting, sweeter than No. 1 — good aftertaste."
Robert Kohman SENIOR IN AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION	"Best of the three."	"Sweetest of the three — maybe too sweet for my taste."	"Somewhat bitter. Not near the taste of the other two."
Tyson Keast SENIOR IN CONSTRUCTION SCIENCE AND MANAGEMENT	"Tastes flat, no sugar. Cool, tastes like a diet cola from Aldi's."	"Tastes flat, cool to lukewarm. (It's) diet or sugar-free."	"Little tangy, bad taste. Pretty gross."

This unscientific taste test was conducted Wednesday in the Collegian newsroom. Students were chosen at random. Soda brands were not known during the test. Taste testers were given one cup of each soda and as much time needed to give their findings.

Elevator outage affects students' attendance

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students with disabilities had a hard time getting to their classes in Waters Hall because of a broken elevator.

The only elevator in the hall broke down Sept. 15 and wasn't repaired until Monday.

Gretchen Holden, director of Disability Services, said it caused a big problem.

"There was simply no way for a wheelchair user or someone on crutches to get to class," she said.

"When situations like this happen, Holden said she tries to accommodate students by getting their work from their teachers.

"We gave a test to a student here in our center," she said. "Had it gone on longer, I would have tried to relocate classes."

Holden said she was notified by the Department of Facilities that students would be unable to use the elevator.

"They were concerned that the students couldn't get to class," she said. "I reviewed the class schedules and looked for the students that I knew that had mobility impairments, and I called them and let them know."

Cliff Slocum, electrical shop supervisor, said the elevator broke down because the motor burned up.

Holden said she thinks there are things that could be done to prevent this situation.

"When you have such a large building, there should be two elevators," she said. "That should be something that we should look at more carefully."

Slocum said there was another elevator at one time.

"It got in such bad shape, they didn't want to repair it, so they just took it out," he said.

Holden also suggested the possibility of another motor for the elevator.

Ed Heptig, director of facilities maintenance, said both of these ideas are great, but not feasible.

"There is no money there to do those things," he said. "What we have to do is to react and repair it as quickly as we can."

Officials promise to free Iraqi detainee as Briton pleads for life

By Alexandra Zavis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A senior Iraqi official said Wednesday that a decision had been made to release a top female germ-warfare scientist for Saddam Hussein, but Iraq's leader and U.S. officials quickly squelched the idea that she would be freed soon.

Iraqi militants who beheaded two Americans have threatened to kill a Briton unless female detainees are freed.

A videotape posted on an Islamic Web site later Wednesday showed a man identifying himself as British hostage Kenneth Bigley.

In it, Bigley is seen pleading for British Prime Minister Tony Blair to help save his life.

"To Mr. Blair, my name is Ken Bigley, from Liverpool," the man said in the grainy videotape. "I think this is possibly my last chance. I don't want to die."

"Please, please, release the female prisoners that are held in Iraqi prisons. Please help them. I need you to help me, Mr. Blair, because you are the only person now on God's Earth that I can speak to. Please, please help me see my wife, who cannot go on without me."

The speaker wore an orange jumpsuit, the kind that kidnappers put on their hostages before killing them. He sobbed in the middle of his message and wiped his forehead.

It was not known if there was any connection between the release of the new video showing Bigley pleading for his life and Wednesday's confusion over a possible prisoner release.

After the U.S. Embassy in Baghdad said there would be no immediate release of either of the two women in U.S. custody, Iraqi Prime Minister Ayad Allawi said there were no immediate plans to free them, disputing the earlier statement by his Justice Department that a decision was made to release one.

Allawi said his government has begun reviewing the status of its detainees, including the two female scientists known as "Dr. Germ" and "Mrs. Anthrax" for their involvement in Saddam Hussein's biological weapons programs.

But, he said the review process had nothing to do with the current hostage situation and had started weeks ago in Iraq.

TO THE POINT Controversial film worth seeing, debating Controversy seems to surround filmmaker Michael Moore everywhere he goes.

This weekend, that controversy will show up on campus in the form of Moore's film, "Fahrenheit 9/11." The movie will be shown in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Much like "Bowling for Columbine," the filmmaker's work has been the topic of widespread criticism. Critics have called the film everything from inaccurate to deceitful.

In fact, there are many factual inadequacies and a few somewhat deceitful portrayals of events in Moore's films.

However, Moore's films serve to spark the dialogue that is paramount in a successful democracy.

While you might disagree with his approach or message, it still is important to hear that message, even if it serves only to fortify the beliefs you already hold.

Take Moore's work with a grain or a ton of salt, but take it in nonetheless.

Most importantly, think for yourself. Don't just assume everything you see is the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

Seek alternative versions to the same story. Most likely somewhere in the middle lies the truth.

The ultimate test of a free mind is the ability to evaluate all sides of an opposing viewpoint, both critically and objectively, before coming to a final decision.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Money in the mattress

Paying for a place to nap has its advantages

I would like to take a nap. If only I had $14.

Forget the hot dog stands and Internet cafes — the nap industry is the wave of the future.

In New York City's Empire State Building, Metronaps offers customers reclining-chair pods for them to sneak away for a quiet, dark nap during the business day.

It was only a matter of time before Americans made it this obvious that we can make money from other people's laziness.

I'm not sure a nap is worth $14, especially when you could pay $2 to get on the subway and cuddle up next to the nice man wearing a strong cologne that reminds you of your Uncle Jeff's breath.

By commercializing sleep, the founders are following in the footsteps of Mr. and Mrs. Evian, who were able to profit from water, the world's most abundant and readily-available resource.

Instead of pushing the button on a drinking fountain, we now pay $1 for a bottle. Instead of building a bed under our desk at work (a la George Costanza), we now pay $14 for one of life's simplest and most vital functions.

The pod is exceptional in that it's an entirely encapsulated reclining chair. A dark room simply wasn't confining enough.

I can't count the times I felt unsafe while sleeping at work for fear a pack of homicidal penguins would attack me — a pod certainly would have come in handy.

But I do see the advantages of nap time, especially on a college campus.

I've had several professors in the afternoon who are less than pleasant. Instead of grinning and bearing their rampant crankiness, we could lock them in a dark pod for 20 minutes.

The most unfortunate by-product of this policy, of course, would be realizing which of our esteemed professors sleeps with a blankie. And hearing a professor whisper your name in his sleep is kind of creepy, too.

Students should not be left out — they need sleep pods, too. Students already have access to rudimentary sleep pods, known commonly as "desks."

These are incredibly uncomfortable, and provide little privacy or protection from outside light and noise. It's not a positive rest environment to wake up with impressions on your forehead left from desk-carvings like "TKE Sucks."

Let's make the university work for us. Consider this column the shaky ground in which we will plant the seeds of this movement's grass roots.

I for one am tired of being expected to remain conscious for absurd amounts of time throughout the day.

I am putting my foot down — as soon as I'm done with this nap.

Patriotism measured in yellow ribbons

Whenever I see a car with a yellow, "Support the Troops" ribbon on it, I can't help but inquire where the driver is going.

"Are you on your way to support the troops?" I ask. Usually they make an obscene gesture and continue on their way.

But something like that doesn't stop me from asking. You see, in this time of utter chaos, when panic rules in the streets, and in our hearts and brains, it is important that we know just how patriotic an individual is.

Someone's level of patriotism can be determined by both the quantity of ribbons on their bumper and the size of the ribbon(s), which now come in mini, large, and extra large.

And size matters, folks.

There's a lot you can tell about a man by the size of his ribbon. I personally had an extra large size ribbon on my car, and I had to fend off the lady folk with a stick.

However, I decided to take my yellow ribbon down a couple weeks ago after reading about a tragic event in the Collegian's Campus Forum.

Apparently some poor soul's yellow, "Support the Troops" ribbon was stolen right off of his or her vehicle.

I was appalled to read this.

In fact, I was downright outraged.

Then, as fear began to sweep over me, I realized that this cruel act was probably not the work of some punk kid, or even a bitter ex, but a crazed, gun-toting terrorist!

Since that time I have been horrified by the thought of a man in a ski mask, lurking behind some bushes in a darkened parking lot, just waiting for his chance to steal my own patriotic ribbon.

If you, or anyone you know can lead authorities to the injured party's stolen property (in this case a small, magnetic, patriotic decal) please contact me immediately.

And maybe after we get a discussion going, you can tell me what happened to tying a yellow ribbon 'round the old oak tree?

That practice was popularized in 1979 during the Iran hostage crisis, but we don't uphold that tradition anymore.

Nope. Today we put our yellow ribbons on our cars, which is great for the patriot on-the-go, but what if I want something more stationary?

It doesn't even have to be an oak tree, although I still don't understand why no one uses them anymore.

Are we running out of oak trees? Is there a shortage of oak-tree sized ribbons? What's happening here?

Anything immobile would work for me. How about tying a yellow ribbon 'round the old, dented mailbox, or around the barbecue grill, or around the yard art?

Virtually anything on my front lawn will work.

And once my giant yellow ribbon is in place, not only will I be patriotic, but I will be secure knowing that my ribbon is in plain sight and safe from the likes of one Mr. Osama bin Laden.

This new email thing is great!!! I <3 The Collegian.

Does anyone know that our campus radio station plays Disney music at 2:30 in the morning? That's awesome.

Fly fishing? Silver Key raised a thousand dollars for homeless people, and you cover fly fishing? That's ridiculous. The Collegian sucks at life.

Hey Chaz Steimel, it was Tom Brokaw, not Dan Rather. Idiot.

In the last month a U.S. senator and a pop singer, both of whom oppose Bush's policies, have been prevented from flying because their names appeared on a secret no fly list.

Yeah, about my job again, pretty sure it's been confirmed. A bunch of new sales

Is it Friday yet? Cause it should be.

If you can read this, it means you aren't working.

Ryan Donahue, you're so wrong on so many different levels.

If the campus radio station wants more money, they need to play less crap. I mean rap.

K-State's trying to break the world's largest pillow fight record? Now that's pretty sweet.

Price of memorial not justifiable for Florida university

THE ORACLE
U. SOUTH FLORIDA

TAMPA, Fla. — Student Government is proposing to build a Sept. 11 memorial on campus with an estimated price tag between $50,000 and $65,000. While Sept. 11 was an event with repercussions that rippled through almost every sector of our lives, it is hard to see why such a large sum of money should be spent, especially as the event did not touch the University of South Florida community in a way that separated it from other universities. The memorial, proposed under former Student Body President Mike Griffin about two-and-a-half years ago, has now gone through the design process. Art and architecture students on campus worked together to come up with a design. In that regard it is understandable the design team that presented the final design to student government Tuesday night is looking forward to possibly seeing its work come to fruition. Nevertheless, Richard Beckman, who teaches sculpture at USF, said himself that if the memorial is built, to his knowledge USF will be the first university to have such a memorial. This begs the question: If schools such as New York University — which is mere miles from Ground Zero — do not see the need for such a memorial, why does USF need one? The most visible memorial on the USF campus is the Martin Luther King Jr. memorial. In that case, the memorial serves as a reminder to USF students that there was a time when black students were not allowed to attend colleges such as USF merely because of their skin color. To commemorate someone such as King on campus makes sense, as it directly relates to USF; to commemorate Sept. 11 does not. Student Senate President Stavros Papandreou said Tuesday night that SG's part is done and that he now proposes to "find out what the students really want." To that end, SG will have students sign a petition where they also will have the chance to oppose the proposed memorial. Students should not be lulled into supporting this memorial just for "patriotic" reasons, but should rather ask themselves why USF needs such a memorial and if there isn't a better way to spend $65,000 of Student Activity & Service funds or student money.

Major political parties exploit Amish in campaign for votes

THE POST
OHIO U.

ATHENS, Ohio — As a potential swing state in the upcoming presidential election, both Republicans and Democrats have made Ohio a featured battleground and attempted to win every possible vote. Such tenacity and commitment is respectable, but both parties have gone too far in trying to secure the vote of Ohio's forgotten minority: the Amish. In the past, only about 30 percent of Amish have exercised their right to vote, said Roy Miller, a member of the Old Order Amish. However, with a voting block estimated at about 36,000, this group theoretically could provide either candidate with enough of a push to win the state.

Realistically, the candidates have no intention of representing Amish concerns or honoring whatever campaign promises are made to them. Both sides need to stop pandering for every vote and help to stop the exploitation of a group that society views as backwards or odd. In addition to these all-too-common views, society — in the form of a CBS reality series — has used the Amish solely for amusement. From the cultural to the political arena, society needs to end its parasitic relationship with this group. In economic terms, nothing in this world is free, but surely it is clear that any support the Amish levy for a candidate will be given with nothing in return. Possibly the most ironic twist associated with this shameless action is trying to guess which political party the Amish would more likely favor, should they choose to vote. The Amish might swing to the Republican Party because of its platforms denouncing abortion and gay marriage, but the Democrats have the edge in other issues. Esteemed principles in the Amish ideology are pacifism and opposition to the death penalty. It is difficult to decide where the Amish might fall when comparing the philosophies of each party, because neither one encompasses their entire belief system. Should the Amish choose to vote this November, they will have a tough decision to make, but both political parties have a decidedly easier decision. It's time for our society to stop exploiting the Amish for personal gains, whether they are cultural or political.

Readership program hurts campus

DAILY UTAH CHRONICLE
U. UTAH

SALT LAKE CITY — Whether you realize it or not, the white newspaper dispensers around campus have a name. They're called the College Readership Program. The program was instituted at the end of last year, providing students with copies of USA Today and other large newspapers. It is a business — not a scholastic — venture. For a $5 student fee every semester, the swiping of UCards grants students access to the offered papers. The program was approved by the Associated Students of the University of Utah under the assumption that reading more newspapers would help students become more familiar with local, national and global issues. The Chronicle expressed fear the program would compete with Chronicle readership,

"The program was instituted at the end of last year, providing students with copies of USA Today and other large newspapers."

down by an average of 2,780 papers a day. That is at least (because a single copy is often read by many people when passed around in class or left in a restroom stall) 2,780 fewer people who know about ASUU and other student group-sponsored events. That's 2,780 people who may not donate blood, attend a lecture, see a counselor for depression, ask their department about a scholarship or sign up for a new class. When these concerns were originally raised (and downplayed by sales reps) of The Chronicle was accused fearing competition. The truth is, The Chrony has no competition. No reader will find student-group information in USA Today. While access to downtown and national newspapers is benefiting campus, forgetting to grab a Chrony is damaging the health of our campus

Older player not suited for NCAA

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Crazy stuff happens in sports.

Terrell Owens pulled a marker from his shoe and signed autographs after a touchdown last year.

A few weeks ago, a chair was thrown into the stands at an Oakland versus Texas Major League Baseball game, hitting a woman in the face and breaking her nose.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers suddenly believe they can pass the ball.

Just when you think you've seen it all, something comes along and pushes the envelope a little further.

This week, Tim Frisby, a walk-on wide receiver at the University of South Carolina, is awaiting word from the NCAA Clearinghouse on whether or not he is eligible to play football for the Gamecocks this season.

There's nothing too unusual or crazy about that. What if I told you that Frisby is 39 years old?

Now a vastly different light is cast on "Pops," as he is so affectionately called.

This situation is absolutely insane, and I think the outcome could really tarnish college football.

There is something special about going to a college football game on a Saturday and watching a team of 20-somethings battle it out for their alma mater. I don't want to see what would happen if a bunch of men old enough to be the fathers of those athletes start deciding they want to join the games too.

I seriously hope that Frisby is doing this just to get in shape. There is no way a 39-year-old man who hasn't played a down of competitive football since the mid-1980s could effectively play major collegiate football.

Frisby, recently retired from the U.S. Army, joined South Carolina's football team during winter workouts this past year. Once fall camp began, Coach Lou Holtz invited him back to the team. Frisby even dressed during South Carolina's game against Georgia on Sept. 11.

It is obvious that Frisby has some athletic ability. He even qualified for the elite Army Rangers, proving he must be physically gifted. And Holtz, the former coach at Notre Dame, knows a thing or two about evaluating football talent.

Even so, Frisby is almost 40 years old and yet he wants to play football against 20-year-old players who are entering their athletic prime.

I see nothing to be gained by either side.

Frisby won't benefit from standing on the sidelines all season, playing the part of the team cheerleader.

Netters dominate No. 11 Aggies

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team dominated No. 11 Texas A&M last night, sweeping the Aggies in three straight games at Ahearn Field House.

K-State jumped out early and never looked back, taking the match 30-22, 30-22 and 30-20. The win — their record 20th straight at home — moves the No. 19 Wildcats to 7-4 on the season and 1-1 in the Big 12 Conference. The Aggies dropped to 6-3 and 2-1 in conference play.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she expects great play out of her team, and that's what she got Wednesday night.

"I'm not surprised," she said. "I think that we coach a great team. I thought that all along. I think we have a chance to be very, very good. We expect to beat everybody and we expect to play well."

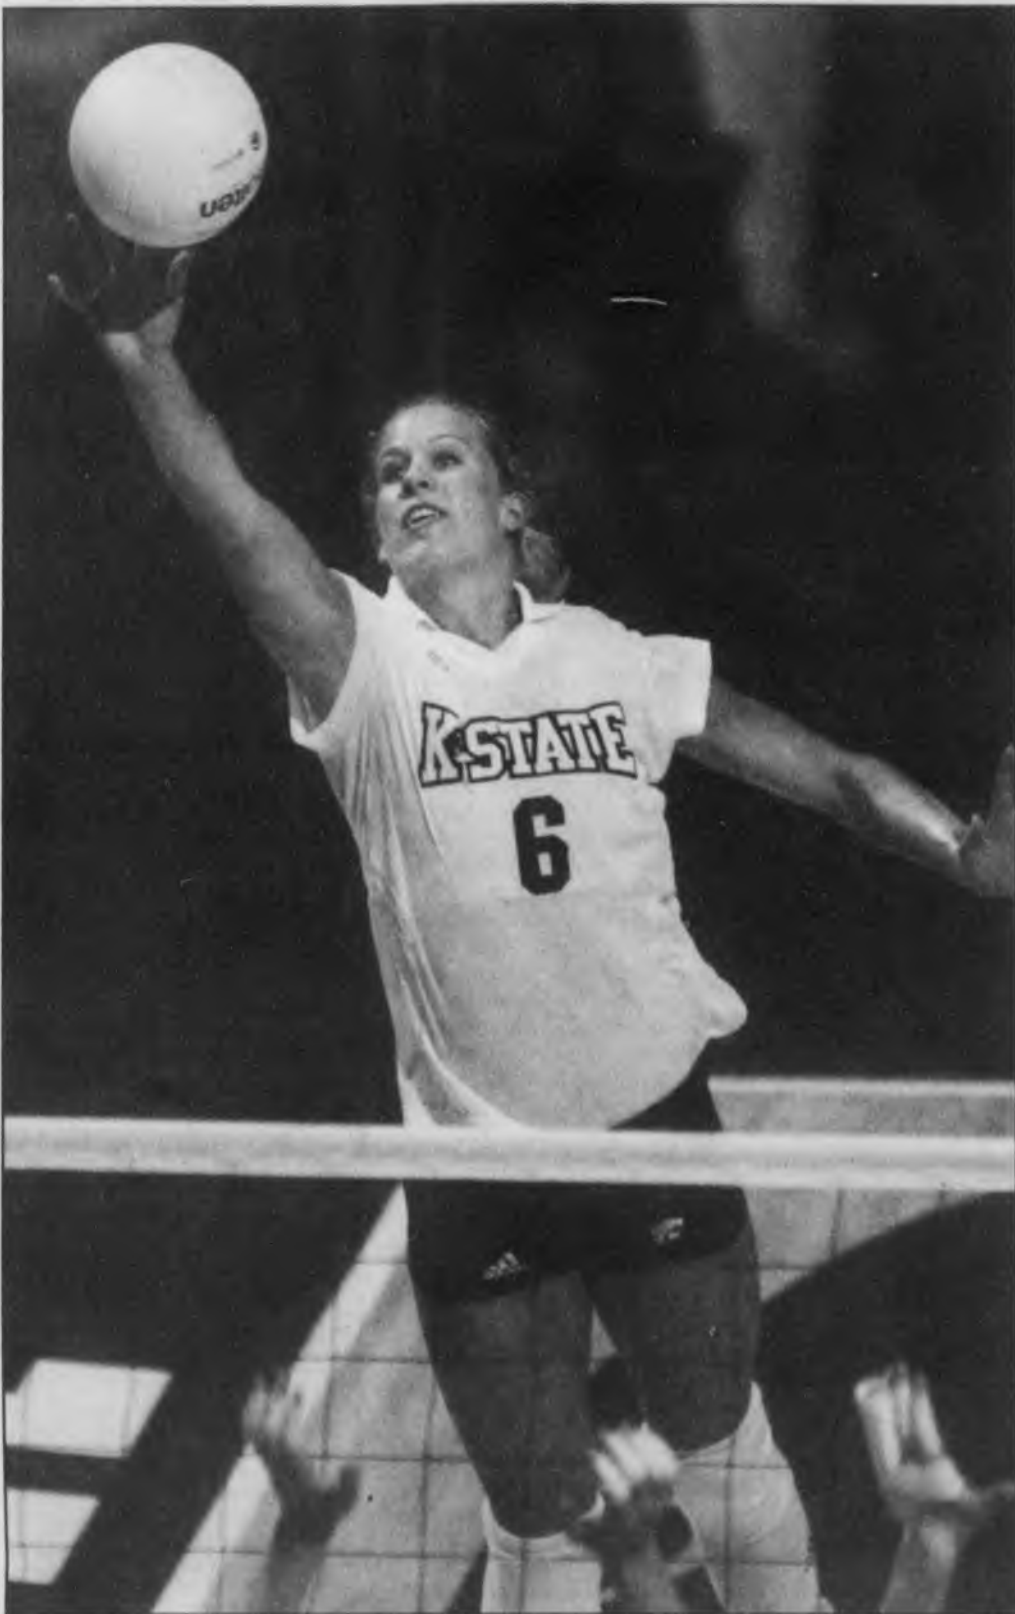

Sophomore middle blocker Joy Hamlin had an especially big night for K-State, tallying 11 kills on .647 hitting. Senior outside hitter Valeria Hejjas contributed 14 kills, senior setter Gabby Guerre had 40 assists and freshman libero Angie Lastra led the team with 16 digs.

"We had a very good, balanced attack for the most part," Fritz said.

Hamlin leads potent Cat offense

K-State was near-perfect in its 3-0 win Wednesday night against No. 11 Texas A&M at Ahearn Field House, and no Wildcat played better than Joy Hamlin.

The sophomore middle blocker's 11 kills were just one short of her career high, as she hit a blistering .647.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Hamlin's performance stood out on a night when the No. 19 Wildcats dominated a higher-ranked Aggie team for their first Big 12 win of the season.

"Joy, in particular, probably had her best night as a Wildcat tonight," Fritz said. "I was very proud of her."

Hamlin, along with seniors Valeria Hejjas (14 kills) and Gabby Guerre, led an efficient K-State offensive attack.

The Wildcats, coming into the match ninth in the Big 12 in kill percentage at .237, hit .387 as a team for the match.

Hamlin said credit for her play, and the team's overall offensive play, should go to Guerre. The senior setter had 40 assists on the night.

"I think me and Gabby connected really well tonight," Hamlin said. "She was really on fire — she made it so easy."

Fritz said Hamlin is "growing into her role" on the Wildcats.

The statistics show it.

On Sept. 10, the Douglass, Kan., native tied the school block assist record for a five-game match with 11 blocks against now No. 1 Minnesota and had nine kills and five blocks last Wednesday in the Wildcats' loss at Colorado.

Freshman libero Angie Lastra said coachability was a key reason for Hamlin's success Wednesday night.

"It was amazing — she followed everything the coaches said to her," Lastra said. "She was great."

NFL | Johnson angered over Vermeil's comments

Running back Larry Johnson reacted sharply Wednesday to remarks that Kansas City coach Dick Vermeil said were made at least partly in jest.

In his weekly news conference Tuesday, Vermeil said it would be time for the seldom-used Johnson to "take the diapers off" if he plays this week in place of an injured Priest Holmes.

Holmes was nursing a sore ankle on Wednesday and remained questionable for Sunday's game against Houston.

Johnson, a first-round draft pick out of Penn State, has expressed unhappiness before over not playing. He dismissed the suggestion that Vermeil was trying to motivate him.

"I don't need no motivation," he said. "If I need motivation, I'll talk to my father. I don't need another grown man telling me I need to take the diapers off. That's not how I've been raised, and I don't need no motivation from anybody. I'm self-motivated, because my father taught me to be that way."

Vermeil, whose 0-2 team has already been beset by distractions and injuries, said the remark "just popped into my scrambled head."

NFL | CBS dealt record fine for Super Bowl incident

Federal regulators on Wednesday fined CBS a record $550,000 for Janet Jackson's "wardrobe malfunction," which exposed the singer's breast during the Super Bowl halftime show.

The FCC voted unanimously to slap each of the 20 CBS-owned television stations with the maximum indecency penalty of $27,500. The total penalty of $550,000 is the largest fine levied against a television broadcaster. Most of the FCC's bigger fines have been against radio stations.

The agency's five commissioners decided not to fine CBS' more than 200 affiliate stations, which also aired the show but are not owned by the network's parent company, Viacom.

MTV, a Viacom subsidiary, produced the Feb. 1 halftime show, which featured Jackson and singer Justin Timberlake performing a racy duet. At the end, Timberlake ripped off a piece of Jackson's black leather top, exposing her right breast to a TV audience of about 90 million.

Olympics | Pro cycling team suspends Hamilton

Olympic cycling champion Tyler Hamilton was suspended Wednesday by his pro team, which threatened to fire him if he can't prove he's innocent of blood doping.

Hamilton could lose his time-trial gold medal from the Athens Games if backup tests confirm results from earlier tests at the Olympics and the Spanish Vuelta showing another person's blood in his system.

He denied receiving a transfusion — which can boost an athlete's performance by increasing the amount of oxygen-transporting red blood cells in his system.

Under the heading, "We believe Tyler," in a statement Wednesday, Phonak team boss Andy Rids said: "For the moment, we have to concentrate on the facts. These seem to speak against Tyler. But so long as we're not 100 percent certain that he's guilty of manipulation, we will believe him."

However, immediately below Rids's statement, Phonak said Hamilton's suspension would hold "pending further notice" until tests and proceedings are completed.

MCBB | Another charged in La Salle rape case

A third La Salle basketball player has been charged with rape over an alleged 2003 sexual encounter with a female player from the school that was reported to coaches at the time but not to police, officials said.

Dzaffo Larkai, 22, a forward who attended high school in England, surrendered Wednesday on rape and related charges, said Sgt. Sean McGinn of the Philadelphia Police Department's special victims unit.

Larkai had his ties with the university severed after his arrest, La Salle spokesman Joe Donovan said.

Freshmen lead women's tennis team at season opener at Ole Miss

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE STATE

Two freshmen on the women's tennis team get the opportunity to represent K-State for the first time in collegiate competition this weekend.

The team opens its season Friday at the Ole Miss Classic in Oxford, Miss. The tournament will be the first time freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia and Olga Klimova get a chance to compete at the Division-I level.

Klimova said she is excited for the competition.

"This is the first tournament of this type, Kvaratskhelia and I am looking forward to it, but I will be nervous too," Klimova said.

Coach Steve Bietau said both girls are talented prospects for the team.

"I'm excited to see what they look like in the heat of competition," Bietau said.

Bietau said the new players are in the initial learning stage and have to deal with many things coming at them at once.

He said his freshmen don't have a redshirt year, so they don't have any time to get acclimated.

Klimova and Kvaratskhelia both said even when the Wildcats don't have team practice, they try to work on their own skills.

"We don't have practice on Sundays, so I try to go out and jump rope," Klimova said.

Along with practice, Bietau said this weekend's tournament will benefit due to the tough competition.

The Wildcats will face the likes of Mississippi, Georgia and Tennessee Tech.

"We play Mississippi in a dual in February, so this will help us get an early look at them," Bietau said.

Bietau said it is good to go someplace where the competition is strong at the beginning of the year, because it helps the team to set the bar high, and it gives the players a chance to see some of the best in the country.

Klimova and Kvaratskhelia said they are hoping to come out of the competition with experience they can carry over to the rest of the season.

"I hope it will be a good beginning and help me to play better in the next competitions and avoid mistakes," Klimova said.

Kvaratskhelia agreed.

"You have to learn something in every competition. This is my first tournament with a university, and I'm not just playing for myself, so I can't make the little mistakes," Kvaratskhelia said.

Play about identity theft opens tonight

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

You can never be too careful.

That's what Vi Tran, second year graduate student in theater, said is the moral of KSU Theatre's production of "BecauseHeCan," written by Arthur Kopit.

Tran said the play, though including technology, isn't entirely about technology, but more about the characters reacting to being violated.

"We never really see Astrakhan (Tran's character) at a computer," Tran said. "We see Joseph at a computer, but it isn't really a play about that."

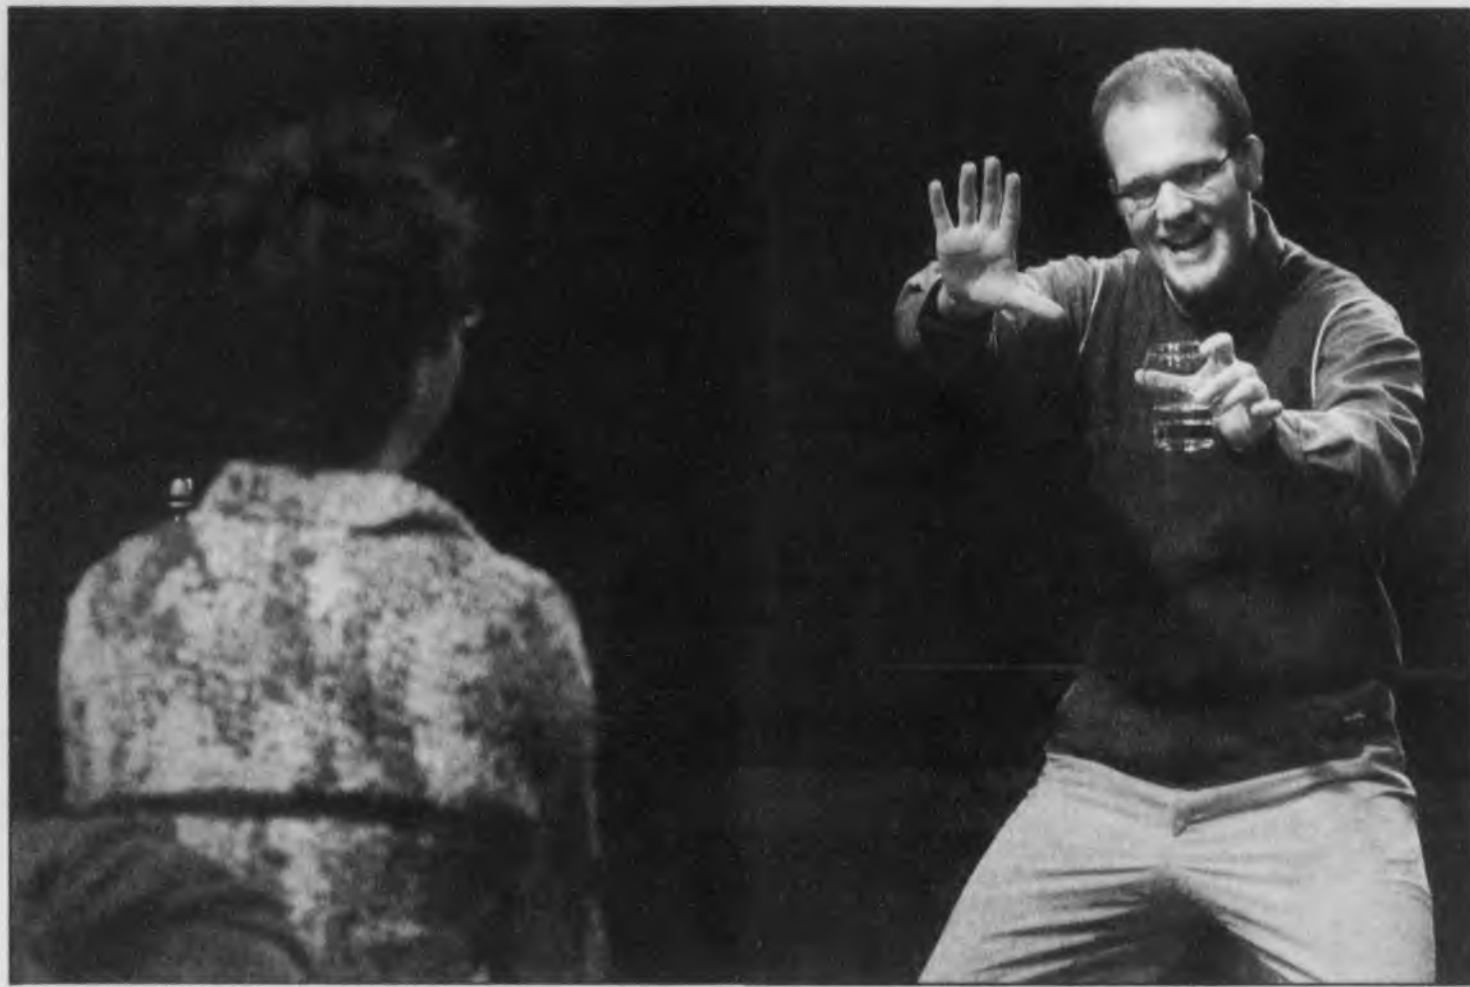

"It's about how the characters respond. We don't ever really see the crime, but we see the results of the crime."

Tran plays a hacker named Astrakhan, who slowly entwines himself in the lives of a couple (Joanne, played by Joni Redmond, senior in theater, and Joseph, played by Joe Clark, senior in theater) and alters facts in their lives.

Tran said he prepared for his role by acquiring basic hacking knowledge.

"Characters like these have a specific knowledge, and hacking is a specific kind of knowledge," Tran said. "I started from the ground up. I had to know what it was he was talking about, so I read up on hackers and some of the things hackers have done."

"Of course I'm not making claims that I can do any of that, it's not the sort of thing you can learn overnight."

Redmond also said the play, though heavy on technology, is more about human relationships.

"It's about relationships, trust and even rape, to an extent," Redmond said. "It's heavy on technology, but it's still about life."

Joanne and Joseph slowly learn someone has been altering records and accessing personal information. By the time they fully understand what is going on, it is too late, and their lives are essentially destroyed.

Redmond said the blending of reality and illusion causes doubt in the characters' and audiences' minds. She said this crime and the altering of facts flushes out the characters' doubts and is part of their downfall.

"It's definitely extenuating circumstances in a way and not believing what you see," Redmond said. "The seed of doubt in the characters is small or nonexistent, but it grows. I think it is doubt that wouldn't be brought out under any other circumstances in their lives, but in this situation it is."

After-show discussion to focus on technology

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Faculty and students from the Department of Computing and Information Sciences will be on hand after the show to discuss the technological aspects of the play.

Virgil Wallentine, head of the CIS department, said it won't be a lecture, but hopefully some questions will be answered. He said he's seen and read the play.

"We'll be talking about whether this is a situation that could, in some ways, be possible," Wallentine said. "And it is a possibility."

He said the main concern they will address is what computer users can do to protect themselves.

"I deal fundamentally with computers, and I can't protect myself completely," Wallentine said.

"And very few can. But one thing people need to realize is that there are thousands of programmers that are working hard to make sure you can stay safe. As a user, you need to make sure these updates are up to date, and that you don't send important personal information in an e-mail."

Wallentine said there are posters in the atrium of Nichols Hall with several Web sites for people who want more information.

Multiple dishes available when hunger, drunkenness mix

What's the first thing you tend to think about after a night spent in Aggieville or at a six-kegger?

For those of us who aren't having a nice "cuddling" session with the person they spent all night feigning interest in and finally managed to coax home, the thought is food.

As you may have guessed, I'm going to give you some more food advice even though you did not ask for it. I'm bossy that way.

Since you'll probably have a hard time standing upright when you prepare these dishes, the recipes are all very easy to prepare and require little thought or use of a stove (a four hundred degree hotplate isn't something to mess with when you can't see straight).

I've conferred with kitchen whiz and food guru Scott Poister to give you a couple of tasty treats that only take a few minutes to prepare and don't cost much.

A common favorite is Ramen noodles. These take only an instant to make anyway, but with a little preparation before you go out, they can take even less time.

The first thing to do is fill a bowl with about a cup of water. If it's just been pulled from the sink, go ahead and wash it off.

Next, put in the noodles and let them soak while you're out. When you get home you've got a nice bowl of softened noodles already made and all you have to do is put them in the microwave. You can do the same with pasta.

All that's left is to season them. You can use the seasoning packet or your own spices (you can save the spice packet and put it on meat or other dishes, and it actually tastes pretty darn good).

Not in the mood for wheat noodles? How about a tortilla dog? The name pretty much tells you all you need to know.

Assuming you have hot dogs and tortillas lying around, take a hot dog out of the fridge, place it in the center of the tortilla, top it with sliced or shredded cheese, and into the microwave it goes.

You can put chili (canned usually) or ketchup or mustard or whatever you like on top of grounded beef hooves and guts.

This next one is only for the designated drivers to prepare, because it involves use of the stove. Go ahead and give yourselves a hand, D.D.'s. You've saved your friends from gory mutilation, and now you're saving them from starvation.

Before you go out, thaw some chicken breasts and put them in the fridge. Put them in a pan with just a little bit of water, and put the Ramen noodle spice packet on top of the

Marlon Brando's ashes scattered

The ashes of legendary actor Marlon Brando were spread in Tahiti and Death Valley, according to a newspaper report.

A memorial service for Brando, who died of lung failure at age 80 on July 1, was held at the home of Hollywood producer Mike Medavoy and was attended by Warren Beatty, Jack Nicholson and Sean Penn, the Los Angeles Times reported in Wednesday editions.

In his last months, Brando had dropped 85 pounds from his once-large frame and needed a portable oxygen tank to aid his breathing, family members and friends said.

Death Valley was a place the actor cherished, his son Miko Brando told the newspaper. The ashes of Brando's late friend Wally Cox, who died in 1973, also were poured onto the desert as part of the same ceremony.

How Cox's ashes were in the possession of Brando's family is unknown.

Stevens kin says he has no terrorist ties

Singer Cat Stevens, taken off a London-to-Washington flight because his name showed up on a government "no-fly" list, has no ties to suspected terrorists, his brother said Wednesday.

Stevens, who converted to Islam and changed his name to Yusuf Islam more than a quarter-century ago, recently made the watch list after U.S. authorities received information from multiple sources indicating he may have associations with potential terrorists, a government official said.

United Airlines Flight 919 was diverted to Bangor, Maine, on Tuesday afternoon after U.S. officials who checked the passenger list learned that the singer was aboard. Federal agents met the plane and interviewed Islam.

Airlines have access to watch lists and are supposed to screen passengers to make sure those deemed a direct threat, not board planes. It was unclear why United Airlines personnel allowed Islam to get on the flight in London.

Homeland Security Department spokesman Dennis Murphy said Islam was "denied admission to the United States on national security grounds" and was expected to be sent back to London on Wednesday.

Political books leave readers with mixed reactions

Professor cautions student voters about biases

By Stephanie Swoboda
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can walk into just about any local store and find the same books found on the top of The New York Times' best seller list. But during election season, not all students are inclined to buy into such books' politics.

Take Jesse Manning, senior in political science and history, for instance.

"It's easy to get drawn into the mudslinging that goes on between the two major parties, especially during an election year," Manning said. "That's why I've steered clear of the recent deluge of books hitting the shelves."

Two politically charged, hardcover, non-fiction novels, "Unfit for Command," by John E. O'Neill and Jerome R. Corsi, and "American Soldier," by Gen. Tommy Franks with Malcolm McConnell, are examples of books that have been published right around election time.

In "Unfit for Command," men who served with Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry during Vietnam are interviewed. According to an Amazon.com book review, "the book poses the following question: 'Why do an overwhelming majority of those who commanded or served with John Kerry oppose him?'"

"American Soldier" is not directed at President Bush, but rather is a memoir of General Tommy Franks' life.

According to Amazon.com, Franks mentions many of Bush's policies and even shows admiration for the president.

"It's easy to get drawn into the mudslinging that goes on between the two major parties, especially during an election year. That's why I've steered clear of the recent deluge of books hitting the shelves."

Jesse Manning
SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE AND HISTORY

"When President Bush focused world attention on the threat of Iraq, Franks seized the moment to implement a bold new vision of joint warfare in planning Operation Iraqi Freedom," the site reads.

Many other political novels have been popularized this election year.

Joe Aistrup, associate professor of political science, said that while he believes the books are selling, they are selling to people who can't get enough of politics.

"Sales may be due to the slew of political junkies," Aistrup said. "I don't think it's the average Joe buying these books."

Kendra Meissner, junior in secondary education and Varney's employee, said the books have been selling well.

"We've had to re-order the Kitty Kelly book and 'Unfit to Serve,' so they have been selling," Meissner said. The book Meissner referred to is "The Family" by Kitty Kelley, which is also titled "The Real Story of the Bush Dynasty."

These books might not have an effect on voters such as Manning who concentrate on the issues more than the politicians themselves.

"I'm voting based on how I feel on issues, not partisan bickering," Manning said.

Aistrup said he also believes that when it comes to the books, students should use their discretion.

"Usually they are written by people who have an axe to grind," Aistrup said. "They have interpreted the world from their vantage point, and so it may or may not be the same way you view the world. I'm not inclined to believe them, so be cynical about them."

Manning does not plan to pick up a copy of either of the best sellers, but says that when he does read something like that, he likes to read from more than one source.

"I balance them out with opposing views. When you do that, it's easy to see that everyone can be using the same facts but spinning them in a different way," Manning said.

Aistrup said he has not seen novel popularity like this since the Nixon administration, and even then it was after the fact, not before.

"We have a different type of politics today. These books and movies are trying to effect election outcomes directly," Aistrup said.

Sharon: 21 Gaza Strip settlements will be evacuated next year

By Peter Enav
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — A Palestinian teenager blew herself up at a busy Jerusalem bus station Wednesday, killing two Israeli policemen who stopped her for a security check and wounding 16 bystanders in an attack that evaded Israel's clampdown on the West Bank for the Jewish holidays.

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon, meanwhile, dropped a plan to evacuate 21 Jewish settlements in the Gaza Strip simultaneously at the beginning of next year, reverting to an earlier formula — a staged pullout in the summer of 2005.

That prompted Secretary of State Colin Powell to say Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia — and not Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat — should be empowered to take control of Gaza. Arafat "is not able to act in this manner," Powell said Wednesday. Israel and the United States are boycotting Arafat, the head of the Palestinian Authority.

Sharon also hinted Israel might one day assassinate Arafat, as it did with two leaders of the Islamic militant group Hamas responsible for scores of suicide bombings.

The Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, a violent group with ties to Arafat's Fatah movement, claimed responsibility for Wednesday's bombing, but it was unclear what would trigger an Israeli move to assassinate Arafat. Israel has not carried out earlier threats despite attacks with dozens of casualties.

The blast at a busy intersection in the French Hill neighborhood of northern Jerusalem destroyed a nearby police post, leaving shards of glass in the road as the smell of burning rubber wafted in the air.

The Al Aqsa brigades identified the bomber as Zainab Abu Salem, 19, from the Askar refugee camp near the West Bank city of Nablus.

A group member in Nablus told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity that Zainab volunteered for a suicide attack, saying she wanted to avenge Palestinian militants killed recently by Israeli troops in Nablus. "She said that if we refused, she would attack an army post with a knife," the Al Aqsa member said. "So we organized quickly. We set up the attack within 17 hours and we chose this site in Jerusalem because we know it."

Her father, Ali Abu Salem, 48, collapsed and his wife, Sahar, wailed at the news of their daughter's attack.

"Why? Why is this happening to us?" Sahar asked.

Police said two border guards at the bus stop spotted the young woman carrying a bag and asked her to open it. She refused, then detonated as much as 11 pounds of explosives inside.

"I just heard this loud explosion and people started yelling, 'Terrorist! Terrorist!'" said Freda Amsalem from the nearby West Bank settlement of Maaleh Adumim. "Why do they do this to us? Why do they do this to innocent people? They're destroying families. Enough!"

Amsalem was not injured.

The bombing came two days before the holiest day on the Jewish calendar — the fast of Yom Kippur — and at a time of heightened police presence nationwide. Israel clamped down on the West Bank last week at the start of the Jewish New Year's holiday, banning Palestinians from entering the country.

Still, Palestinians determined to reach Israel for work or other reasons usually sneak past army roadblocks.

It was the first suicide bombing in Jerusalem since Feb. 22, when eight passengers were killed in a bus attack. Roadblocks surround the city, and armed security guards check customers at malls and restaurants.

Three weeks ago, two Hamas bombers blew themselves up in southern Beersheba, killing 16 Israelis. The bombings ended months of relative calm.

"It was a grave attack, something which obliges us to continue fighting terrorism as we have in the past," Sharon told Israel TV after Wednesday's attack.

Earlier, Sharon hinted Israel might kill Arafat, as it did with Hamas founder Sheik Ahmed Yassin and his successor, Abdel Aziz Rantisi.

"We acted against Hamas people, and since then more people have been added to this list. When the time is right, we will act the same way with Arafat," he told Israel Radio before the bombing.

Sharon charges that Arafat has encouraged Palestinian violence against Israel during their ongoing four-year conflict. Arafat blames Israel.

"There is a constant effort by Palestinian organizations to launch suicide attacks against Israel," said Sharon adviser Dore Gold, adding that Israeli measures such as the West Bank separation barrier have "prevented a much worse disaster from occurring."

Palestinians say the barrier, roadblocks and Israeli military operations have provoked violence and led embittered Palestinians to become bombers.

Palestinian Cabinet minister Saeb Erekat condemned Wednesday's attack, saying Palestinians oppose all violence targeting civilians.

Palestinian militants have staged dozens of suicide bombings inside Israel during the past four years, killing more than 400 people. Women have carried out at least eight of those attacks.

The Al Aqsa group, Hamas and Islamic Jihad dispatch women because they raise less suspicion among Israeli soldiers.

Sharon was asked about the Gaza pullout plan in an interview broadcast Wednesday evening on Channel 10 TV.

He said evacuation of the 21 settlements in Gaza and four in the West Bank would start next summer and take about 12 weeks to complete. That fits into his original "unilateral disengagement" plan, which includes a three-stage withdrawal.

In August, Sharon said he favored an accelerated schedule, emptying all the settlements simultaneously early next year.

Sharon lost his parliamentary majority over the pullout plan, and opposition within his own party has intensified. Polls show a majority of Israelis favor the plan.

Senior setter Gabby Guerre and freshman libero Angie Lastra celebrate after the final point is scored during the third game of the match.

VOLLEYBALL | Cats hope to extend winning ways to Mizzou match

"It helps when you're a little rested, and I think what we were the most pleased about is that we had a game plan, and we followed it very very well. Our team was in tune to a plan and executed it wonderfully."

Hamlin said the Wildcats were motivated to play well after their loss last week at Colorado.

"We were still really mad that we lost to Colorado as bad as we did, so we came out and were like, 'it's not happening again, we're going to get them,'" she said. "We just came out on fire ready to go."

That fire was enough for K-State to get up on the Aggies from the start. A 9-0 run midway through the first game put the Wildcats ahead 19-7, and Texas A&M never got back into the match the rest of the night. Fritz said the strong start played a major part in getting the win.

"(Starting well is) very important and something we are still learning to do," she said. "I was very pleased that we were able to get out and for the most part sustain a good competitive intensity early."

"It helps when you're a little rested, and I think what we were the most pleased about is that we had a game plan, and we followed it very very well."

K-State continues Big 12 play this Saturday at Missouri. The Cats will take the momentum of Wednesday night's win with them, as Fritz said the Texas A&M match was as good as they have played this season.

"I think it would be one of (our best matches)," she said. "We played very well in Minnesota against Florida and Minnesota and just didn't get the win. It's certainly our best three-game match that we've had all year."

clinging to each other, but instead, they're torn apart."

Kate Anderson, director of the play, said she's always admired Kopit as a writer, but found this play something she hasn't done before.

"I think it's interesting," Anderson said. "It seems that whenever you open a paper, you read something about identity theft."

"I think it's interesting to people, too, because when I go home, I get pop ups, and it's hard to tell what's real and what's not."

Anderson said that even though no blood is spilled, it's a very violent play, with some very strong language.

She said people from the Department of Computing and Information Sciences will be talking after the play.

"It's a scary play," Anderson said. "I talked to the director of CIS (Virgil Wallentine), and he said that computers are his business, and he can't even completely protect himself."

COLUMN | Older walk-on at South Carolina missed his chance

If it's a workout he's looking for, he should join a gym. If he wants to watch football up close, I suggest a big screen TV.

South Carolina won't benefit from having a middle-aged man take up a roster spot.

I know experience is something every coach wants on his team, but I don't see the Gamecocks benefiting from the football experiences Frisby had during Army pick-up games.

This all seems like a fantasy Frisby dreamt up. Join a college football team, hang out with the guys, and try to feel young again. It has to be some sort of extravagant mid-life crisis.

I, for one, hope Frisby never sees a down of playing time. He doesn't belong in a collegiate uniform. It's not his time nor his place, and to let him play could potentially be disastrous for college football.

So to Tim "Pops" Frisby — may the bench you warm all season be filled with splinters.

chicken.

Cook at medium heat and be sure to put a lid on the pan. This will steam the chicken and the spices will soak into it. It doesn't take long, and you can serve it with whatever you like.

Frozen vegetables are good, and you can put them in the microwave while the chicken is cooking. Choose veggies wisely, however. If you confront the drunken, hungry mob with a plate full of cooked carrots, the odds are the carrots will end up all over you instead of in their stomachs.

These are only a few tips out of my repertoire of many, and I'll be back with more over the weeks. If you have any ideas or special tips of your own and would like to contribute, you can e-mail me.

The deli has three owners — Randy Buller, Julie Haynes and Rich Markle.

Markle said aside from the clock that reads 15 minutes fast or the old A&W statue above the entrance, Rock-A-Belly's uniqueness comes from the diversity of customers.

"We don't try to cater to a specific clientele," he said. "We try to provide an atmosphere that appeals to most people. At the same time, it's fun and provides a good product."

"You get people from all walks of life."

FAHRENHEIT 9/11 | Critics skeptical of film's factual validity

College students usually have some of the lowest voter turnouts in the U.S.

"My sense is that many young voters, especially college students, are already very interested in the election and plan to vote," John Filter, associate professor of political science, said. "From reports that I have read, interest in the election among 18-21-year-olds is higher than any election since 1972."

Showing the movie on campus may spark extra interest in the election and get students debating the issues.

"I think that it is great that the movie is being shown on campus," Filter said. "A university is supposed to be a place where there is robust debate and discussion of all topics and issues."

"Even if the movie causes a few more students to vote for Kerry, it won't make a big difference in the presidential election. Kansas is not exactly a battleground state."

The big controversy since the release of the movie is whether or not the movie is factual.

"Michael Moore does take artistic license in his films and is sometimes sloppy with the facts, but that does not mean that the movie is a bunch of lies," Filter said. "The mother who lost a son in Iraq is not a lie."

"The President's close relationship with the Saudi royal family is not a lie. I recommend that students see the movie and come to their own conclusions about its arguments."

There will be a forum to discuss the movie on Sunday, co-sponsored by UPC Films, UPC Forums and Ordinary Women.

"The forum after the Sunday night showing of 'Fahrenheit 9/11' allows viewers to make comments on the film," Katz said.

Murder investigations continue at home, abroad

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The investigation is continuing at Fort Riley after two soldiers deployed to Iraq were charged with murdering three Iraqis.

Central Command said Wednesday that Sgt. Michael P. Williams of Memphis, Tenn., and Spc. Brent W. May of Salem, Ohio, have been charged with premeditated murder.

Williams also is being charged with obstruction of justice and making a false statement.

The soldiers were serving with the 1st Cavalry Division, but are members of Company C in the 1st Battalion of the 41st Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade of the 1st Armored Division at Fort Riley.

The soldiers were deployed to Iraq in 2003 and then again in June with Task Force 1-41.

The investigation is now in the hands of the Army's Criminal Investigation Division.

Deb Skidmore, Fort Riley media relations officer, said it's important to remember the soldiers have not been proven guilty.

"They haven't been proven guilty," she said. "We don't know what happened over there."

This is the second pair of Ft. Riley soldiers charged with murder in the past two weeks. On Sept. 15, Sgts. Eric J. Colvin and Aaron R. Stanley were charged in the shooting death of Staff Sgt. Matthew H. Werner.

The incident occurred in Clay County, 30 miles north of Fort Riley.

Spc. Christopher D. Hymer was wounded and died Saturday in a Wichita hospital. Colvin and Stanley face first-degree murder charges and remain jailed on $1 million in bonds.

They are scheduled to appear in court Nov. 3.

Skidmore said it's obviously a difficult time for the Fort Riley community.

"We are at a cross section of the community, so there is bound to be some unpleasant things," Skidmore said.

"It happens in other communities also."

Friends join to create lemonade stand, becoming Street corner capitalists

Brinton Walstrom, junior in radio and TV broadcasting, plays guitar in an attempt to attract customers to buy lemonade at the stand on Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street. Walstrom and his friends sell pink and regular lemonade every Friday afternoon for 50 cents a cup.

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The thought of starting a lemonade stand came to Jesse Newton in a dream.

Newton, senior in finance and management, said the dream was about meeting new people, and that dream has come true.

Now, every Friday from noon to 7 p.m., passersby can hardly miss the large lemonade sign at the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street.

"I think it's fun being on the corner and seeing all these familiar faces," Newton said.

Those who stop by can sip on a 50-cent lemonade and munch on complimentary cookies or $1 hot dogs, he said. Games of horseshoes or washers also are welcoming to visitors.

"We just try to bring a smile to people," he said.

Other entertainment features include guitarists, a harmonica player, dance competitions and Brett Robben, sophomore in marketing management, hands a drive-up customer her lemonade.

pogo sticks, Newton said.

Brinton Walstrom, who is friends with the six men who live in the house, comes over and plays the guitar or harmonica.

"It's a good time," he said. "It's a good way to kick it."

Walstrom, junior in radio and television broadcasting, said he just plays because he wants to.

"I don't have a band yet. I'm just messing around," he said.

Allan Sheahan, friend and next-door neighbor, said he is amazed at how many people stop by the booth.

"There's been a ton of people coming and going," he said. "People just like to come by, just talk, and we've never even met them before. They're just cool people."

Newton says the group manages to sell a large amount.

"We go through six or eight five-gallon containers each time," he said.

Each week, the profits made by the stand, which has been in business for about four weeks, go back into the stand, he said.

However, when the stand begins to turn a profit, there are no plans of keeping the extra cash.

"We plan, once we start making at least some kind of profit, we plan on donating the money to a charity," he said. "Right now we would be donating a penny."

Once cool weather begins, the lemonade-stand entrepreneurs aren't going to hide indoors, Newton said. Instead, they prepare to serve hot chocolate, along with marshmallows.

"We just can't wait for the hot chocolate," he said. "We think it's going to a winner."

K-State enrollment increases

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's 20th-day enrollment figures set record highs for the sixth-consecutive year, but K-State-Salina's enrollment showed a decline at the campus there.

Salina's 20th-day enrollment figures dropped 6.5 percent from last year, and are down nearly 17 percent from 2002. But Dean Dennis Kuhlman said the numbers can be deceiving.

"We have more students here than we've ever had before," Kuhlman said.

Enrollment in K-State-Salina's traditional academic programs has been affected by the local school district's policy change and by non-traditional professional training programs, Kuhlman said.

The high school's block schedule changed and discouraged many of those students from attending college classes at the Salina campus, he said.

Together, the two set out to prove their children's existence. The movie, which is rated PG-13, opens today in theaters nationwide.

Allocation bills debated

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three bills drew extra attention from senators' at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

A bill to allocate $1,200 to the Baptist Student Union Christian Challenge passed 54-1, with the lone dissenting vote coming from Arts and Sciences Senator David McCandless.

The bill would help fund four presentations about missionary work by a six-member traveling group scheduled for Sept. 30.

McCandless spoke against the bill and said he thought the bill was an unnecessary allocation of funds, because it was to cover the cost of moving the event from Forum Hall to McCandless Auditorium.

The move was requested due to a greater than anticipated interest in the event and the concern that Forum Hall might not provide enough seating for the increased attendance.

"We have spent down our reserves to a somewhat critical level," McCandless said. "I hate to see us in a situation in April where we're having to turn people away."

Arts and Sciences Senator Vicki Conner spoke in favor of the allocation and said the bill wouldn't have come out of committee if there were not a "compelling reason for the group to request the move."

Senators also considered a bill allocating $500 to the Kansas State Fishing Club.

McCandless said the event, the American Bass Anglers tournament in Athens, Ala., was restricted to anglers between the ages of 16-27. He said the age restriction might be in violation of university policy, which prohibits discrimination based upon age.

Lisa Tirrell, Allocations Chair, said it was the tournament that restricted the age, not the group, so the committee believed the allocation was appropriate.

A bill allocating $500 to the Chinese Students and Scholars Association passed, 52-0-1, on special order because the event is Sept. 28.

Student Senate interns begin term

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate interns were inducted at the Sept. 16 meeting, but the process by which senators narrowed down the 91 applicants to 25 lasts weeks.

"We advertised the positions and then began doing interviews," Senate Operations Chair Sarah Laib said.

Laib said the application consisted of three questions. Of the 91 applicants, 64 were interviewed by the panel.

While all 91 were not interviewed, Laib said no one was cut, but rather the remaining 27 did not sign up for an interview.

Laib said they selected the maximum amount of applicants to be interns allowed by SGA statutes, 25.

"We were looking for someone who has strong leadership," she said. "People who could develop leadership skills."

Boldt said the interns, who are each assigned a senator to be a mentor, work with that senator to learn the ropes.

"About half of the interns from last year stayed on to be senators," Boldt said. "The majority of our interns are freshmen. There are a couple of sophomores and one junior who is a transfer student."

Boldt said interns are required to join a committee, where they serve as a voting member.

"They serve on committees as voting members just like any other senator or at large member," she said.

Despite their ability to vote on committees, Boldt said interns do not have a vote on the senate floor.

William Lopez, freshman in finance, said he's eager to participate. "It's a great way to learn the democratic process at this university," he said.

President meets with Iraqi prime minister

By Jennifer Loven
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Standing beside Iraq's interim leader, President Bush contended Thursday that insurgents could "plot and plan attacks elsewhere, in America and other free nations," if the United States pulled out. He said his top commander there has not asked for more troops but if he did, "I'd listen to him."

After meeting with interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi, Bush said he expects violence in Iraq to escalate as the country moves toward elections scheduled for January. Even so, Allawi said more foreign troops are not needed.

In a clear jab at Democratic opponent John Kerry, Bush said the United States must remain in Iraq to fight insurgents, who he said are part of the global terror threat.

"If we stop fighting the terrorists in Iraq, they would be free to plot and plan attacks elsewhere, in America and other free nations," he said.

TO THE POINT Quality programs should trump numbers game

When looking at the numbers, K-State-Salina is failing. Enrollment figures show a 17-percent drop from 2002 and a 6.5-percent drop since 2003.

But academics isn't just in the numbers.

Salina has created professional programs that start after the 20th day, when figures are counted.

Therefore, many students are not counted in the enrollment report.

The local school district's block scheduling change also prevented high school students from taking courses.

The programs are adapted to fit the schedule of the college's industrial partners, which are essential to the technology and aviation focus.

Salina should be commended for disregarding traditional academic models to create programs that maximize learning.

It's easy to fall into the trap of caring about numbers and appearance.

Administration and professors have recognized the best academic experience often occurs outside the walls of a classroom.

K-State's main campus professors should follow Salina's lead and adapt classes to ensure students are learning not just with worksheets and lectures, but real-world experience.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Not-so-good thing Public should continue living the Martha Stewart way

It finally happened.

After nearly two years and hundreds of Baked Alaskas, Martha Stewart was ordered, by the court, to report to the minimum security prison of her choice by Oct. 8.

What am I saying? Ordered is the wrong word. She "requested" to start serving her time as soon as possible so she can "reclaim (her) good life" and begin living as normal.

But just the same Martha, my idol, is going to her own personal hell of cafeteria food from a can and peeing in front of complete strangers.

And I would like to announce, on that fateful day, I personally will have a vigil at my apartment complete with stations for floral arrangements, card making and cookie baking.

After all, Martha would have wanted it that way.

She wouldn't have wanted us to just give up our dreams as modern homemakers just because she was sent to the big house.

She would want us to bake.

And far be it for me to disappoint such a pillar of society as the CEO of a multi-billion dollar corporation bearing her own name.

Although she might still have a slim chance of her federal appeal coming through and not having to serve at all, she is going to pack up her Burberry travel tote with her 700-thread Egyptian cotton sheets and walk into that minimum security prison with her head held high.

She will not let the man bring her down. Especially since she probably could buy and sell the man about 15 times over.

On Tuesday after it was announced that she was going to begin serving her five-month sentence, stock in her company, Martha Stewart Omnimedia, rose 9 percent.

That's pretty decent considering this whole mess started over stock in the first place.

Do I think she's guilty? Honestly, I don't think it matters, especially since there are more important things happening in the world than insider trading and place settings.

The death toll in Iraq is climbing and in China a man entered a grade school and slashed 25 students with a knife before being stopped.

So does it really matter that a woman worth almost a billion dollars, a woman that created her own empire of spring form cake pans and meringue, a woman who took what she knew of housekeeping and turned it into a worldwide phenomenon... does it really matter that she sold $228,000 worth of biotech stock a few days before the stock itself would plummet?

The media and people across the U.S. decided to make an example out of a successful woman who listened to a little stock advice.

Then they rail-roaded her to the point of public humiliation.

Now there is nothing left but the remnants of a cable show bearing her name, the Martha By Mail catalogue that arrives at my house every few months and an inexpensive yet coordinated home décor line at Kmart.

So for the next couple of weeks leading up to her incarceration I'm going to sport my "Free Martha" shirt, even though she is willing to take on this personal struggle, and rearrange my spices so cinnamon and cumin cannot be mistaken for each other anymore.

After all, Martha would have wanted it that way.

MONDAY'S OPINIONS

JEREMY PARKER
Jeremy Parker discusses the idea of tourism in Kansas.

JONAS HOGG
Jonas Hogg talks about negative attitudes toward gothic culture.

Rowdy, disruptive behavior disturbs everyone

Even though I'm an English major, I and my literary colleagues are forced to take a few science courses, whether we want to or not (I'm in the "or not" category.)

That is why last fall I found myself taking Earth in Action, otherwise known as Geology 100.

I think most of the class was there for the same reason I was, which was perhaps why, one day, another student decided to make things a little more interesting by mooing throughout the lecture. I don't think any of us got very much out of the lecture that day.

Texas Tech University defines "troublesome behavior" as "anything that disturbs (the professor) or (his or her) students during the class period."

As examples, it lists such things as not turning off cell phones, consuming food or beverages in class, being late, talking in class, and much more.

Most of us have committed at least some of these offenses (including me), but we generally don't stop to think about what we're doing. However, professors remember people who don't pay attention or behave rudely in class and might grade accordingly.

For those of us in English, history, and other classes that have "participation points," this is particularly important.

(Helpful hint: Making animal noises throughout the lecture probably won't help you here.)

Even in other classes, professors will be more likely to help to students who at least try to act interested, whether you need them to explain concepts and assignments or maybe even believe you missed a test because your car had a flat tire.

This especially can come in handy if you're on the border between two grades, as "How to Ace Calculus: The Streetwise Guide" points out.

If you've gotten on a professor's bad side, he or she might "subconsciously" be "saying, 'I am going to nail that nasty little kumquat to the wall,'" while leaving you stuck with your 89.999 percent.

Not paying attention doesn't help further our educations, either.

It's difficult to learn algebraic principles while doing crossword puzzles.

One behavioral issue that is especially problematic is what Texas Tech describes as the "I paid for this... mentality."

The International Electronic Journal for Leadership in Learning refers to this as the "student-as-consumer debate," in which the students feel they can "exchange money for knowledge."

In a way, our enrollment here is a "hunting license" in the search for knowledge, just as our parking permits are really only licenses to look for parking spots.

Unlike the parking situation, however, if we try hard enough, we are sure to get an education; a parking spot is much less certain.

The K-State Principles of Community state, "We affirm the inherent dignity and value of every person and strive to maintain an atmosphere of justice based on respect for each other."

We are not showing respect to ourselves, our classmates or our teachers when we are rude or don't pay attention.

Let's leave the cattle calls outside.

How many more hostages have to be taken and beheaded before people realize that Bush isn't going to do a damn thing?

This is awesome, I just saw the Head Start school bus get pulled over.

I think I'm gonna open a pizza place called Pokey's, and I'm going to focus on good friendly service, treating my employees with respect, a product that tastes good and actually listening to the customer's wants and needs.

Hi, I'd just like to remind my old

Hey, we had a forum at Mill Valley High School, too. The bathroom walls.

So, this Saturday there's a giant pillow fight for everyone? Why, that's a great idea.

Did you say you wanted banana bread?

Here's some hints if you want your professor to answer your e-mail: be polite, use proper grammar and spelling, sign your e-mail, above all, don't expect us to repeat a lecture because you were too drunk or too lazy to go to class.

I sure am glad there's gonna be a voter registration table outside such an unbiased piece of work like "Fahrenheit 911." Great job, UPC.

Can for one time can Willie be black? I mean seriously, is it that hard? I mean, is it that big of a deal?

Government must respect international agreements

Editor,

I appreciated the Collegian's coverage of civil-rights attorney Michael Ratner's lecture Tuesday night at Forum Hall.

While the article accurately reflected what Ratner said, he also made some other points worth mentioning.

For nearly 100 years, the Geneva and Hague Conventions have provided a framework that protects combatants. However, Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and the current administration have decided to ignore the conventions when handling prisoners and suspected terrorists held in Guantanamo Bay.

Detainees, such as those captured from Afghanistan, are not considered "POWs," but instead are labeled "enemy combatants" — an ambiguous phrase the government has coined which enables interrogators to do whatever they please.

Guantanamo essentially is a law-free zone, Ratner said, which is why the Bush administration has ordered suspected terrorists taken there.

Since the base is in Cuba, there is no jurisdiction, and detainees have no Constitutional rights. Many people are being detained indefinitely, with no charges brought against them and no access to court or an attorney.

Furthermore, Rumsfeld has authorized many "interrogation techniques" for use at Guantanamo that amount to violations of the Geneva Conventions.

When some of these techniques made their way to Iraq, the result was the prisoner abuse and torture at Abu Ghraib — which struck a tremendous blow to United States credibility and integrity. If we treat people like this, what can American POWs expect?

Ratner's point — and I agree with him — is that it is in the best interests of the United States to uphold international conventions.

We can only hope the current White House administration figures that out, too.

PERSPECTIVES

Risqué voting site insulting to students

THE DAILY FREE PRESS
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

BOSTON — Just when you think politics cannot get any more superficial, a group of recent Ivy League college graduates launched VoterGasm.org, a voting campaign that asks young people to pledge that they will have sex with voters and withhold sex with non-voters.

Organizing the pledges around catchy titles such as "citizen," "patriot" and "American hero," the project has attracted 6,000 voters to their cause. While the project is clearly grabbing lots of attention, it is doing so at a cost to today's young people. Such gimmicks turn off politicians from considering issues facing America's young adults.

To connect sex and voting is ludicrous. Voting for the president of the United States is a civic duty — linking it with sex trivializes the act of voting.

The project is a novel idea, but it sends the wrong message to the country about young people. The organizers of this project seem to think they must use the incentive of sex to convince college-aged people to vote. This is not fair to today's young people. With the war in Iraq at a standstill, a fluctuating job market and the new era of terrorism, young people have a big stake in the elections' outcome. They do not need such a gimmick to vote.

In addition, the project gives others, including politicians who make the decisions affecting young people's lives, the wrong impression. Young people are already not taken seriously as is. Politicians will not take this often ignored demographic seriously if it cannot take voting seriously.

If the graduates who organized this project are serious about getting young people to vote, they are better off going the traditional route of holding voter registration drives or sponsoring debates and forums.

This gimmick has managed to lower the dignity of this election, one of the most politically charged and significant in years, more than it has before. If nothing else, it has helped to further wound the perception of young people's role in the election process.

College of Education suppresses rights by maintaining student file

Editor,

I feel it is important to bring to light the First Amendment, which K-State only supports when it does not tarnish its so-called good name.

I am a recent graduate, but while at K-State, I wrote several opinion columns for the Collegian. These columns dealt with often-discussed topics like sex, fraternity stereotypes, alcohol and problems on campus.

A K-State official brought to my attention that some faculty members in the College of Education were watching me closely and updating my file accordingly.

I eventually pulled my file at the college and found some of my columns from the Collegian, as well as letters to the editor from students opposed to my views.

Annotations and notes also made on my columns, with certain selections highlighted that apparently showed my "lack of professionalism." I was furious.

Before graduation, College of Education officials required an adviser sit me down and let me know what it means to be professional entering the field of education. I also was notified that some had considered removing me from the professional program in the college.

I kept quiet during my time at K-State so I could get my degree. Looking back, I am disgraced at how the college tried to use my opinions and, even more inappropriately, the opinions of others on campus, to judge my qualifications as an effective teacher.

Students should know what kind of campus leaders we have at this university. Students' rights have been suppressed. This publication has undergone forms of censorship. And faculty members in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications school have been ridiculed for not controlling expression.

This is not the way to conduct business at a public university. Administrators at the college and K-State should be ashamed of themselves.

Wildcats travel to Columbia for Mizzou match

Volleyball team hopes to notch another conference victory versus unranked Tigers

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State travels to Missouri on Saturday for a 7 p.m. tilt with the Tigers. It will be the third Big 12 Conference match for both teams.

The No. 19 Wildcats head to Columbia, Mo., fresh off a sweep of No. 11 Texas A&M on Wednesday. The win pushed K-State to 7-4 overall and 1-1 in the Big 12. The Tigers head into the match at 6-3 and also 1-1 in conference play.

Missouri features preseason All-Big 12 setter Lindsey Hunter, who is averaging 14 assists per game, and outside hitter Shen Danru, who has 31 blocks this season along with 4.39 kills per game.

The Tigers return five starters from last year's team that finished sixth in the conference.

"I know that they're a very good team," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "They've got everybody back from last year, and they've got one of the best setters in the conference in Lindsey Hunter, who I think is tremendously talented."

Fritz said playing at Missouri will give K-State an opportunity to improve the team's play on the road.

CFB | 'Pops' can play; NCAA grants USC receiver eligibility

"Pops" has gotten the green light from the NCAA to play football at South Carolina.

Tim Frisby, the Gamecocks' 39-year-old walk-on receiver, was granted his eligibility by the NCAA membership services staff, the school said Thursday.

Frisby is expected to be in uniform when the Gamecocks play Troy Saturday night at Williams-Brice Stadium.

Frisby, nicknamed "Pops" by his teammates, recently retired after 20 years in the U.S. Army, where he was Ranger-qualified with the 82nd Airborne. He served in Desert Storm and the Kosovo conflict.

His playing status was on hold because of eligibility concerns with the NCAA Clearinghouse, which certifies the eligibility of college football players and was not in existence when Frisby graduated from an Allentown, Pa., high school in 1983.

General | School refuses to play team with female player

A private Catholic high school will record a forfeit after refusing to play football against a public school with a female player on its roster.

But because St. Mary's Academy in northeast Kansas is not a member of the state high school activities association, it cannot be punished more severely than by awarding a 2-0 forfeit to White City High School.

The two teams were scheduled to play an eight-man game Friday night at the St. Mary's campus, in the town of St. Marys. But White City principal Sid Tanner said Thursday that when coach Bobby Rehse called St. Mary's to make sure freshman guard Kara Dowell would have her own dressing room, officials at the private school said St. Mary's would not play against a girl.

Tanner said Kara, who plays mostly on the junior varsity, offered to sit the game out. Instead, White City officials decided not to go at all.

MLB | No recommendation for potential Expos' move

Major league baseball's executive council met for three hours Thursday but made no formal recommendation on whether the Montreal Expos should move to Washington next season.

Baltimore Orioles owner Peter Angelos, a member of the eight-owner council, appears to be the chief obstacle to a move. Angelos has said having a team about 40 miles from Camden Yards would take away fans and revenue from his franchise.

Downtown Washington appears to be the favorite to land the Expos, who were bought by the other 29 teams before the 2002 season.

Women's golf to tee off today

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team tees off at 8 a.m. today in the first round of the three-day Jeannine McHaney Invitational in Lubbock, Texas.

The Invitational is the first collegiate event to be played at the Jerry S. Rawls Red Raider Golf Course — Texas Tech University's new golf facility.

This is the first time the Cats have been invited to Tech's Invitational.

"I hear it's a great course with big greens, wide fairways and a lot of bunkers," Coach Kristi Knight said. "It seems very similar to Colbert Hills."

The fact the Rawls Course is the site of the NCAA Central Regionals in May, is one of the main draws of the tournament.

Knight said.

"Playing in the Invitational is a chance for all the teams and players invited to get a good feel and sense for the course for Central Regionals," Knight said.

All seven of Knight's players qualified for the Invitational, which is rare, Knight said.

While freshmen Michelle Regan and Hailey Mireles are playing in the individual bracket, seniors Sarah Heffel and Stephanie Limoges, sophomores Katy Heffel and Helene Robert and freshman Kali Quick are playing in the team bracket, as well.

With her entire team present, Knight said she is confident in her players' ability to compete.

"I am very pleased with how the girls have been playing.

There are a lot of positives and a lot of confidence going with us into this tournament — it should be a good one," Knight said.

Robert, who tied for fifth place with a career-best 217 at the Ptarmigan/Ram Fall Classic, said she is carrying her momentum into the Invitational.

"I feel very good about my game right now, especially my short putts," Roberts said. "As a team, we all just want to go out there, play well and see what the other Big 12 teams look like."

Other Big 12 teams participating in the McHaney Invitational include Missouri, Kansas, Iowa State, Oklahoma and Baylor.

The Invitational, a 54-hole tournament over three days, wraps up Sunday.

Although I think you're probably a big fan — and can't help but think you were somewhere close by last Dec. 6 in Kansas City — I figure your time probably is better spent on more pressing matters.

But in this case, I think I have no choice but to come to a higher power. You see, God, one of my favorite baseball teams, the Chicago Cubs, is in a very tight race to make this year's National League Playoffs. As of Wednesday night, they're in a deadlock with the San Francisco Giants for the one Wildcard berth.

Players need to be careful when juggling affections

"I'm a playa, I'm a playa. Oh I'm a playa. I'm a playa, I'm a playa. Oh Oh Oh I'm a playa."

Whenever I hear this Tech N9ne song, I'm reminded of my friend Julia. While living together sophomore year, I heard this song a lot. It was played any-time one of Julia's many guys called her on the phone or she was going to hang with one of her many guys.

Yes, Julia was a player (although with her blue eyes, long blond hair and size-two figure, I don't know why). She regularly had three guys clamoring for her attention at any given time. Julia was talented in the art of juggling.

Juggling is a skill that requires careful planning, timing and coordination. You can't just go blindly into juggling and expect things to work out perfectly.

My experience with juggling is a brief three-week period when I was seeing two guys at the same time. Since this doesn't give me expert status, I asked people who know about juggling what advice they had to give new jugglers.

Here's a few of their juggling do's and don'ts.

— Don't mention the others. My friend Laura, an expert juggler, said it's a bad idea to mention any of your other prospects with the one you are with. Don't lie and say they're the only one you're seeing, and if they ask about it, be honest. But don't volunteer any information. The best policy for juggling seems to be "don't ask, don't tell."

— Do check your guilt at the door. Don't feel bad you're talking to Person A, who has no idea you're talking to Person B and vice versa. If you're in the beginning stages of a relationship, such as just talking or hanging out, then little commitment to those you're juggling is required. If you do feel guilty for having more than one person, maybe juggling isn't for you. If guilt is interrupting the pleasure of juggling, it's time to stop.

— Don't let them meet. Julia recommends spreading out your talking/hanging out time with your jugglees to keep them separated. Avoid having them at the same place at the same time at all costs. This can be a very bad situation and possibly the end of your juggling.

You don't want to end up like my friend Marcie, who, after a night in Aggieville, ended up standing between the two guys she was juggling, both of them expecting to take her home. Marcie panicked and I ended up having to take one for the team (which essentially ended Marcie's juggling dilemma).

If at all possible, try to have the two (or three) in separate towns. It was a lot easier for me to have one guy in Manhattan and the other back at home, safely an hour away. No chance they would show up anywhere together.

— Do tread lightly. It's one thing to be talking to more than one person, it's another to be dating or sleeping with two or three. Julia says juggling should only be done when you're single and just talking to people. Trying to get serious with more than one person is a bad idea and will most likely end up with someone getting hurt, possibly you.

Even though it can be stressful keeping everyone organized, juggling is a fun way to spice up your dating life. You get out more and experience more things.

And having more than one person vying for your attention doesn't hurt the ego either. Just remember to follow the rules and have fun.

Turning Tree Festival features bands jamming for charity

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some local bands will be jamming in City Park tomorrow.

The Turning Tree Festival will feature several jam bands playing to benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Grant Haun, keyboardist for Grazgrove, said all of the bands have close ties to one another and have been playing together at different gigs and events for the past four years.

Haun, who is putting together the event, named the festival Turning Tree because he said he wanted it to represent the beginning of the fall season. It is the first year for the festival.

"The festival benefits the Flint Hills Breadbasket by collecting canned food from people that come," Haun said. "I'd like to make it into an annual event."

Haun said Grazgrove has been playing for four years, even though he just joined the band last January.

"We play a style of music called jam.

It has influences of funk, rock, reggae and pretty much a little bit of everything else," Haun said. "It is also based off improv, so every song might sound a little different each time played."

Bands Mother Kali and Buck's Barefoot Rebellion both feature percussionist Clint Hutchens.

"Both bands actually have the same drum setup, but with different lead singers," Hutchens said. "Mother Kali has an Eastern Indian influence with a Russian, tribal beat and a folk bass."

"Buck's Barefoot Rebellion is more of a singer-songwriter base sound with influences from Jack Johnson and Paul Simon. It has a more acoustical sound than Mother Kali, and also contains a flute player," Hutchens said.

Hutchens said he hopes that the turnout will be good with the upcoming football bye week.

"It should be a really good time to check out some local music that all bands have roots from Manhattan."

For Eclectic Carnival, band member Tom O'Toole said that Turning Tree is a great way to encourage people of Manhattan to come out and support the local music.

O'Toole, who plays multiple instruments such as the mandolin, keyboard, and beat box, said he relies on several pedals and switches to record and loop his music while going from instrument to instrument.

"I play one instrument at a time, but the looping allows me to layer the music to produce one sound at the end," O'Toole said.

"I believe playing at the festival is just a great way to connect to the community, and by helping out another cause."

BirdHouse season opens tonight with acclaimed singer-songwriter

Music lovers will have the chance to satisfy their appetite for diverse music styles when singer-songwriter Vance Gilbert begins the Manhattan Arts Center's BirdHouse series at 8 tonight at the center.

Gilbert, who has been dubbed "Robin Williams with a guitar," burst onto the music scene in the early 1990s, when he played several folk clubs in Boston.

Later, the Philadelphia-born artist toured with singer-songwriter Shawn Colvin. He has released five albums — the most recent, "one thru fourteen," in 2002.

Gilbert is known for his comedic interaction with audience members. BirdHouse co-founder David Kamerer said,

"He has the ability to improvise on-stage, and it's breathtaking," Kamerer said. "He plays with the audience. It's going to be a high-energy, interactive show."

Brady Miller, program and marketing director for the arts center, said that in addition to his onstage antics, Gilbert brings a rare musical style to his performances.

"He plays a diverse set of music," Miller said. "Some is full-tilt pop, some is country soul, some is very much blues."

Kamerer said he agreed that Gilbert's style is difficult to define.

"He has sort of a jazz sound, but it's more complex than most artists we bring in," he said. "He has a very silky voice. He's just engaging and entertaining."

Kamerer said Gilbert returns to Manhattan after playing a benefit concert for Habitat for Humanity five years ago, and he thinks Gilbert's performance will be the perfect way to begin the season.

"We haven't had the chance to listen things up yet, so we're delighted he's coming back to see us," Kamerer said.

BirdHouse co-founder Steve Martini said tonight's audience will be in for a treat.

"He will put on a great show," Martini said. "He will entertain the crowd and tell stories, he'll sing, he'll play, he'll be up and moving around. Most entertainers are unique in their own way, but he's a showman."

Volleyball team hopes to notch another conference victory versus unranked Tigers

K-State travels to Missouri on Saturday for a 7 p.m. tilt with the Tigers. It will be the third Big 12 Conference match for both teams.

The No. 19 Wildcats head to Columbia, Mo., fresh off a sweep of No. 11 Texas A&M on Wednesday. The win pushed K-State to 7-4 overall and 1-1 in the Big 12. The Tigers head into the match at 6-3 and also 1-1 in conference play.

Missouri features preseason All-Big 12 setter Lindsey Hunter, who is averaging 14 assists per game, and outside hitter Shen Danru, who has 31 blocks this season along with 4.39 kills per game.

The Tigers return five starters from last year's team that finished sixth in the conference.

My experience with juggling is a brief three-week period when I was seeing two guys at the same time. Since this doesn't give me expert status, I asked people who know about juggling what advice they had to give new jugglers.

Here's a few of their juggling do's and don'ts.

— Don't mention the others. My friend Laura, an expert juggler, said it's a bad idea to mention any of your other prospects with the one you are with. Don't lie and say they're the only one you're seeing, and if they ask about it, be honest. But don't volunteer any information. The best policy for juggling seems to be "don't ask, don't tell."

— Do check your guilt at the door. Don't feel bad you're talking to Person A, who has no idea you're talking to Person B and vice versa. If you're in the beginning stages of a relationship, such as just talking or hanging out, then little commitment to those you're juggling is required.

If you do feel guilty for having more than one person, maybe juggling isn't for you. If guilt is interrupting the pleasure of juggling, it's time to stop.

— Don't let them meet. Julia recommends spreading out your talking/hanging out time with your juggles to keep them separate and possibly the end of your juggling.

You don't want to end up like my friend Marcie, who, after a night in Aggieville, ended up standing between the two guys she was juggling, both of them expecting to take her home. Marcie panicked and I ended up having to take one for the team (which essentially ended Marcie's juggling dilemma).

If at all possible, try to have the two (or three) in separate towns. It was a lot easier for me to have one guy in Manhattan and the other back at home, safely an hour away. No chance they would show up anywhere together.

— Do tread lightly. It's one thing to be talking to more than one person, it's another to be dating or sleeping with two or three. Julia says juggling should only be done when you're single and just talking to people. Trying to get serious with more than one person is a bad idea and will most likely end up with someone getting hurt, possibly you.

Even though it can be stressful keeping everyone organized, juggling is a fun way to spice up your dating life. You get out more and experience more things.

And having more than one person vying for your attention doesn't hurt the ego either. Just remember to follow the rules and have fun.

Turning Tree Festival features bands jamming for charity

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some local bands will be jamming in City Park tomorrow.

The Turning Tree Festival will feature several jam bands playing to benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Grant Haun, keyboardist for Grazgrove, said all of the bands have close ties to one another and have been playing together at different gigs and events for the past four years.

Haun, who is putting together the event, named the festival Turning Tree because he said he wanted it to represent the beginning of the fall season. It is the first year for the festival.

"The festival benefits the Flint Hills Breadbasket by collecting canned food from people that come," Haun said. "I'd like to make it into an annual event."

Haun said Grazgrove has been playing for four years, even though he just joined the band last January.

"We play a style of music called jam.

1st Turning Tree Festival

Who's playing: Eclectic Carnival, Buck's Barefoot Rebellion, Mother Kali and Grazgrove

When: 3-11 p.m. Saturday

Where: Main stage in City Park

Bring canned food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket

It has influences of funk, rock, reggae and pretty much a little bit of everything else," Haun said. "It is also based off improv, so every song might sound a little different each time played."

Bands Mother Kali and Buck's Barefoot Rebellion both feature percussionist Clint Hutchens.

"Both bands actually have the same drum setup, but with different lead singers," Hutchens said. "Mother Kali has an Eastern Indian influence with a Russian, tribal beat and a folk bass."

"Buck's Barefoot Rebellion is more of a singer-songwriter base sound with influences from Jack Johnson and Paul Simon. It has a more acoustical sound than Mother Kali, and also contains a flute player," Hutchens said.

Hutchens said he hopes that the turnout will be good with the upcoming football bye week.

"It should be a really good time to check out some local music that all bands have roots from Manhattan."

For Eclectic Carnival, band member Tom O'Toole said that Turning Tree is a great way to encourage people of Manhattan to come out and support the local music.

O'Toole, who plays multiple instruments such as the mandolin, keyboard, and beat box, said he relies on several pedals and switches to record and loop his music while going from instrument to instrument.

"I play one instrument at a time, but the looping allows me to layer the music to produce one sound at the end," O'Toole said.

"I believe playing at the festival is just a great way to connect to the community, and by helping out another cause."

BirdHouse season opens tonight with acclaimed singer-songwriter

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Music lovers will have the chance to satisfy their appetite for diverse music styles when singer-songwriter Vance Gilbert begins the Manhattan Arts Center's BirdHouse series at 8 tonight at the center.

Gilbert, who has been dubbed "Robin Williams with a guitar," burst onto the music scene in the early 1990s, when he played several folk clubs in Boston.

Later, the Philadelphia-born artist toured with singer-songwriter Shawn Colvin. He has released five albums — the most recent, "one thru fourteen," in 2002.

If you go BirdHouse concert by Vance Gilbert

When: 8 tonight

Where: Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave.

How much: $15 for adults, $12 for students. Tickets are available at the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville, Clafin Books and Copies or at the arts center.

For more information: call the arts center, 537-4420.

Gilbert is known for his comedic interaction with audience members, BirdHouse co-founder David Kamerer said.

"He has the ability to improvise on-stage, and it's breathtaking," Kamerer said. "He plays with the audience. It's going to be a high-energy, interactive show."

Brady Miller, program and marketing director for the arts center, said that in addition to his onstage antics, Gilbert brings a rare musical style to his performances.

"He plays a diverse set of music," Miller said. "Some is full-tilt pop, some is country soul, some is very much blues."

Kamerer said he agreed that Gilbert's style is difficult to define.

"He has sort of a jazz sound, but it's more complex than most artists we bring in," he said. "He has a very silky voice. He's just engaging and entertaining."

Kamerer said Gilbert returns to Manhattan after playing a benefit concert for Habitat for Humanity five years ago, and he thinks Gilbert's performance will be the perfect way to begin the season.

"We haven't had the chance to live things up yet, so we're delighted he's coming back to see us," Kamerer said.

BirdHouse co-founder Steve Martini said tonight's audience will be in for a treat.

"He will put on a great show," Martini said. "He will entertain the crowd and tell stories, he'll sing, he'll play, he'll be up and moving around. Most entertainers are unique in their own way, but he's a showman."

Bacterial disease sickens horses; show cancelled

By Zachary Payne
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend the K-State Western equestrian team was planning on competing in the Truman State Western Show at Kirksville, Mo.

However, the horses at Truman State suffered from an outbreak of strangles, and the show was cancelled.

Strangles is a highly contagious bacterial disease that affects horses in a way similar to the effects the flu has on humans.

Sophomore Kara Taddiken said she was disappointed when the competition was called off.

"I'm really sad that the show got cancelled. I was looking forward to the long car ride and getting to know all of the girls a lot better. The long ride to our shows is always a great time to create a lot of team unity," Taddiken said.

Coach Teresa Slough described the symptoms and effects of the disease.

"Generally, the horses show signs of depression and appear ill. They have severely clogged sinuses and run a temperature, but the hallmark symptom in most cases is the swelling under the jaw," Slough said.

Slough said it was the first time she had seen an entire barn coming down with strangles.

At some shows, Slough said she witnessed a horse or two quarantined in a remote stall, but never all of them.

There are some positives to the cancellation, however, Western rider Katie Edwards said.

"It's a little disappointing. We were all excited, but now we do get a couple of extra weeks of practice before our next show," Edwards said.

Slough said she also is finding the good in the situation. The two-day event will be made up in future competitions at Blackhawk Community College and Southwest Missouri State. Both schools are each adding one day to their already scheduled events, which will free up two more dates for the equestrian team to try and add varsity competition.

Originally, K-State did not have any varsity competition scheduled until the regional and national events in the spring, but now the Wildcats could have the opportunity to know what to expect on the national scene, if they are able to schedule varsity events.

Assistant coach Meghan Cunningham said she is looking forward to getting started at the K-State Western show Oct. 9.

"I'm ready to show. The older girls know what is expected but the younger girls will really benefit from competition and learn things that they can't in practice," Cunningham said.

COLUMN | Despite curse, Cubs' spirit a diehard

Like the Israelites, the Cubs have had their share of trials and tribulations, but they've remained faithful. They've represented their city longer than any other team in Major League Baseball — since 1870 when they were known as the White Stockings.

They battled through the great Chicago fire of 1871 that burnt all of their uniforms. They've had their share of untimely injuries, poor personnel decisions and the occasional player who uses a corked bat.

And on top of all that, they're cursed.

Oh, yes, the Curse. Or the Billy Goat Curse, as it's known to Cubs fans.

In the 1945 World Series between the Cubs and the Detroit Tigers, local tavern keeper Sam Sianis was kicked out of a game for trying to bring in his pet goat. Upon his ejection, he uttered the immortal words, "Never again will the World Series be played in Wrigley Field."

and the rest, as they say, is history.

As recently as last year, the Curse reared its ugly head.

The Cubs led the Florida Marlins three games to two in the National League Championship Series. It was the eighth inning in Game 6. The Marlins' Luis Castillo hit a foul ball toward the left-field bleachers and Cubs outfielder Moises Alou was poised to make the catch and put the Cubs within four outs of the World Series.

Then disaster struck.

Over-anxious Cubs' fan Steve Bartman reached out and caught the ball, robbing the Cubbies of the out and, perhaps, the World Series.

The Marlins went on to score eight runs in the inning and win Games 6 and 7 to become the first team to come back from a 3-1 deficit to win the LCS. Then they won their second World Series championship in seven years.

And thus, the Curse continues.

It's just not fair, God. Why should the Cubs and their long-suffering fans have to watch almost every other team in the league go to the Series, while they toil in baseball obscurity?

So this is my final appeal, a prayer that righteousness may someday conquer evil (otherwise known as the New York Yankees), and the Cubs will see the Promised Land.

If you're busy with watching after hurricane and war victims and stuff, I completely understand.

The Cubs might be able to get into the playoffs on their own, but they need all the divine intervention they can get if they want to beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

And while you're at it, could you help the K-State defense tackle get better? That's it, I promise.

Amen.

ROWERS | Athletic advisers coach academic side

about putting academics first. She said the athletes have athletic advisers in addition to their regular advisers to help them with anything they need.

"Our athletic advisers help keep us on track and make sure we are taking the classes we need to be in," Walker said. "They help us find tutors and try to make all possibilities available to you."

All three Wildcat rowers agreed balance and time management are important to being successful on both the water and in the classroom.

Hauldren said it takes a lot of time and effort to balance everything. An important factor is getting everything completed, which sometimes means taking homework on trips or staying up late to make sure it gets done.

Riekenberg said she doesn't do much else; rowing is pretty much her life.

"I eat, sleep, row and go to class," she said.

For the most part, the athletes feel they handle the stresses of balancing academics and competition well, but there are times when they feel overwhelmed or stressed.

Walker said there are definitely instances when she feels more stressed, but she just plows through it as much as possible.

Hauldren said she agrees and said it is even more difficult in the spring because of an increased number of competitions.

With the greater work load, she said she, Walker sometimes feels like she doesn't have enough time for everything.

Walker said the hardest thing is being able to juggle all aspects of life at the same time.

"You have to be able to effectively balance between school, athletics and family, but still have time for yourself and your friends and be able to live a normal college life."

VOLLEYBALL | Consistency sought at home, away

and remember that and not repeat what happened there."

So far this season for the Wildcats, senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas leads the team with kills, averaging 3.44 kills a game on .281 hitting. Senior setter Gabby Guerre is averaging 10.97 assists per game and freshman libero Angie Lastra is averaging 4.41 digs a game to go along with 23 service aces on the season.

Lastra said after the Wildcats' loss at Colorado on Sept. 15, their win over the Aggies gives them a confidence boost heading into Missouri.

"I suppose we lost focus at Colorado — we didn't prepare mentally for that," she said. "Then here against Texas A&M, we wanted to prove that we were really good, and we didn't want to commit the same errors. It was a very motivated game, and we have a lot of confidence to move on."

Fritz said finding that consistency to play well at home and on the road is key to K-State's success this season.

"The good teams win all their matches at home," she said. "The great teams can do the same thing and win on the road. It's not just Missouri, it's when we go anywhere. We've got to be able to put the same product on the floor as we do here."

Death toll continues to rise in wake of Storm Jeanne

By Amy Bracken
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GONAIVES, Haiti — Workers dug new mass graves for corpses that still littered this flood-ravaged city Thursday as the death toll from Tropical Storm Jeanne rose to more than 1,070 and residents grew increasingly agitated from a lack of food and drinkable water.

Health workers feared an epidemic from the unburied bodies, raw sewage in drinking water and infections from injuries. About 250,000 were left homeless in Haiti's northwest province, which includes the port of Gonaives, from the weekend storm.

Officials say the death toll could reach 2,000, with more than 1,250 reported missing and presumed washed out to sea, buried in mud or floating in houses still inaccessible to rescuers.

Survivors who spent the night crammed into schools, churches and on rooftops slogged through contaminated, ankle-deep mud in Gonaives, where more bodies lay unclaimed in waterlogged fields. Residents held limes to their noses against the stench of the bodies and overflowing latrines.

"There are so many bodies, you smell them but you don't see them," said farmer Louise

A Haitian tries to rescue a bus Thursday in the flooded streets of the city of Gonaives, in northeastern Haiti. The national civil defense agency said 1,150 bodies had been recovered by Thursday morning, mainly from Gonaives, a city of 200,000 that was buried under a wall of water and a thick coat of mud after Tropical Storm Jeanne triggered torrential rainfall over the weekend.

Orlando Barria / EPA

Roland. She said her rice and corn field was under water so she walked miles to town to try to get food.

Aid workers feared water-borne diseases could erupt.

"It's a critical situation in terms of epidemics, because of the bodies still in the streets, because people are drinking dirty water and scores are getting injuries from debris — huge cuts that are getting infected," said Francoise Gruloos, Haiti director for the U.N. Children's Fund.

Martine Vice-Aimee, an 18-year-old mother of two whose home was destroyed, said people already were falling ill.

"People are getting sick from the water, they're walking in it, their skin is getting itchy and rashes. The water they're drinking is giving them stomach aches."

Limited distribution by aid workers left most people still hungry and thirsty.

Gruloos said some residents were marooned on the roofs of homes surrounded by water and mud, scared to climb down into the filth. People defecated on sidewalks.

The government's civil protection agency said more than 900 people have been treated, most for cuts and gashes.

But the main General Hospital was out of commission, medical supplies were running out, and some aid trucks couldn't reach Gonaives because part of the road was washed away.

Trucks dumped as many as 200 bodies into a mass grave at sunset Wednesday, but hundreds more were piled up outside morgues without electricity, awaiting burial.

There was no funeral ceremony when the bodies were dumped into a 14-foot-deep hole at sunset Wednesday. Dozens of bystanders shrieked and told officials to collect nearby unburied bodies.

"We're demanding they come and take the bodies from our fields. Dogs are eating them," said bystander Jean Lebrun.

Only a couple dozen bodies have been identified, and nobody was taking count at the Bois Marchand cemetery — the only one in the city not under water.

"We can only drink the water people died in," the 35-year-old farmer said, citing a lack of potable water six days after the storm's passage.

Dieufort Deslorges, spokesman for the government's civil protection agency, said the confirmed death toll rose to 1,072, with 1,013 bodies recovered in Gonaives alone by Wednesday.

Aid agencies have dry food stocked in Gonaives, but few have the means to cook. Food for the Poor, based in Deerfield, Fla., said its truckloads of relief were unable to reach the city Wednesday. Troops from the Brazilian-led U.N. peacekeeping forcing were ferrying in some supplies by helicopter.

Peacekeepers fired into the air Wednesday to keep a crowd at bay as aid workers handed out loaves of bread — the first food in days for some.

"The situation is not getting better because people have been without food or water for three or four days," said Hans Havik, of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

The federation appealed for $3.3 million to fund relief operations to 40,000 Haitian victims, and several nations were sending help.

ENROLLMENT | Populations hit record numbers

Many of the Salina campus's students don't appear on the 20th-day enrollment, Kuhlman said, because the College of Technology and Aviation does not always fit the standard semester schedule.

Some programs on campus start after the 20th day of the traditional schedule, so those students would not be counted in the schedule.

Enhancing professional programs is vital to the overall growth of the Salina campus, Kuhlman said.

"To do that with our industrial partners, we have to move away from that traditional semester concept."

However, Kuhlman said, as the newness of these programs wears off, enrollment

Salina	978	914	-6.5
Manhattan	22,072	22,237	1.2
Total	23,050	23,151	0.4

will stabilize.

"The biggest impact of these numbers is that it marks a change in how we're operating here," he said.

The university and the Manhattan campus registered record-high enrollment, according to the figures.

"It is a direct result of the word of mouth K-State enjoys from students ... who value academic quality," Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said.

Bosco said he expected enrollment to stabilize and remain near 23,000 students in the future.

"We've reached critical mass," he said.

The increases coincide with continued tuition increases. K-State is in the fourth year of a five-year plan to increase tuition.

"We've seen enrollment go up because K-State is still a very good buy for your money," Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said.

After the five-year plan ends next year, Bosco said the administration would strive to keep tuition increases below 10 percent, and would continue to devote about 25 percent of the increases to need-based scholarships.

"We want to keep K-State affordable," Bosco said.

Former FDA head's testimony questioned in tobacco lawsuit

By Nancy Zuckerbrod
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The former head of the Food and Drug Administration came under cross-examination Thursday after testifying that cigarette makers manipulated nicotine to keep smokers addicted, a central allegation in the federal government's $280 billion lawsuit against the industry.

David Kessler, former FDA commissioner, appeared in U.S. District Court to answer questions from defense attorneys about his investigation of the industry in the 1990s.

The Justice Department alleges tobacco companies lied to the public for years about whether nicotine was addictive, whether they manipulated nicotine and about whether their products caused diseases.

Brown and Williamson attorney David Bernick tried to paint

Kessler as overzealous and eager for media attention in the 1990s when he characterized nicotine as a drug and set out to regulate cigarettes.

Kessler stated in written direct testimony previously filed with the court that the FDA investigation revealed that nicotine levels in cigarettes were controlled by the companies. He said the companies managed to keep nicotine levels up by blending different kinds of tobacco leaves, to make the product.

"The manufacturer had to be controlling and manipulating the level of nicotine in these brands," he testified. He also said industry documents indicated ammonia was added to cigarettes to enhance the effects of addictive nicotine, an allegation the tobacco industry denied in opening arguments.

"What he says is completely and utterly false," Bernick said.

Bernick added that some industry documents pointed to a theory that ammonia could affect the way nicotine affects smokers, but he denied ammonia is added to cigarettes for that purpose. Instead, he said it creates "aromatic features of the smoke."

Kessler said the industry was not "forthcoming" during his investigation. "Parts of the industry waged, I think it is fair to say, a significant attack on the agency," he said.

At issue is whether the companies committed fraud by denying publicly that nicotine was addictive while acknowledging it was addictive in internal industry documents.

Tobacco lawyers deny they committed fraud. They also say the government is going to have trouble proving future fraud is likely — something the racketeering law requires the government to show.

Smithsonian opens Indian museum

By Deb Reichmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Bush on Thursday marked the opening of the new American Indian National Museum, saying it will serve as a powerful reminder of the spirit and vitality of peoples native to the nation.

"The National Museum of Indian affairs affirms that this young country is home to an ancient, noble and enduring native culture," Bush said in the East Room of the White House. "And all Americans are proud of that culture."

Members of Congress and Indian tribal leaders joined Bush at the ceremony.

"Like many Indian dwellings, the new museum building faces east toward the rising sun," the president said. "And as we celebrate this new museum and we look to the future, we can say that the sun is rising on Indian country."

Directed by W. Richard West Jr., a member of the Southern Cheyenne nation, the museum holds 8,000 objects from across the Western Hemisphere. Four million people a year are expected to visit the museum to watch movies, listen to Native American music and see paintings, photographs, sculptures, masks, weapons, jewelry and medals.

On Tuesday, tens of thousands of Native Americans participated in a procession down Pennsylvania Avenue, beginning a weeklong festival in Washington to celebrate the opening of the $124 million museum. The five-story museum is situated on four acres between the Capitol and the Washington Monument, and takes up the last remaining spot on the grassy National Mall.

The museum opens with three permanent exhibits: "Our Universes," featuring tribal philosophies and world views; "Our Peoples," a look at historical events from a native peoples' perspective; and "Our Lives," which focuses on native people today.

The "Our Peoples" exhibit tackles some issues of interaction with the U.S. government and its European predecessors. It includes highlights — such as U.S. currency with the faces of American Indians — as well as lowlights, from treaties violated by the government to weapons used to kill Indians.

Not all Native Americans have embraced the new museum. The American Indian Movement, an activist group, issued a statement claiming the museum failed to display the tragic history of the U.S. government's "holocaust" against the nations and peoples of the Americas.

Audience debates merits of Moore film

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students, professors and residents from Manhattan and the surrounding area filled Forum Hall on Sunday night. All were there to view the final showing of Michael Moore's controversial film "Fahrenheit 9/11."

Afterward, about 50 people stayed to participate in an open forum to discuss their reaction to the film and the upcoming presidential election.

Moderator Michele Janette, professor of English and director of Cultural Studies, opened the forum by asking all those planning to vote in the election to stand. Everyone in the room stood.

"I am pleased to see that many people stand, because it challenges the cliché that no one cares about politics," Janette said. "I think the fact that people are here tonight and are planning to vote disproves that cliché."

Wefald hopeful in State of the University address

By Josh Heck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will soon be among the nation's best universities, President Jon Wefald said Friday during his State of the University address.

Wefald spoke of his desire to move the university into the top-10 of all land-grant universities nationwide.

He said that all campus activities should be focused around this centralized goal.

"To do that, we have to assess where we stand today and what we must do to move from where we are to where we aspire to be," Wefald said.

Amidst state-imposed budget cuts and a decline in state funding, Wefald said K-State has been forced to rely on other sources for funding-tuition, extramural research, funding and private giving.

"The largest impediment is the refusal of the State of Kansas to recognize the importance of top-rated universities in the economic success of the state," Wefald said.

He acknowledged that the university cannot continue to impose double-digit tuition increases upon students and donors are strongly opposed to funding basic operating expenses.

Wefald pointed to a decline in faculty

World record left unbroken during charity pillow fight

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One hundred and forty people arrived, pillows in hand, Saturday morning at Memorial Stadium in an attempt to break the world record for largest pillow fight.

Members of the Acacia Fraternity and Alpha of Clovia combined to organize and promote the fundraising event, Acacia member Nathan Mentzer said.

Mentzer, junior in mechanical engineering, said the world record still is held by Garnett, Kan., with 645 people.

"I was disappointed with the amount of college students that attended," he said, "but it was great to see the community's involvement with the students."

Despite the lack of college students, Mentzer said a lot of families attended, and the event attained its goal.

"About $500 was raised for the Manhattan-Ogden school district's after-school program," he said. "It was a really successful event for the first year," Mentzer said.

Mentzer is really looking forward to breaking the world record next year.

"If we actually do break the world record, we want to have T-shirts available to everyone that says 'I'm a world record holder,'" he said.

he said.

Andrew Gerth, freshman in architectural engineering, said he went for the pure fun of it.

"I knew friends that were going," he said. "It was a lot of fun to hit people with pillows and not get in trouble for it," Gerth said.

Gerth said the most entertaining part of the day was the children.

"It was funny seeing the little kids running around, hitting people they didn't even know," he said. "Some kids were chasing around the guy with the megaphone even before the event started."

Safety was not an issue, Gerth said.

"People watched out for each other," he said. "People were hitting each other based on their size."

The coordination between Acacia and Alpha of Clovia, was vital to the event, Clovia member Krista Patton said.

"Everyone was encouraged to help out if they could," she said. "If someone couldn't be at the event, they helped promote it ahead of time."

Promotion was extensive, Patton said. People chalked sidewalks, put up flyers, promoted at Manhattan firefighters train for emergency rescues

Terry Scott of the Manhattan Fire Department exits a collapsed building Friday during rescue training exercises near Juliette and Poyntz avenues. The group participated in a simulation with people trapped in vehicles covered in concrete and debris, similar to tornado debris.

Dennis O'Connell frowned when he was informed a Manhattan Fire Department rescue team still had not found a 180-pound mannequin in a collapsed building.

The mannequin was part of federal rescue training program, which taught local fire fighters to conduct rescues in confined spaces, collapsed buildings, tornado debris and falling trenches.

O'Connell, a retired NYPD officer, knows what it's like to not have enough training to complete a rescue mission. As part of a FEMA team in New York City, he was a team leader at the World Trade Center site.

"We weren't prepared for the World Trade Center," he said.

Now, O'Connell travels around with Roco Rescue, an international training program, to ensure others are ready. In addition to training fire fighters, Roco instructors travel to train paratroopers, industry leaders and military personnel.

The Manhattan Fire Department obtained an $86,000 grant from the Department of Homeland Security for three weeks of training in coordination with the Salina and Emporia fire departments.

The 150 hours of training included building a live trench with the risk of yards of dirt falling in — a 6,000-pound impact. The trainers then learned confined space rescue using campus steam tunnels.

O'Connell said the goal of different kinds of rescue training is learning to use the tools fire department's already own.

"What we have found is most people have a large quantity of tools," he said. "Most of the tools they need they already have. Certain tools get the job done. They just have to know how to use them."

Beheadings, violence in Iraq

Fares Dimli | AFP/GETTY IMAGES

An Iraqi man rushes his wounded son to a nearby ambulance Saturday in Fallujah. U.S. warplanes killed seven Iraqis in a raid on a suspected hideout of a militant group holding Kenneth Bigley, a British hostage.

Staff and wire reports

Sniper attacks, planned explosions and convoy attacks claimed the lives of 12 U.S. service members last week, according to Central Command casualty reports.

Family members grieved Saturday during a memorial for Jack Hensley, who was beheaded by captors in Iraq, along with fellow American Eugene Armstrong. The deaths of Hensley and Armstrong were broadcast on an Islamic Web site. The status of a third hostage, Briton Kenneth Bigley, is unknown.

HURRICANE JEANNE

The Caribbean and Gulf Coast were smashed by yet another hurricane after being tormented by Ivan.

Hurricane Jeanne followed Ivan, devastating many of the same areas already hit by previous hurricanes this year. Nearly 2,000 people have been killed in Haiti. The death toll continued to rise throughout the area.

CAMPAIGNING ON IRAQ

Sen. John Kerry went on the offensive over the issue of the war in Iraq, saying that the president's mistakes could lead to unending war.

The Democratic presidential nominee has not yet closed the polling gap with Bush since the Republican National Convention.

RILEY SOLDIERS CHARGED

Two soldiers from Fort Riley were charged last week with premeditated murder for the deaths of Iraqis.

Sgt. Michael P. Williams and Spc. Brent W. May were charged for the deaths of three Iraqi citizens.

Two other Fort Riley soldiers were charged with murder on Sept. 15 for the death of another soldier in Clay County, Kan.

GOSS SWORN IN AS CIA CHIEF

Rep. Porter Goss was approved by the Senate as the new director of the CIA.

Goss, who was nominated to fill the vacancy left by George Tenet, faced some heat in the approval process, with accusations of partisanship and doubts of his ability to lead the non-political CIA.

Goss is considered one of the top candidates for the position of national intelligence director if it is created.

IRAQI PM VISITS AMERICA

Iraqi Prime Minister Iyad Allawi visited the United States last week, telling a joint session of Congress there should be a decreased presence of international troops in the country.

ENROLLMENT INCREASES

K-State's 20th-day enrollment for 2004 increased by 1.2 percent over last year's figures. Total enrollment for the Manhattan and Salina campuses totaled 23,151. Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said the increase has pushed the enrollment levels to "critical mass."

Youths compete in Punt, Pass and Kick

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though the football team had a bye week, KSU Stadium saw action with the annual Punt, Pass and Kick competition Sunday afternoon.

The Manhattan Jaycees organized Punt, Pass and Kick, which was sponsored by Pepsi.

"This is our way to help out the youth of the community," said Dawn Lesperance, Jaycees' board chairperson.

In addition to the football competition, the Jaycees also organized the Pitch, Hit and Run, program in May, and they will begin the soccer program, Dribble, Pass and Score, next summer.

Each September the program usually attracts 50 to 75 participants in four age groups: 8- and 9-year-olds, 10- and 11-year-olds, 12- and 13-year-olds and 14- and 15-year-olds. This year there were 33 participants.

During the competition, organizers had to tell the young participants to be quiet to make recording measurements easier.

Jaycees' president Mark Lesperance said it wasn't too troublesome. "We want to make sure if somebody says 'four,' or 'nine,' we get the right number," he said. "We want to be as fair to everybody as possible."

The only time participants were quiet was when Jordan Gallentine stepped up to the line of scrimmage.

Gallentine was the lone competitor in the 14- and 15-year-old age bracket.

"It felt good, but I didn't really notice," Gallentine said of the attention he received from younger competitors. "I just focused on what I had to do."

Gallentine, 15, is a quarterback, punter and kicker for the Junction City High School varsity and junior varsity teams. He totaled 348 feet and three inches, about 100 feet further than anyone else.

Because he had no competition, Gallentine described his performance as mediocre and said he did better last year. "I was just going out there to have fun," Gallentine said. "I was probably not as focused as if I was competing."

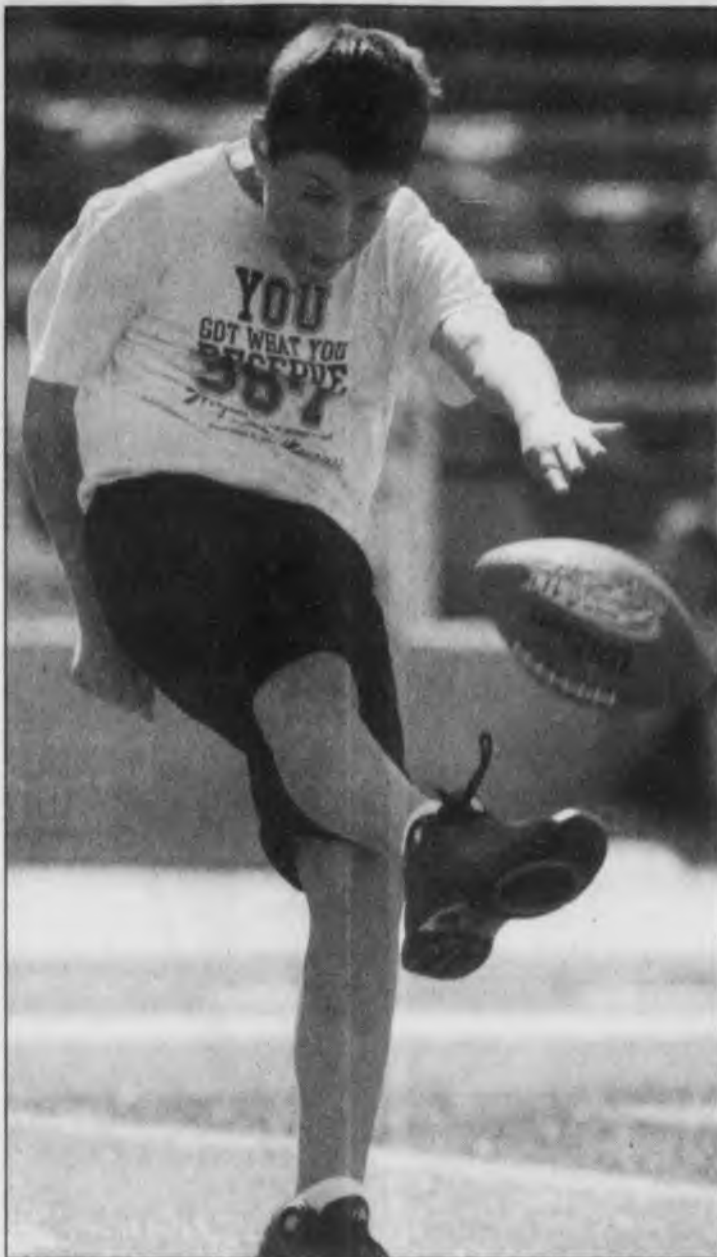

Twelve-year-old Meghan Dowell placed first in the 12- and 13-year-old girls' age group.

"It wasn't my best, and I could've done better, but there were only two people in my age group," she said.

The other competitor was Stacy Buss, Dowell's classmate at Riley County Middle School.

Dowell's father, Gordon, said they were hoping Meghan could reach 200 feet. She totaled 194 feet. "She would've had 200 if the wind hadn't caught her pass," he said.

The Manhattan winners will compete in the sectional competition Oct. 30 in Concordia, Kan.

Derek Francis, of Manhattan, punts a football Sunday afternoon during the 10- to 11-year-old age division as part of the Punt, Pass and Kick competition at KSU Stadium. There were four different age divisions, and the top finisher from each division goes on to compete next month in Concordia, Kan.

Two militants die in blast near compound

By Fisnik Abrashi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Suicide attackers exploded a pair of car bombs outside an Iraqi National Guard compound west of the capital Sunday, wounding American and Iraqi forces, and the U.S. military announced the arrest of a senior Iraqi commander for alleged ties to the insurgency.

The developments underscored the obstacles toward building a strong Iraqi security force capable of taking over from U.S. troops and restoring stability to the country.

The two militants, who died in the blasts, tried to ram two cars loaded with explosives into the base in Kharma, a town on the outskirts of the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah, a U.S. military official said on condition of anonymity. The number of U.S. and Iraqi casualties was not immediately clear.

The attack took place at 9 a.m. and caused serious damage to the main building, said Bassem Abbas, a witness. He added that shortly after the attack, U.S. troops cordoned off the area and prevented people from getting close.

On Sunday in Baghdad a rocket slammed into a neighborhood, killing at least one person and wounding eight, hospital officials and witnesses said.

Hours later, another loud blast shook the area near the Green Zone, site of the U.S. Embassy and the interim Iraqi government. Smoke rose above the zone, and alert sirens sounded. It was not clear if anything had been hit.

American troops have staged repeated attacks in Fallujah on sites the U.S. military says are being used by followers of Jordanian-born terror mastermind Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. But U.S. troops have not entered Fallujah since the end of a three-week siege in April that killed hundreds.

The twin blasts in Kharma bring to at least 34 the number of suicide car bombings in September, the highest monthly total since the U.S.-led invasion in March 2003. As many as seven car bombs have been detonated in a single day this month. Insurgents have targeted Iraqi security forces because they are seen as collaborators with the Americans and their allies in the interim government.

Brig. Gen. Talib al-Lahibi, who previously served as an infantry officer in Saddam Hussein's army, was detained Thursday in the province of Diyala, northeast of Baghdad, the U.S. military said in a statement.

Al-Lahibi was the acting head of the Iraqi National Guard for the Diyala province, said Maj. Neal O'Brien, spokesman for the Army's 1st Infantry Division.

TO THE POINT Community can benefit from Harmony Week

A cultural tradition at K-State is expanding to the surrounding community, and it's time for the entire community to come together in support of it.

In its 17th year, Community Cultural Harmony Week started Sunday, and activities run through Tuesday, Oct. 5.

This year's events will not be confined to campus, but rather expanded to the community as a whole, including the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 schools. Workshops, discussions, lectures, banquets, films and exhibits will be open to the public.

While it is important to celebrate the festivities, members of the surrounding communities need to take advantage of the events and do so with a serious emphasis on the issues presented.

This year's Harmony Week is an exercise in practical methods for supporting social inclusion and cultural harmony.

Most people can agree these issues are of great importance, and events such as diversity workshops and discussions are well-suited to achieving the goal of constructive practice.

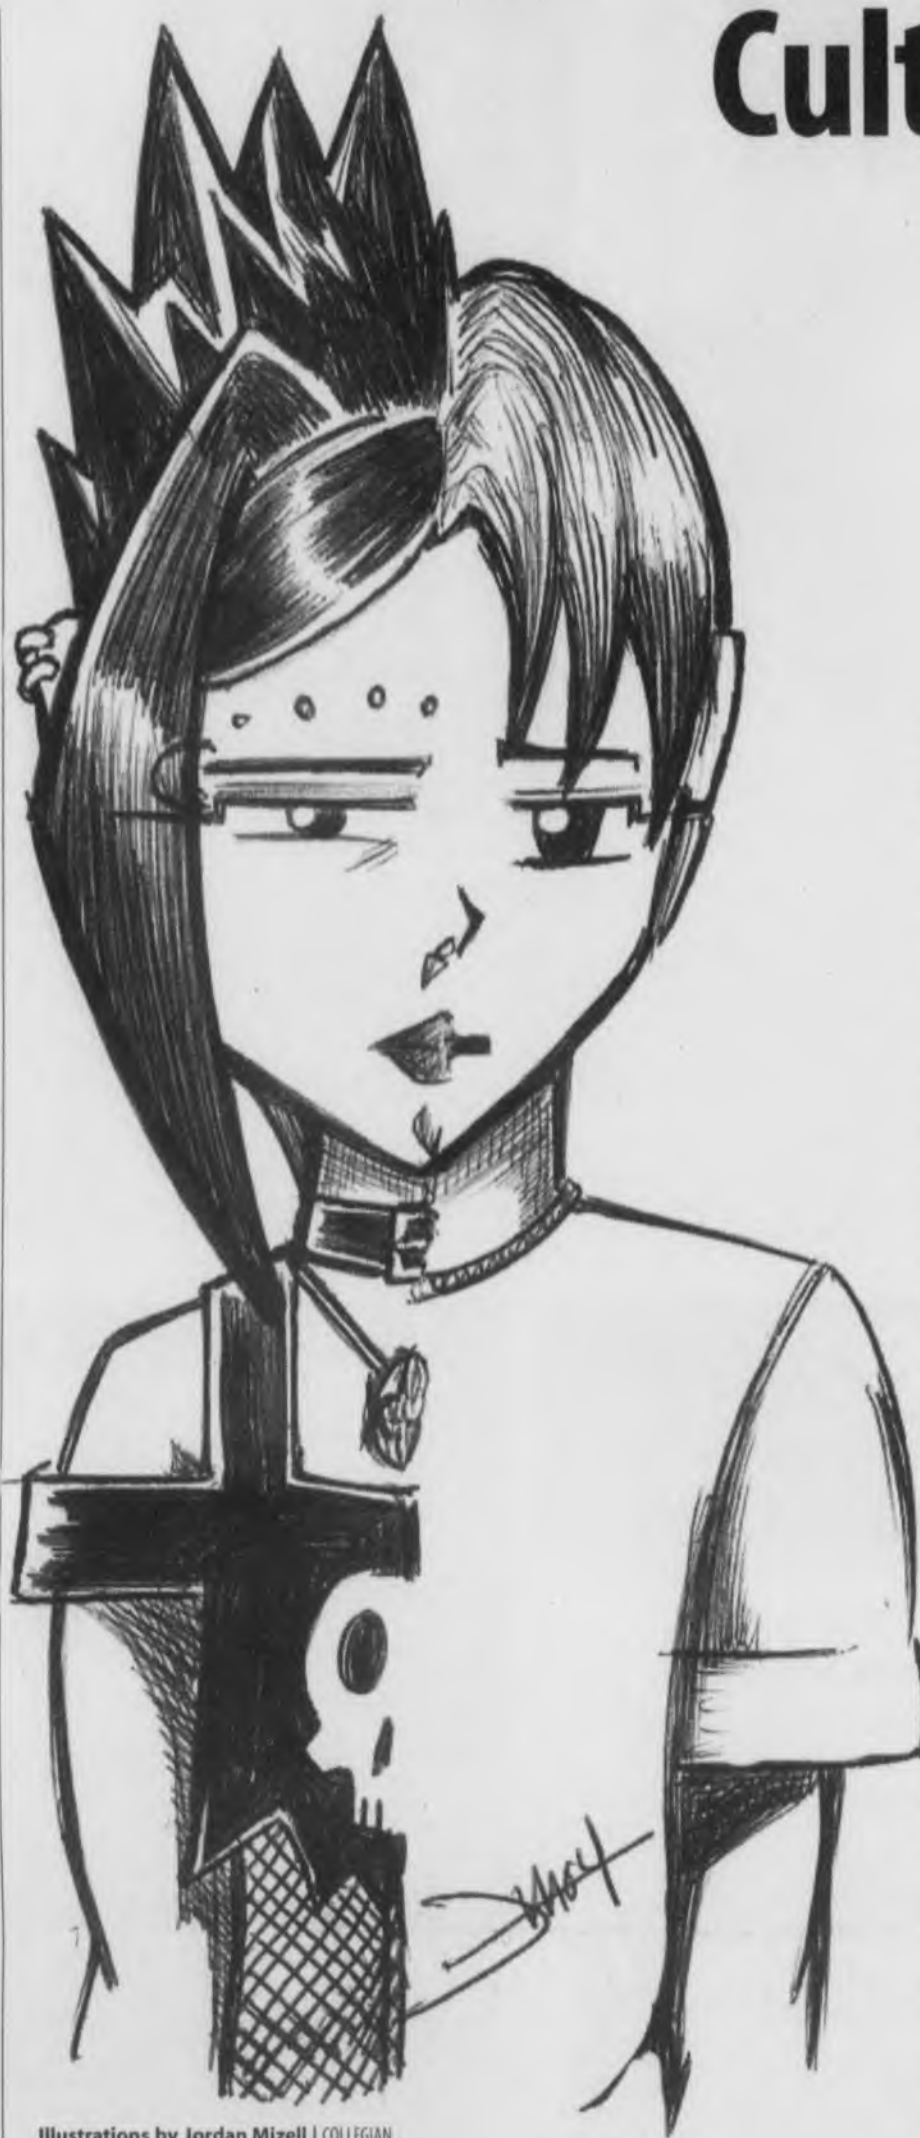

The vision of the organizers is beneficial for all members of the community, and those that stand to benefit should utilize this opportunity to contribute to the betterment of our society.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Culture clash

Anti-goth policies promote prejudice

JONAS HOGG

As if they have nothing better to do, the educators at Wilbur Middle School in Wichita have taken it into their pea-sized heads to ban the "goth look."

Following on the heels of other highly successful bans, such as the prohibition of alcohol in the early 20th century, the intent of this ruling is to make the school more friendly.

Principal Cherie Crain, obviously a very gifted linguist, said that "anything disruptive to school is a no-no... and this is definitely a disruption."

As reported by the Wichita Eagle, this part of the school dress code is meant to censor, restrict "wearing clothing or accessories that create a 'gang' or clique appearance, illusion, or threat."

The school board undoubtedly must have consulted the regional specialist on gangs, mostly consisting of chubby, middle-class, white women on www.ivilage.com.

But despite the almighty dress code, it seems that the students in gothic attire were forming a group in violation of the code!

Imagine the shock and horror that the school must have felt when they realized people with common interests were socializing.

Even worse, the principle noted that some of the younger students were intimidated.

In order to deintimidate the sensitive students of Wilbur Middle School, they decided to ban the evil scary clothing that was found to be so offensive.

How grand! If you don't like something, get it banned. Let us teach our children the merits of personal freedom.

If such incidents were limited solely to Wichita, it would hardly be cause for alarm (or a column). But they aren't.

A quick Google search reveals similar goth bans in schools in Atlanta, bans on any religious symbol but crosses in Mississippi schools, and many schools ban the wearing of pentagrams and pentacles.

If you really need to see how high the tide of stupidity rises, you only need to hop the border to Missouri, where $273,000 of the Department of Education's money was set aside to fight "goth culture" in Blue Springs.

Fortunately, after squandering more than half of the allotted money, locals realized this vomited-up idea was not quite thought through and gave the rest of the money back.

Flash back to Wichita, where Debbie McKenna, supervisor of the district's safe and drug-free schools programs, warned that wearing goth clothing is just a warning sign for problems later on.

McKenna was not quoted as saying what these problems were, likely because she is a dolt and has no idea what the hell she is talking about.

But I do, and allow me to call this what it really is: passing the buck.

Yes, ineffectual parents everywhere always have looked for somewhere else to point the finger for their children not living up to some arbitrary expectation.

They wouldn't dream that it was their own bloated pathetic asses. And so this time that chubby finger wound up pointing at the lovers of black.

So let me take the time to thank the Wilbur Middle School administration. Without you, how would we pass on the strident values of closed-mindedness and prejudice?

And just in time for diversity week.

Jonas is a sophomore in sociology and international studies. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Kansas has its share of attractions

It's no secret that the Sunflower State gets more than its share of bad press.

Is it the complete lack of political diversity? Is it that our school legislators tend to weed out that pesky "science" part of our science classes? Is it the pancake comparisons?

Maybe it's that most out-of-staters would rather come down with a severe urinary tract infection than drive through western Kansas.

Whatever it is, the gripes are souring my grapes, especially those coming from Kansas residents.

I know. You don't think there's anything to do here. You're bored.

Well, that's your own fault. See, I know firsthand that Kansas has more bodacious goings-on than even the most extreme tourist can handle.

No matter where your interests lie, there's something in this great state for everyone.

If you're a geology buff, I have two questions: why in the world are you a geology buff, and have you visited Rock City in Minneapolis, Kan.?

The sign outside of the site calls it "a famous and important landmark."

JEREMY PARKER

It's like Stonehenge, only better, more famous and historical.

Are you a thrill-seeker? Try visiting the tiny town of Delphos and go see the monument dedicated to the girl who wrote Abraham Lincoln a letter encouraging him to grow a beard. Is eating outside of enormous craft projects how you get your rocks off? If this is the case, I recommend a lovely little picnic outside Kansas' marvel of modern science, the world's largest ball of twine.

If you're an artist, you're in luck. In Goodland, you have "The Big Easel," which rises majestically out of the landscape like a jubilee of freedom. It's really nothing more than an 80-foot-tall duplication of a Van Gogh still life, but the Goodland version is a billion times more beautiful.

Does the original Van Gogh painting tower triumphantly over an old Pizza Hut and a Dollar General Store? Of course not. It's hanging in a boring museum somewhere. Score, another one for the Sunflower State!

Or maybe you should check out The Garden of Eden in Lucas.

The Garden of Eden was the former home of a nutjob who had his decaying body preserved in a glass-topped coffin for all to see.

He also adorned his yard with more than a hundred mammoth and grotesque Biblical sculptures to give nightmares for the rest of your life.

He also dug up his dead wife from the cemetery so he could rest next to her in a giant homemade mausoleum. Kansans rule!

But surely the state's greatest artist is southern Kansas' grand champion kook, M.T. Liggett.

Made completely out of rusty old farm equipment, Liggett's paranoid political art stretches for nearly a mile down the highway, with caricatures of public figures such as Janet Reno.

Now, tell me that you don't love this place, and I'll tell you that you must be a terrorist.

Walk in park begins harmony week

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite countless differences, the world's people are "connected by a few core human values," a speaker said at Sunday's harmony walk, promoting the theme, "Living Democracy: Practicing Inclusion."

"The world is filled with people from diverse ethnic, social, cultural and religious backgrounds. We should learn to appreciate our differences," said Candi Hironaka of Leadership Studies and Programs. "After all, we are all connected by a few core human values like happiness, mutual respect and love."

Sunday afternoon brought a diverse assembly of men, women and children to Triangle Park to participate in a harmony walk in support of diversity and equality. The walk was organized to make a statement to K-State students and the Manhattan community, highlighting the importance of community solidarity toward multicultural diversity.

The walk marked the start of Community Cultural Harmony Week, formerly Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, which was founded by Barbara Baker in 1988, then a K-State student.

"This walk is basically in the memory and honor of people like Martin Luther King Jr., Cesar Chavez and Dolores Huerta, who were all human and civil rights leaders in the U.S. and championed the cause of social justice, equality and diversity," Doug Benson, professor of Spanish, said. "It is important to build an inclusive community and prepare students for the real world. Today all the top multinational companies recruit people from varied communities, because research suggests that diversity helps in generating more ingenious ideas."

Harmony Week organizers strive to raise awareness and educate people on the importance of diversity and seek to be a voice for the people who are marginalized on the basis of their gender, race, sexual orientation and socio-economic status.

City Commissioner Bruce Snead addressed the crowd.

"We need to listen and reach out to people," Snead said. "It is vital to learn about and understand people from various cultures. Democracy can be achieved only by volunteering to serve and help, in turn making the community stronger."

Bob Seymour, of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, talked about educating community teachers about the importance of diversity. He underlined the task of forming such values in children, which can help achieve a more socially equitable future, he said.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president and senior in finance, reinforced those messages.

"It is important for students to attend the various events in the upcoming Community Cultural Harmony Week, starting Sept. 27, and try to make practicing diversity and inclusion a priority in life."

Cultural event extends to city, school district

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Community Cultural Harmony Week is spreading.

The event, originally established in 1988, was sparked by a case involving racial slurs toward Puerto Rican students renting a club in Aggieville in celebration of the Day of San Juan.

Aggieville Club employees had hung posters of San Juan with obscene comments on them around the club.

Now expanded to also include the City of Manhattan and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, the event was founded by former K-State student Barbara Baker with help from the Student Governing Association.

"It was our hope that a Racial/Ethnic Harmony Association would be developed to continue the dialogues of multiracial harmony as it pertained to local campus and community issues," Baker said. "We knew the week would sometimes be controversial, and some people would not understand its intent. But we had faith in the vision that our society can hear and then see truth together, dialogue about solution together, heal together, and change together."

After nine years of chairing the committee which organized Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, Baker moved on to work on her doctorate, and the leadership of the committee was handed to Candi Hironaka, associate director of Leadership Studies and Programs, and Douglas Benson, professor of Spanish.

"The job has been a lot of work, but thanks to the members of the planning committee and the many people who attend the events, it has brought us a lot of joy," Benson said.

The events began on Sunday, Sept. 26 and continues through Tuesday, Oct. 5.

Chiefs forfeit hope for playoffs in third loss

JOSH WITT

It's over. Done. See you next season.

Sorry, Chiefs — after Sunday's 24-21 loss to Houston at Arrowhead Stadium, your season is officially over.

I know, we're only three games into the season. There's a lot of football left to be played, but the loss to the Texans provided all the evidence needed that Kansas City will not make the playoffs this year and will be lucky to get six wins.

This was supposed to be the Chiefs' bounce-back game after two weeks in which they looked poor in nearly all aspects of the game that didn't involve a guy named Priest Holmes.

But they choked.

Up 14-6 and knocking on the door of the end zone in the third quarter, quarterback Trent Green tarnished an otherwise solid day by throwing an interception at the goal line, which Marcus Coleman returned 102 yards for a touchdown.

The Texans converted the two-point conversion, tying the score at 14, and the comeback was on.

Only this year's Kansas City team could squander the opportunity at home to beat a lowly 0-2 team, which had made San Diego and Detroit look good the previous two weeks.

Now only doom and gloom is on Kansas City's horizon.

So what if the Chiefs have Holmes, one of the best players in the NFL?

They've had him for three games, and all three have gone in the loss column.

The guy can only do so much. He can't play defensive. He can't throw a good pass at Diaz, Simosa win doubles; Kvaratskhelia takes singles

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Wildcats claimed a doubles title and another took home an individual title at the Ole Miss Fall Classic this weekend in Oxford, Miss.

Senior Judith Diaz and junior Jessica Simosa defeated Nicola Slater and Ali Blackett of Southern Mississippi 8-5 in the Blue draw doubles final.

In addition, senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Olga Klimova defeated Anie Schmidt and Heather Kelley of Centenary in the consolation draw championship.

Two Wildcats also advanced to the final round in singles play.

Tamar Kvaratskhelia won the singles title in the final day of competition, and Diaz made it to the finals but was defeated.

Coach Steve Bietau said he is never easily satisfied but thought the athletes competed well.

"We have lots of things to work on, but the new players did a good job," Bietau said.

Kvaratskhelia said she liked the tournament and was happy she had won. She said she was impressed with how the team played as a whole.

Klimova agreed and said the tournament provided a building block for the future.

"I think it was a very good experience for me. I learned a lot," Klimova said.

One aspect that Bietau said has made a difference already in the young season is the depth of the team.

"By having two sets of doubles making it so far, it shows that our depth is getting better, and it's making a difference, because it was an issue last year," Bietau said.

Bietau said the team put in a good effort, but there is always room for improvement. He said the group is very coachable and does what they are asked to do to improve.

Kvaratskhelia and Klimova both agreed they have areas they can work on.

Senior Judith Diaz makes a return during her singles match against Oklahoma on April 3, 2004, at the Washburn Tennis Facility. Diaz and junior Jessica Simosa captured the Blue draw doubles title at this weekend's Ole Miss Fall Classic in Oxford, Miss. Diaz also made the Red draw singles final, losing to Mississippi's Claire Conerly 7-5, 6-3 Sunday.

"I have to work on everything, I need to play better, work harder and be faster and more focused," Klimova said.

As well as focusing on improvement, the athletes said they learned skills at the tournament that can be applied to the rest of the season.

"I learned how to compete, the girls who played against me worked hard and didn't give up. The main thing for me is not to give up," Klimova said.

Kvaratskhelia said the tournament was tough, because all the girls involved played well.

Bietau said this gave the athletes a chance to compete in many challenging matches.

Klimova said she expects to get better throughout the season.

"I hope to get better in every way. I want to be a valuable member of the team," she said.

Wildcats beat Tigers for 2nd conference victory

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State defeated Missouri 3-0 on the road Saturday, picking up its second Big 12 Conference win and first away from Ahearn Field House.

The No. 19 Wildcats topped the Tigers 30-26, 35-33 and 30-24. The win moved K-State to 8-4 overall and 2-1 in the conference, while Missouri fell to 6-4 and 1-2.

The Wildcats jumped out to early leads of 7-1 and 6-1 in the first two games, and then held on for the win. In the last game, K-State pulled away late to take the win and the match.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she was pleased with the way her team came out strong to start the games.

"We were able to come out early and play well," Fritz said. "That's something we've been working on, because it's important to get off to a good start, especially on the road."

As a team, the Wildcats tallied 10.5 blocks and 10 service aces in the win.

Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin and senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas each had 13 kills; Martin on .571 hitting. Senior setter Gabby Guerre had her 37th career double-double, and freshman libero Angie Lastra had 11 digs, giving her 10 or more in every match this season.

Fritz said the Wildcats made plays when they had to and responded well to the Tigers' style of play.

Men's golf sends five qualifiers to tee off on Nashville greens

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team tees off at 7 a.m. today in the first round of the two-day Mason Rudolph Championship at the Vanderbilt Legend's Club in Nashville, Tenn.

K-State is sending five qualifiers to the Championship, including senior Matt Van Cleave, juniors Ben Kern and Tyler Cummins and freshmen Clay Hodge and Tyler Yonke.

Coming off a second-place finish in the KU Invitational, Coach Tim Norris said he feels his players have all improved as a result.

"All the players have been working on their shortcomings since the KU Invitational and seem to be playing better. We'll see if that translates into lower scores," Norris said.

Junior Ben Kern, who finished 23rd at the KU Invitational, said he is looking to step up his game.

"I've been working on a few things in my game, and I think I am getting close to being really good," Kern said.

This is the Wildcats' first appearance at the Championship and no one on the squad has played the 72-par, 6,990-yard Roper's Knob Course.

According to Norris, there will be a heavy emphasis placed on the practice round.

"The practice round will be very important for us. This is a links-style course with few trees, large fairways and mounding throughout the course," Norris said. "It is very similar to Colbert Hills."

The Wildcats will be up against a talented 15-team field at the Championship. Eight teams are ranked in the top 50 of the most recent Golfweek/Sagarin poll, including K-State, which checks in at 39. Louisiana State is No. 7, while No. 10 Alabama and No. 12 Virginia follow close behind.

Junior Tyler Cummins said he will watch for Kentucky and Vanderbilt during the tournament.

Norris said it's too early in the season to predict who will win the tournament title, especially with the quality of the teams present at the Championship.

"At this time of year, anybody can jump up and play well. All these players are fresh off their summer practice and playing schedules," Norris said.

After the Mason Rudolph Championship, the Wildcats will get a break before their next tournament on Oct. 11-12 at the Alister MacKenzie Invitational in Fairfax, Calif.

WNBA | Despite Ohlde's 17 points, Lynx fall to Storm

With the WNBA's reigning MVP Lauren Jackson in early foul trouble, the Seattle Storm reserves chipped in 23 points for their first playoff win in franchise history.

Jackson scored 12 of her 14 points in the second half to guide the Storm past the Minnesota Lynx 70-58 Saturday in the first game of their WNBA Western Conference semifinal series.

Jackson, the league's top scorer at 20.5 points per game, picked up her third foul with 16:22 to play in the first half.

Sheri Sam added 11 points and 10 rebounds for the Storm, whose reserves outscored Minnesota's 23-11.

Nicole Ohlde led Minnesota with 17 points, and Tamika Williams added 16 points and eight rebounds. Minnesota shot 44 percent from the field and committed 20 turnovers.

NASCAR | Newman wins; Gordon takes points lead

Ryan Newman has a plan to win the NASCAR Nextel Cup title even though the mathematics make that seem very unlikely.

"If we can finish in the top five in the last nine races, I can pretty much guarantee us a championship," he said after winning Sunday at Dover International Speedway. "But we can't finish 33rd, first and then 33rd."

He certainly can't, given the 107 points by which he trails leader Jeff Gordon with eight races remaining. Newman is playing catch-up because engine failure relegated him to a 33rd-place finish a week earlier in New Hampshire.

Jeff Gordon finished third behind Mark Martin in the race and is one point ahead of Kurt Busch, who wound up fifth and lost the points lead when he was passed by Dale Jarrett with six laps to go.

Sidewalk publicity offers opportunities

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Publicity is abundant on K-State's campus. Some walls in buildings are covered in bold posters. The bottoms of pages in the newspaper can serve as a marquee for local businesses, and even the sidewalks are awash with the colorful remnants of advertisements of past events.

Loleta Sump, facility support service manager, said it is a good idea for groups wanting to chalk the sidewalks to first check with the Division of Facilities in Dykstra 109.

"In the student handbook, there is a section regarding advertising, and it's a good idea to check that first. It's not mandatory to check with the Division of Facilities, but it's a good idea," Sump said.

According to the handbook, which can be accessed through the Web site, www.ksu.edu/osas/pdf/source, sidewalk publicity is anything written or drawn on campus sidewalks.

Check it out Rules for sidewalk chalking

- Sidewalk publicity is communication written and/or drawn on campus sidewalks.
- Only washable sidewalk chalk may be used when placing markings.
- The sponsoring organization's name must appear in the publicity.
- Only flat paved/concrete surfaces of campus sidewalks can be used. It cannot appear on curbs, back of steps, brick surfaces, buildings, benches, planters, trash containers, pillars or anything

It states that washable sidewalk chalk is the only kind of utensil permitted, and a sponsoring organization's name must appear with the chalking and only eligible groups may chalk the sidewalks.

It also states the markings must be made 30 feet from the entrances of buildings, and chalking can only be done on flat paved or concrete surfaces of campus sidewalks and groups may be asked to remove the markings if 'extenuating circumstances other than the above mentioned flat paved/concrete surfaces.

- Publicity must be at least 30 feet from the entrance of a building.
- Sponsoring groups will be asked to remove the markings if extenuating circumstances demand a request.

Exceptions to these regulations will be handled on an individual one-time basis. Individuals should contact the Division of Facilities in Dykstra 109.

- Information was compiled from the student handbook, which can be accessed at www.ksu.edu/osas/pdf/source.

demand such a request."

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator of student activities, said the Office of Student Activities and Services meets with every new group on campus to explain university policies.

"We meet with every new group and go over general stuff, like the policies and regulations that go with having a student group. We refer to the student handbook for information," Harlan said.

Sump said if a message is inappropriate or does not include the organization's name, then the Division of Facilities will clean it off the sidewalk.

"Our grounds people or someone in the Division of Facilities will go and remove it," Sump said.

Some students say they usually read sidewalk chalk.

"I think that everyone reads sidewalk chalk. I don't think it makes people necessarily join clubs, but it may serve as a reminder for existing club members," said T.J. Tinkum, senior in biology and pre-med.

Additionally, some students simply enjoy seeing a bit of decoration as they walk around campus, said Rebecca Vail, senior in biology and secondary education.

"I've noticed a decline in the sidewalk chalk from last year to this year," Vail said. "I don't think that it necessarily has an impact on attendance by students; they either know about an event and go to the event if they can fit it into their schedule. But, it makes for nice decoration."

'Frozen' playwright accused of plagiarism

English playwright Bryony Lavery has been accused of plagiarizing passages from a criminal psychiatrist and a magazine writer in her Tony Award-nominated play about a serial killer and his psychiatrist.

Dr. Dorothy Otnow Lewis and Malcolm Gladwell of the New Yorker said they had found at least 12 instances of plagiarism in "Frozen," which earned a Tony nomination for best play this year. Biographical and thematic details had also been taken from a New Yorker profile Gladwell wrote about Lewis in 1997 and from Lewis' 1998 book, "Guilty by Reason of Insanity," the two charged.

"I was staggered by this," Lewis told the Associated Press in a telephone interview. She said that when she read the script she found "page after page, paragraph after paragraph" based on her life and work, including dialogue and personal anecdotes.

Lewis said she had turned down offers from other people seeking the rights to her story or book.

"I wasn't ready to do that yet," she said.

Marilyn Manson's drummer injured in fall

Shock rocker Marilyn Manson's drummer broke his wrist and suffered a slight concussion in a fall from the stage at an event in Germany, organizers said Saturday.

Drummer Ginger Fish was taken to a hospital in Cologne for treatment after the incident Friday night and was released Saturday, the Viva television channel said in a statement.

Fish, whose real name is Kenny Wilson, fell off the stage as the band performed a cover version of Depeche Mode's "Personal Jesus" at an award ceremony at the city's Kolarena. It wasn't immediately clear what prompted the fall.

Sheen stumps for former producer's campaign

Actor Martin Sheen did some real-life politicking for a congressional candidate who used to work on his television series "The West Wing."

Sheen, who portrays fictional president Josiah Bartlett on the series, attended private fund-raisers Saturday in Charlotte and Richmond County for 8th District congressional candidate Beth Troutman, who worked four years in Los Angeles as assistant to the executive producer of "The West Wing."

He finished the day at a party at the Raleigh home of former Ambassador Jeanette Hyde.

He made his only public appearance in Kannapolis, a Cabarrus County mill town that lost thousands of jobs last year when a Pillowtex plant shut down.

"I'm supporting Beth's campaign for Congress," Sheen said, standing across the street from the plant. "This is a clear indication of what is happening all over this country."

Jimi Hendrix's brother denied royalties

A judge upheld a will Friday excluding the brother of late guitar legend Jimi Hendrix from the musician's posthumous releases, royalties and merchandise. The case — the latest of several that have entangled the Hendrix estate in the last decade — concerns the last will of Jimi's father, Al Hendrix, who inherited the rights to Jimi's music when the rock star died in 1970.

Jimi's brother, Leon, says he was unfairly written out of the will at the behest of his stepsister, Janie Hendrix, who runs the company in charge of the estate, Experience Hendrix LLC, with Jimi's cousin, Robert Hendrix. Superior Court Judge Jeffrey Ramsdell upheld the will.

Gamers from around America battle at Kansas Game Day

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Jason Prikins and Chris Stevenson, Manhattan residents, look at cards while Chris Drope, Salina resident, prepares to lay down his cards during a game of Warlord. The objective of the game is to defeat the opponent by strategically playing certain cards in a specific order.

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 50 people played make-believe Saturday in the Union Ballroom.

People from across Kansas and other states came to the Kansas Game Day, which was sponsored by the Campus Gamers Guild, to play games such as Warlord, Marvel or War Machine, among others, said Raymond McCubrey, guild president and graduate student in statistics.

McCubrey said CGG wanted to bring people with similar interest together.

"They wanted to have an event where people could come here from out of state and compete with them," he said.

Saturday's event was the first held by CGG, but members of the guild often travel out of state to similar conferences, he said.

"We go out of state, and we meet people and develop communities," McCubrey said. "It's not just a bunch of people at a table doing nothing. It's more of a community."

Everyone was welcome at the event, with the ages ranging from 12 to 40, he said. Experience also was not necessary had someone wanted to learn.

"When we see a new player who wants to play, often enough we give them free cards and introduce them to the game. If they decide they like it, they'll purchase more," McCubrey said.

Throughout the day there were tournaments of varying card games, board games and sword fights, he said. Competitors also were allowed to challenge others individually.

The difference with these card games and other card games is every deck is different, McCubrey said.

"Everyone has their own deck," he said. "It's your own personalized pokeydeck."

Cards and other games were purchased from Patrick's Crows Nest's booth throughout the day. Not all games needed to be purchased because some competitions involved players using their own collections, McCubrey said.

Randall Harris, Warlord organizer and sophomore in open-option, said games could get competitive but not too heated.

"Most of us share a communal love for the games," he said. "We try to show our skills while playing the games."

Harris said he thought the turnout was good for the event.

"We had about twice as many people as expected," he said.

Kim Coder, Manhattan resident, said she's been playing card games for more than five years.

"I got involved in it because a lot of my friends played it," she said.

Coder said she knew about Game Day because she is friends with the people involved.

"These are always fun," she said.

Florida rattled as Jeanne becomes season's 4th hurricane

By Deborah Hastings
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STUART, Fla. — Hurricane Jeanne barreled up Florida's east coast early Sunday with 120 mph wind and drenching rain, tearing off rooftops, hurling debris through the air and sending huge waves crashing into buildings. More than a million people were without power.

The Category 3 storm became the fourth hurricane to pummel Florida in a single season, something that has not happened since 1886 when Texas was the target. The three other hurricanes — Charley, Frances and Ivan — have all hit within the last six weeks.

Debris left from the other storms became airborne as Jeanne made landfall shortly before midnight near the southern tip of Hutchinson Island near Stuart, about 35 miles north of West Palm Beach. The same area was ravaged by Frances just three weeks ago.

Rain whipped sideways in sheets and sections of road were washed out by pounding waves as Jeanne came ashore. The 400-mile diameter storm then swirled into central Florida, an area saturated by rain from two previous hurricanes.

At the Ocean Breeze trailer park in Jensen Beach, roofs of mobile homes were peeled back like the lids of sardine cans. Computer printers, hair dryers and propane canisters littered the road. Metal sidings clanged in the wind.

Just down the road, Judy and Peirce Braun were relieved because their yellow and white house was basically untouched.

"I'm almost grateful," Judy Braun said Sunday. "We have all of our shingles and most of our fence."

At least a foot of water rushed through some streets in Vero Beach, where about half of the 232 trailers at Fairlane Harbor Mobile Home Estates had mostly wind damage.

"The last three weeks have been horrific and just when we start to turn the corner, this happens," said Joe Stawara, the park's owner-manager.

The previous hurricanes caused billions of dollars in damage and killed at least 70 people. One person was electrocuted in Miami early Sunday after touching a downed power line.

Max Mayfield, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami, said the similar paths of Jeanne and Frances were remarkable. Mayfield said it was the "first time ever that we know of" that two hurricanes landed so close in place and time.

A bridge from Jensen Beach to Hutchinson Island was flooded and impassable early Sunday. Angry swells licked pieces of mobile homes out to sea.

At one of the causeway bridges leading to the barrier island, a sailboat bashed against the seawall and sank. Within minutes, all that remained above water was less than a foot of its yellow mast.

Jeanne made a turn to the north over central Florida and was expected to stay inland over Georgia and the Carolinas through Tuesday. By early Sunday, it had weakened to a Category 2 storm with 110-mph top sustained winds, but its 400-mile diameter covered most of the central part of the Florida Peninsula, including Tampa and Orlando.

Rainfall totals of 5 to 10 inches were expected in the storm's path, and flooding could be a major concern because previous hurricanes had saturated the ground and filled canals, rivers and lakes.

About 1.2 million homes and businesses were without power Sunday, including much of Palm Beach County. Even before Jeanne hit, some 80,000 people had no electricity in the panhandle following Ivan, and officials feared many could be without power for three weeks or more.

In Fort Pierce and Port St. Lucie, several people were rescued from homes during the relative calm of Jeanne's eye. No one was injured, but the residents "didn't think they were going to make it through the storm," St. Lucie County sheriff's Capt. Nate Spera said Sunday.

Two million people had been urged to evacuate. State officials said more than 42,500, many with homes already damaged by Frances, stayed at shelters.

"Before I left home, I prayed over my house and I told God it was in his hands," said Ada Dent, who went to a shelter in West Palm Beach with her 2-year-old grandson.

In Stuart, parts of the water-proof roof covering at Martin Memorial Medical Center blew off, said administrative nursing supervisor Sharon Andre. One person was rescued elsewhere in Stuart after part of a condominium roof collapsed.

About 400 people were transferred from a shelter at an elementary school in Melbourne after parts of its roof flew off, police Lt. Jeff Koska said. No one was injured, and the evacuees were taken to another shelter, he said.

About 100 people at a similar shelter in Fort Pierce were transferred after its roof started leaking, but no one was hurt.

In Cocoa Beach about 80 miles north of Stuart, Paul and Ann Jutras weathered another storm in their reinforced house that they claimed was hurricane-proof.

Sitting two blocks from the Atlantic Ocean, the structure has two roofs — in case one is damaged.

In Frances, "we got pounded for 37 hours, but the wind would blow for about 20 or 25 minutes and there would be a lull. This one, it's just not letting up at all," Paul Jutras said.

At 9 a.m. EDT, Jeanne was centered about 15 miles south-east of Bartow and about 50 miles east-southeast of Tampa. It was moving west-northwest at 12 mph. Earlier, Jeanne tore across the Bahamas, leaving some neighborhoods submerged under 6 feet of water.

No deaths or serious injuries were reported there, but the storm was earlier blamed for more than 1,500 deaths in floods in Haiti.

Jeanne followed Charley, which struck Aug. 13 and devastated southwest Florida; Frances, which struck Labor Day weekend; and Ivan, which blasted the western Panhandle when it made landfall in nearby Alabama on Sept. 16.

Bomb threat results in emergency landing

By Beth Gardiner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — A bomb threat that mentioned Iraq forced a New York-bound Greek airliner to make an emergency landing Sunday at London's Stansted Airport escorted by military jets, authorities said.

An airport spokeswoman said an Athens newspaper had received a phone call saying there was a bomb on board the Olympic Airlines plane.

"Flight 411 Olympic for America has a bomb for Iraq," a caller to the Ethnos daily said, according to a tape the newspaper made available to journalists. In a second call, a voice that sounded like a different person said, "Are you listening? Flight 411 Olympic for America, bomb. America will see. Six o'clock message for you."

Authorities immediately notified the pilot of the call, and he asked for a military escort.

Britain's Royal Air Force scrambled planes to assist the airliner, the Ministry of Defense said.

The plane, headed from Athens to New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport, landed safely at Stansted at 3:30 p.m., an airport spokeswoman said.

The spokeswoman said the plane, with 301 passengers on board, landed in "full emergency" status and was safely evacuated.

Cats make strong showing at Head of Des Moines regatta

K-State comes away with 3 top-5 finishes

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

K-State finished with three top-five finishes this weekend at the Head of Des Moines regatta in Des Moines, Iowa.

K-State's "A" boat placed first in the Open Four race with a time of 22:30. The Wildcats' "B", "C" and "D" boats took 10th, 11th and 12th place, respectively.

In the Open Eight with 17 boats competing, K-State's "B" boat finished second with a time of 19:41, behind Iowa's "A" boat, finishing with a time of 19:37. The Wildcats' "A" boat took fifth in the race with a time of 20:36.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said he was pleased with the way the team competed.

"It was a good weekend for the girls. They performed how I hoped they would perform," Sweeney said.

Sweeney said even though the "A" boat won the Open Four, the team did not have its best race.

"It's something we need to work on. They rowed well and did a good job winning the event, but they are inexperienced and they didn't race it," he said.

Junior Stephanie Black made

"A lot of things are different. I feel like I talk to her more than the experienced coxswains from last year. We have a lot more communication compared to last year, and she did really well in the race and pulled us through it."

Linzi Hauldren

her Wildcat varsity debut as the coxswain for the Open Four "B" boat and the Open Four "A" boat.

Overall, Black said she thought the team's performance was solid at the weekend race.

"The races went well. As a team we try to focus on consistency and rhythm, and we did a good job with our rhythm and power," Black said.

Black said with several Wildcats moving up to the varsity level, the team is trying to integrate a new technique and put it all together for races to come.

Senior Linzi Hauldren, a varsity-boat veteran, said Black's presence was a positive for the team.

"A lot of things are different. I feel like I talk to her more than the experienced coxswains from last year. We have a lot more communication compared to last year, and she did really well in the race and pulled us through it," Hauldren said.

Sweeney said the race showed that the Wildcats are closing the gap with talented teams like Iowa.

Hauldren agreed. "Looking at this race, I have very high expectations for the rest of the season," Hauldren said. "I hope we continue what we're doing and keep getting faster."

COLUMN | Atrocious defense should be blamed for Chiefs' weak play; issue requires a complete makeover

the goal line versus an interception.

In professional football, you can't have a one-man team and expect to win.

That's exactly what the Chiefs have, and that's exactly why they could finish at the bottom of the AFC West.

Their defense is atrocious. Denver and Carolina punked them in weeks one and two, and I wouldn't hang my hat on keeping the Texans in check for most of Sunday's game.

After all, they are the Texans, and when it mattered most, the defense couldn't stop Houston, giving up the final 10 points of the game in the fourth quarter.

I know this sounds crazy, Carl Peterson, but you can't keep intact an entire defense that was one of the worst in the NFL last year, change the defensive coordinator and expect the problem to be solved.

The Chiefs' defense needed a complete makeover this summer, not Gunther Cunningham, and now they are paying the price.

If it's any consolation Chiefs' fans, I've seen this before.

Do you want to see where Kansas City is heading?

Check out the Oakland Raiders' season last year.

Bickering among players and coaches? Check.

Horrible defense? Check.

Players getting in trouble off the field? Check.

The similarities are striking.

In the Raiders' case, the team came off an incredible season only to underachieve the next year. It's happening to the Chiefs right now.

The schedule ahead is brutal for the red and yellow.

Next week, the Chiefs travel to Baltimore, which usually isn't good times for any team, let alone one that's searching to find its identity.

Road trips to Jacksonville and Tennessee are coming up, as are visits from Indianapolis and New England. And I haven't even mentioned battles with division rivals.

Sorry Chiefs, you're done. Sunday was the beginning of the end.

I'll see you at 4-12.

serving team, and so we had to adjust to that," Fritz said. "Defensively, we played well, and we served very aggressively and had some key blocks and touches at key points in the match."

The Wildcats hit the road again Wednesday for a match at Oklahoma.

Fritz said the win at Missouri is a step in right direction for K-State as it prepares for future Big 12 road matches.

"We needed to be able to do it over (at Missouri)," she said. "We talk about bottling what we have in Ahearn, because it's so difficult to match the intensity and atmosphere we have at home."

"Now we have to do the same thing on the road."

PILLOW FIGHT | 2nd attempt at record possible fraternities, sororities, and residence halls. They also reached out to the community.

"Some people went to the schools and let them know about it," she said. "I was happy to see so many families attend since it's harder to promote to them."

Patton said the community turnout was fun to see, but they were still 500 people away from the world record.

"I was hoping for a lot more people to break the record," she said.

The drawback in the number of people gave them some ideas to work with for next year, Patton said.

"We learned a lot from this," she said. "Maybe we should have it later in the afternoon, when more people are awake. Or we can start promoting it earlier."

Above all, she said, she can't wait until next year.

"I really can't wait until we do this again, and we can use what we learned to break the world record," she said. "I just hope more college students get involved next time."

FIREFIGHTERS | Trainees use caution, qualify for rescue teams

On Friday, the training culminated with fire fighters attempting to rescue infant and adult-size mannequins from a collapsed garage at Juliette and Poyntz. Furniture was added to the garage to make it more realistic.

"They are doing a fantastic job," said Scott Clark, chief training officer with the Manhattan Fire Department. "In anything like this, it's key in doing it safely rather than any time limit."

Clark said the rescue team was working conservatively in rescuing the mannequins.

"If those were real people, the tendency is to possibly cut corners," he said. "They take more chances, especially if they can hear the person."

"Getting the chance to learn and practice is extremely valuable."

While the majority of rescue operations in Manhattan are vehicle extractions after a car accident, if bigger tragedies do occur, proper training is essential.

"This is more difficult because it's not something that happens everyday," Clark said. "It's a lot more dangerous to try it if you don't know what you're doing."

More than 40 of Manhattan's 76 fire fighters are now qualified for rescue teams. The men training with Roco will go back and train the others in their own departments.

"To be qualified is not an easy process," Clark said. "In this region, our rescue team is uniquely qualified."

Having several departments from the region trained will help in the event of a major catastrophe like a Tuttle Creek dam failure, O'Connell said.

"The World Trade Center is a whole different world. It was overwhelming that all local resources were shot," he said. "It's similar to if there was a dam failure because of an earthquake. You'd have to bring outside people in."

No matter what tragic event occurs though, the risk for fire fighters is always high.

"There's an inherent danger in what we do," Buddy Caskey, Roco instructor, said. "What we do is eliminate all the dangers you can. You make a risk versus benefit analysis. All firemen are going to take that risk. We teach them to be safe when they do it."

WEFALD ADDRESS | Speech touts student, faculty achievements morale as another key problem facing the university. The faculty are teaching more students, getting more research grants, taking on additional advising duties and have seen their performance expectations raised from year to year.

"They have accepted these additional burdens and expectations without complaint," Wefald said. "However, they see their buying power erode as they go from year to year with little or no salary increases."

Despite these setbacks, Wefald said K-State has come a long way since 1986 — his first year as president. Many departments and programs rank highly among other land-grant universities in the United States.

In that time, K-State students rank first among public four-year colleges and universities among Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholarship recipients.

K-State has seen increases in scientific research funding, private fund-raising and total assets as well, Wefald said.

"We believe that we have put in place the structure and the personnel at the Foundation that will enable us to continue in this direction," Wefald said. "In fact, we are in the beginning stages of a $500 million capital campaign."

Wefald said K-State has set an ambitious goal and is well on its way to achieving it.

"I want to assure you, our faculty, our students, and our friends, that we will not give up and that we will find ways to overcome the impediments and to move the university forward," Wefald said.

FORUM | Discussion centers on current political climate

Audience members said many people did not want to believe Moore's assertions about President Bush in the film.

"I already knew about the connections and that this administration had corruption at several levels," Matt Peterworth, senior in architectural engineering, said. "It seems to me this knowledge is common to the liberals, and the conservatives want to turn a blind eye to that."

Members of the audience also said our society is one where questioning the president and the government's actions casts them as un-supportive of troops and the country.

"I think there's a culture of 'don't question the government.' If you question the government, you are being unpatriotic," Sandy Burnett, senior in political science, said.

Some members of the audience said people should take the issues raised seriously and keep an open mind to the debate.

Audience members also discussed the importance of voting even though many consider Kansas to be a Republican state.

"I think a part of the problem is that we feel so marginalized, that our votes don't count because we're a red state," Mickayla Fink, graduate student in English, said. "Liberal people are out there."

Janette said she was pleased that the forum achieved its goals.

"We can have a conversation about the issues that is careful, thoughtful, respectful and intelligent," she said.

More Fort Riley soldiers accused of Iraqi murders

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two more Fort Riley soldiers have been charged with murdering an Iraqi civilian.

A military statement identified the soldiers as Staff Sgt. Johnny Horne Jr. and Staff Sgt. Cardenas Alban, both from Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment, according to the Associated Press. Alban of Carson, Calif., joined the Army in 1997. Horne of Winston-Salem, N.C., joined the Army in 1999.

Sam Robinson, Fort Riley spokeswoman, said she had no further details and directed all questions to the 1st Calvary Division in Iraq.

This is the third set of murder charges in the last month involving Fort Riley soldiers.

On Sept. 22, the military announced that Sgt. Michael P. Williams of Memphis, Tenn., and Spc. Brent W. May of Salem, Ohio, were charged with premeditated murder in the death of three Iraqis. Williams also is being charged with obstruction of justice and making a false statement.

The soldiers are serving in the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry — the same unit as Horne and Alban. Approximately 800 soldiers from that unit are serving their second term in Iraq.

In an unrelated incident on Sept. 15, Sgts. Eric J. Colvin of Pappilion, Neb., and Aaron R. Stanley of Bismarck, N.D., were charged in the shooting death of Staff Sgt. Matthew H. Werner of Oxnard, Calif. The incident occurred in Clay County, 30 miles north of Fort Riley.

Spc. Christopher D. Hymer of Nevada, Mo., was wounded and died Saturday in a Wichita hospital.

Colvin and Stanley face first-degree murder charges and remain jailed on $1 million bonds. They are scheduled to appear in court on Nov. 3.

School funding formula in question, lawsuit reaches State Supreme Court

By Tony Herrman
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas schools are still in limbo.

As part of a lawsuit that has been ongoing since 1999, the State Supreme Court will decide as early as Oct. 15 — when it returns to session — whether the current state school funding formula is constitutional.

The formula, which distributes funding to Kansas schools, says any district with an enrollment of less than 1,726 students gets low enrollment weighting — extra funding because of small enrollment. Two-thirds of the schools in Kansas meet the criteria.

"That means in one year they get that much more money for almost the same number of students," USD 383 Superintendent Sharol Little said. "As a tax payer I would be irate, because that's why they can provide almost one computer per student, have low class sizes, amenities that I can't begin to afford."

During the 2002-2003 school year Riley County Grade School, which is part of a district with an enrollment of 618, had only 14 fewer students than Northview Elementary School — part of 383's enrollment of 5,121. However, Riley County Grade School received about $1,400 more per student.

"They say they need it, because they are small," Little said. "It takes more to keep teachers in their district. I'm from western Kansas so I know; I listen to that dialog all the time, 'I live in an isolated community so I need that money.'"

"I say, yes, but you're small by necessity. If your child rides the bus more than one hour each way that is by definition small by necessity. In general those schools that receive low enrollment weighting, it's not fair because it doesn't take much effort."

Larry Bowers, superintendent for Riley County schools, began his career as a student teacher in

On-campus ice cream production becomes an edible education

By Saraswathi Shanth Kumar
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Starting with milk from the K-State dairy farm, Call Hall ice cream is a local production.

Lori McVay, the plant manager of Call Hall ice cream, said the ice cream at Call Hall is started with an ice cream mix.

The mix is frozen in a single barrel freezer. In big factories there are triple barrel freezers where three flavors can be churned out at the same time, McVay said.

Every spring semester, food science students go to Call Hall to learn to make cheese, yogurt, sour cream and ice cream. They let the students experiment and come up with new flavors.

"Last time one of the students had come up with a flavor called pink lemonade," McVay said.

Most of the new flavors come from the students and full time employees, McVay said.

Call Hall employs two full-time positions and three student positions.

The ice creams are then manually put in half gallon and three gallon cartons.

Air is an important ingredient for making ice cream. After the mix is done, it is pumped to the back of the freezer where the air gets mixed

Joan Shull and Everett Hilty, both of Manhattan, enjoy an ice cream cone while sitting inside Call Hall. Shull and Hilty make the trip for ice cream regularly. Shull said she thinks Hilty moved here from Colorado for the K-State dairy.

Committee finalizes radio station budget plan

By Scott Seel
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Privilege Fee Committee finalized its proposal Monday for Student Senate on the overall budget for KSDB 91.9 FM.

The station will receive $56,180.82 in 2005 and then an annual 3-percent increase after that. It originally requested $203,009.08 for 2005 to support a 24-hour newsroom, and then a 3-percent increase on the remaining $153,009.08 after that. The request was cut because the proposal was scoffed at by the committee, which said the 24-hour newsroom would require a student referendum.

Aaron Leiker, news director at KSDB, said this part of the proposal was especially important to him.

"I'm really sad to see it go. I was not going to be able to work in the newsroom, but I had high hopes for what KSDB could do with it," Leiker said.

Station Manager Candy Walton said she was somewhat confused about the committee's decision on the newsroom.

"I do not understand why it was dismissed so easily when the new studio in the Union was funded by student privilege fees from the same funds without a referendum," Walton said.

In addition, the committee cut the station's repair and replacement budget request of $23,296.22 — after the amount requested for the denied 24-hour newsroom was subtracted — to $20,193.

Leiker, as well as Walton and Program Director Andrew Latham, said they continued to have a positive outlook.

"We're just really, really happy they took the time to think about it and care about it and figure out what we really need," Latham said. "They gave us an increase, and that is absolutely fabulous."

Leiker said while the outcome wasn't exactly what they had hoped for, he understood the committee's position.

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

Since I started writing a column for the Collegian, students have approached me with many interesting questions, some of which have been harder to answer than others.

I try to answer your questions to the best of my ability. One of those questions I have been diligently re-searching is, "Does the Collegian as a newspaper support any presidential candidate, and if so should they?"

This is an issue many of you have asked about. As with many other questions like this, giving you a clear answer is not so easy.

The Collegian is a student newspaper, meaning there should be a lack of bias in our news reporting.

The Collegian does not support candidates in local races, including Student Senate. This does not mean the editorial board will not publish opinions seeming to embrace one particular side of an issue.

The writers on the Collegian staff are instructed to provide all the relevant sides of a story, such as covering the viewpoints of all the candidates in a story about upcoming elections.

Newspapers in general should want to show their readers they are unbiased, especially when it comes to presidential elections.

Some readers have pointed out the Collegian seems to be a little more liberal than conservative in the past few years.

That may be so, depending on the author of a particular opinion column.

After hearing from some of you on this issue, a portion of the Collegian readership thinks it is not right for the Collegian to support a certain candidate or political party.

The Collegian Editorial Board will be the only official voice in the paper to endorse a presidential candidate.

This does not prevent readers from writing letters to the editor in support of issues important to them. The Collegian has a duty to research all the issues involved in the presidential race and present them to the readers in a fair and balanced way.

We in the media are people, too. We have our own certain views on different issues involved in this race, and that's OK.

We try to be careful when writing articles on the different candidates to avoid crossing the boundary between objectivity and opinion.

QUICK QUIZ

Are you situated for the season?

1. When the Weather Channel lists the high temperature for tomorrow as 58:

A. You prep your regular tank top, shorts and sandals.
B. A heavy T-shirt and jeans will suit you just fine for walking to class.
C. You immediately drive to the store to pick up a new pair of long underwear and a parka.

2. Your weekend plans consist of:

A. Grabbing a few hours of tanning in the great outdoors.
B. Enjoying the changing foliage.
C. Staying inside, bundled up under a heavy blanket with a cup of hot cocoa or tea.

3. You are currently working:

A. On your summer job, naturally.
B. A work-study or on-campus position.
C. On finishing your applications for internships for spring and summer 2005.

4. What's the next holiday event you're looking forward to?

A. Fireworks on Independence Day.
B. The festivities between fall break and Halloween.
C. The stockings have been hung, the presents have been wrapped and you've left milk and cookies out for Santa Claus.

5. Your study sessions are in preparation:

A. For entry exams for honors classes that closed more than a month ago.
B. Midterms.
C. Finals.

If you answered mostly A, no one told you summer is over. It might as well be June as far as you are concerned.

If you answered mostly B, your calendar is up-to-date and ready for the coming months.

If you answered mostly C, you'll most likely sweat to death while walking around campus during the next few weeks in your thermal gear. Your preparations for this winter rival that of animals that hibernate for extended periods of time.

Habitat marks 10 years

Anniversary mired by lack of land for houses

By Stephanie Swoboda
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan Habitat for Humanity is celebrating 10 years of services, but they may not have enough land to build houses for the 98 families who need it this year.

These families have applied and been put on a waiting list. They anticipate the call from Habitat for Humanity that lets them know they qualify and they now have a plot of land to begin construction.

"We don't ever want to select a family and have nowhere to put them," said Kristen Wilmes, business director for Habitat for Humanity.

This is becoming more of a problem for Habitat for Humanity, Wilmes said.

"There is some land, but it is very expensive," said Ali Brown, senior in marketing and management and K-State Habitat member.

Habitat competes with big rental units for land at the City Commission meetings,

"This is a big problem right now. We don't have anywhere to build. We can only build within a 10-mile radius of Manhattan, but we can't pay $50,000 for a lot."

Kristen Wilmes
BUSINESS DIRECTOR FOR HABITAT FOR HUMANITY

Wilmes said.

"This is a big problem right now, we don't have anywhere to build. We can only build within a 10-mile radius of Manhattan, but we can't pay $50,000 for a lot," Wilmes said.

All the money for the houses is donated and this year Habitat for Humanity is looking to students to help them bring in more funds.

"We are trying to get $10 from 10,000 people," Brown said.

Brown said in the past Habitat has looked to the community for funds for their projects.

"Most of our fund-raisers don't target students and this is a one time thing. With a lower amount, students can get involved," Wilmes said.

Habitat for Humanity plans to be a little creative in order to encourage students to donate their $10 toward the cause.

"There are thoughts of doing a competition between some of the greek and other student organizations. Also we may offer free self defense lessons to students who donate ten dollars," Wilmes said.

Habitat for Humanity plans to use the $100,000 to develop a large area of land.

Global security subject of debate

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas Campus Compact will be having a discussion about American power and global security at 7 tonight in the Hemisphere Room on the fifth floor of Hale Library.

Mary Hale Tolar, director of Kansas Campus Compact, said the event, known as People Speak, is an excellent opportunity for students and other members of the community to get involved.

"It's really an opportunity to engage others and engage a topic to help formulate your own opinions and learn from others who disagree," Tolar said. "Practicing active citizenship is something everyone needs to do."

The discussion, to be led by graduate students in speech communications, will be a modified Lincoln-Douglas issues debate for the first 20 to 30 minutes, followed by an hour of moderated discussion.

"The goal of the debate is to give the audience a common experience to respond to," she said. "It's not a debate like we're used to seeing."

Tolar said she believed such formats are becoming less common in society.

"This is a lost art; this kind of thing used to be done all the time with town hall meetings," she said. "We don't do that anymore; now we have 'Crossfire.'"

Ben Procter, student coordinator for Campus Compact and senior in political science, said students play a crucial role in the event.

"At Kansas State, students are uniquely involved in the project because the two people presenting this year's topic aren't experts per se," he said. "Rather, they are graduate students at Kansas State, and they are members of the Kansas State forensics squad who have taken the time to research the topic and have prepared a presentation."

Procter said the event is very important, especially given the upcoming elections, and such events help people become better citizens.

"Clearly one of the most important things that our nation has is the power of democracy," he said. "The only way to make our democracy more powerful is to engage in what's called the deliberative democracy. That way we are not only making decisions, but are making informed decisions."

TO THE POINT School finance formula needs revisions

With a possible decision looming in the court case involving the funding formula for Kansas schools, all citizens of this state should be watching with a critical eye.

As the people of Manhattan and many other cities and school districts around the state know all too well, money is getting a little tight.

It looks more and more likely that some schools in Manhattan will be closed forever.

Something has to be done.

The only question left is who is to do the dirty work?

Too often people in Topeka obsess over this detail.

In the end, the students don't care.

What is important is that every student, regardless of where they live, how much money they have or what color their skin is, receives the best education money can buy.

If that means the court makes a ruling forcing the Legislature to do something or the Legislature takes action on their own, then so be it.

Something has to be done, and in the end it doesn't matter who does it, as long as the interests of the students are the motivating factor, and not a fear of alienating voters with tax increases that may be a necessary evil.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

In his Landon lecture, Arthur Sulzberger, publisher of The New York Times, said, "A sizable portion of our audience considers news to be just another form of reality programming, some variation of 'Fear Factor' or the 'Apprentice'."

I will let Mr. Sulzberger's malicious slandering of "Fear Factor" and "The Apprentice" slide, because CBS has recently led the charge in proving that its news is, in fact, not a form of reality.

The "60 Minutes" program on CBS News aired a report on Sept. 8, which contained damning revelations about President Bush's National Guard service. It was a great scoop, and Dan Rather was ready to put another notch in his journalistic belt.

Only one problem: The story was based around a core of forged memos, and obvious forgeries at that. Feces, meet fan.

The discrediting of the memos emanated from the blogosphere. A blog, www.powerlineblog.com, acted as the primary clearing-house, where various experts e-mailed in their opinions on the veracity of the memos.

Another blog, www.indcjournal.com interviewed Dr. Philip Bouffard, an expert in document examination.

Meanwhile, ye olde media mobilized, albeit ever so slowly. The Boston Globe, owned by The New York Times Company, interviewed Dr. Bouffard after having been scooped by INDC Journal.

In this interview, the Globe misquoted Dr. Bouffard so badly that he went back to indcjournal to get his side of the story out. On its Web site, CBS News seized on the Globe story, in an article which has since "disappeared" down the memory hole.

CBS News furthered the Globe's misquote-based story, even adding its own journalistic flair by misspelling Philip Brouffard's name as Phillip Broussard.

CBS stood by its forged memos for an agonizing seven days, an act deemed "slow, public suicide" by columnist Mark Steyn in the Chicago Sun Times.

When Rather did concede he may have been duped, he made an unintentionally hilarious plea to his big media brethren, encapsulated in this Washington Post headline: "Rather Concedes Papers Are Suspect / CBS Anchor Urges Media to Focus On Bush Service."

Translation: "Yeah, the story is fake, but remember how much we hate Bush?"

Even The New York Times briefly flirted with this storyline. The secretary of the alleged and since deceased memo-writer was brought in to vouch for the truth behind the admittedly forged memos.

Again, the headline of the story says it all: "Memos on Bush Are Fake but Accurate, Typist Says." "Fake but Accurate?" Now there's a standard for journalism!

Now, the memos are universally discredited, CBS has set up an independent review, and the focus of the story has shifted to finding out the documents' source.

Bill Burkett, seething anti-Bush partisan, provided the documents to CBS, but it's unclear who provided the documents to him, or if he made them himself.

Therefore, at this point the floor is open to wild speculation. I think it was the one-armed man.

Think about it; Max Cleland, who has become increasingly unchallenged ever since baselessly accusing Republicans of questioning his patriotism, was contacted by Burkett in August about a possible counterattack to the Swift Vets ad.

Regardless of who the documents are ultimately traced to, there is a larger lesson here. Big media are no longer the gatekeepers of information, no longer some sort of semi-divine Prometheus bearing the truth to the ignorant unwashed.

Guerilla media, such as blogs, have penetrated through the ironic shroud of secrecy surrounding the news media and uncovered a startling arrogance and contempt for those who dare question the premeditated storyline of the day.

To mix metaphors, the curtain has been pulled back and big media is naked.

Preserve health by respecting liquor laws

What's so appealing about getting smashed on liquor or beer, puking in a friend's car at the end of the night, and winding up with a hangover the next day?

What's so fun about repeating the same episode every weekend in the name of enjoyment or socializing with friends?

Many college students, especially the underage group, feel peer pressure to drink at parties. I must challenge the idea that drinking is part of being cool or necessary to "smell like a man."

There is nothing adventurous about buying alcohol for an underage friend. A 19-year-old honor student, Samantha Spady, died earlier this month at the Sigma Pi fraternity house at Colorado State University after a night of heavy drinking.

According to the Denver Post, 19 people were later cited for alcohol-related offenses, including buying liquor for a minor.

While Spady's case got national headlines, it was certainly not unusual. The Task Force on College Drinking found that roughly 1,400 deaths, 70,000 rapes and 500,000 injuries occur every year in relation to college drinking.

According to BBC and Daily Herald, speedy intake of alcohol with more frequency than your liver can remove it from the body may make you "black out" or become completely unconscious.

In this state of mind, you are more likely to drive drunk or have casual sex that may lead to unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases.

During the teen years when your brain is still developing, dehydration due to heavy drinking causes your brain to shrink away from the skull. A study at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center says this effect can damage the part of brain related to the memory and learning skills.

According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, 25 percent of all alcohol sold in the United States is consumed by those under the age of 21.

The laws for buying and selling alcohol should be practiced strictly and watched carefully by more than just liquor store clerks, bouncers and police officers.

It's a scientific fact that alcohol is a poison. Treating it with respect and handling it with care is not going to make you less cool. Keeping yourself and your friends within legal and ethical boundaries should be good enough to show everyone what a mature, decent human being you are.

To practice moral values in this regard, you should make yourself aware of rules about drinking in residence halls, around other campus areas, and even when you want to drive.

It is illegal for anyone to drive while drunk, but if you are under 21 and you have a blood alcohol concentration above .02 percent, you may lose your license. For most people, one beer will put them at or over that level.

According to K-State's Alcoholic Beverage Policy under Chapter 3053, following rules should be known to everyone:

3.2-percent beer may be possessed or consumed by those of legal age in private rooms and approved public areas of residence halls

3.2-percent beer may be served in non-classroom areas for events for which the service of alcoholic liquor has been approved.

You can read a detailed version of policies about on-campus use of alcohol on K-State's Web site.

It's the moral responsibility of all students to observe and practice these rules and regulations strictly. Showing a relaxed attitude towards these laws or permitting friends to drink freely is playing with fire.

K-State's Pre-Law Society's alumni, structure prove its benefits for students interested in legal careers

Editor,

There are currently hundreds of pre-law students at K-State. We hail from diverse backgrounds and various fields: small towns and large cities, from engineering to history.

We have different ideas, assorted political beliefs, divergent ambitions, but we are all interested in the law and learning how a career in law might fit us.

We have all heard and enjoy lawyer jokes, those myths about the profession and people we call lawyers.

Lawyers are truly good, decent, caring, principled, hard-working, intelligent, patriotic men and women who seek to protect our republic, defend our democracy and look out for you and I.

K-State's Pre-Law Society is proud to have numerous distinguished alumni - Wildcats who have gone to such elite law schools as Harvard, Stanford, Chicago, Duke and excellent regional law schools. Our alumni include judges, professors, attorneys, professionals and a former Supreme Court law clerk.

If your passion is discovering the truth, helping others and seeing justice served, then pre-law may be a great program for you.

Pre-law students can major in any field without extra classes. We have several officer positions, providing enhanced opportunities for leadership, networking, and learning about the law. I have enjoyed my two years as the Pre-Law Society's vice president and look forward to continued leadership in the Pre-Law Society.

I hope to see you at the next Pre-Law Society meeting.

Local bar's requirement of U.S. form of identification penalizes, discriminates against international patrons

Editor,

As of late, I have noticed a trend beginning to occur when it comes to going to Rusty's in Aggieville: they don't like foreigners. They may not have a banner stating this policy, but they sure enforce it at the doors.

This semester I have tried to enter Rusty's three times.

Upon reaching the doors to Rusty's, I provide my identification to prove I am over 21. I pull out my Trinidad and Tobago National Identification Card and am invariably met with a strange stare.

Okay, granted, it's probably the first time the bouncers have seen a foreign ID, let alone one from a country which they most likely have no idea where it is, or even if it's a real country.

Still, it's obviously an official ID. It has all the relevant information on it: picture, date of birth, place of birth, height, national crest, even the color of my skin. All of this information does not seem to be enough to allow me into Rusty's. The common response is, "You need a US form of ID to enter." This is closely followed by, "Do you have a passport on you?"

First of all, is it federal or state law to not allow people with foreign IDs into bars? If it is, then Rusty's is the only one fulfilling this obligation. Second, how safe is it to carry your passport around with you, regardless of where you are?

This policy is completely discriminatory and unacceptable. We are being penalized for being foreign in a country that supposedly promotes diversity and acceptance of all people. Last time I checked, this concept of respecting cultural values is one of the country's founding principles.

From now on I plan to stick to Auntie Mae's, Rock-A-Belly's and any other bar that is more than happy to welcome foreigners like myself and I strongly urge others to do the same.

Increased access to student info system infringes liberties

Homeland Security-FBI information sharing plan lacks clarity, poses threat

MINNESOTA DAILY
U. MINNESOTA

MINNEAPOLIS - Foreign students will be getting more attention from "big brother." Last week, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security announced it will give the FBI direct access to the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System. The system contains students' biographical, financial and academic information.

This infringes on foreign students' civil liberties and likely will result in fewer students studying abroad in the United States.

The FBI feels foreign students pose a threat to national security, which falls under its jurisdiction. But to protect students' civil liberties, there should be limitations on what information to which the FBI has easy access.

In this issue, foreign students are not alone, though their status as noncitizens limits their options for recourse both legally and practically.

The FBI as an institution is poorly suited to protect civil liberties. It exists to investigate crime and protect us. This focus makes it hard for the FBI to consider abstract civil liberties, but someone has to. Current law protecting U.S. citizens, including students, is both troubling and as clear as mud.

Under the USA Patriot Act, to access private information, officials sometimes need a subpoena or warrant from a regular court, at other times, approval from the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act court, and in some instances, no outside approval at all.

On the other hand, the judiciary is better equipped to safeguard civil liberties. Judges are trained in the rule of law first and foremost, which includes a respect for civil liberties, though the amount of that respect differs from judge to judge.

This lack of clarity makes normative calls for action difficult. Still, we can say without reservation that all requests for private information, related to U.S. or foreign citizens, must at least go through the FISA court.

The FISA court by no means offers a person his or her day in court. It is highly secretive, and there is no adversarial representation.

Still, at least it is minimal judicial supervision. As for our safety, the FISA court considers national security its "pre-eminent role." It rarely denies law-enforcement requests and modifies them sparingly, to say the least.

More importantly, the 9/11 Commission's recommendation of a civil liberties board must become reality.

That reality must be what the commission, not the administration, has envisioned. It must be independent, nonpartisan and transparent.

The events of Sept. 11, 2001, changed how people look at security. But it doesn't necessarily follow that we must sacrifice all civil liberties. Clearly, there must be a workable balance.

While we feel ill-qualified to detail how that balance should look, the government's patronizing approach, which more or less entails repeating "trust us," becomes increasingly tiresome with each new policy.

Fall practice marks start of new season for Cats

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first pitch of the 2005 K-State baseball season isn't until February, but chapter two of the Brad Hill era has already begun.

Monday, marked the first day of fall practice at Tointon Family Stadium for the Wildcats under Hill, now in his second season as head coach at K-State. Hill said he could not wait to get back on the diamond with the team.

"It's been a long time, especially when you finished the way we did," Hill said. Indeed, last season did not end as K-State had hoped.

After starting the year 18-6, the Wildcats finished the season winning just eight of their last 32 on the way to a 26-30 overall record and a 4-23 conference record.

The poor finish still bothers junior right fielder Steve Murphy.

"It's a monkey on our backs we're going to try to tackle," Murphy said.

Murphy returns as the best bat in the Wildcat lineup from last season. As a sophomore, Murphy led the team with a .338 batting average and 40 RBI.

Murphy said along with senior outfielders Terry Blunt and Josh Dent, he hopes the trio can provide leadership for the team.

They might need it. With the loss of several seniors to graduation, the departure of players for personal reasons and several cuts made by Hill, a wave of newcomers make this a new-look K-State team.

Hill said some changes were necessary to move the program out of the Big 12 basement and into a contender.

"We felt like we needed to bring in another nucleus of players to take us to the next level," Hill said.

Though cuts and other departures caused a swirl of rumors in the off season, Hill said player movement is typical across the country.

"When you even look around the nation, players leave at even well-established programs," Hill said.

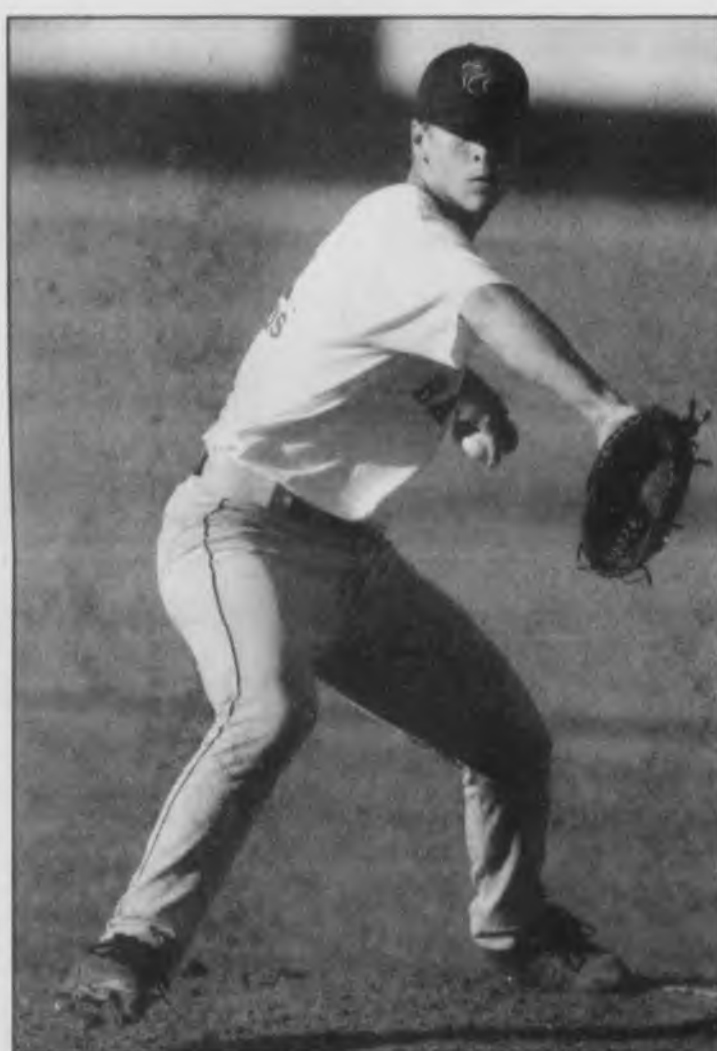

Murphy said although he was sad to see some of his teammates go, the changes were for the best.

"Personally, you're going to miss all the guys, because they all brought something to the table," Murphy said. "But this year it's more excitement. Talent-wise I don't think we were where we wanted to be."

One of the new faces at Tointon Family Stadium Monday was former All-American pitcher Josh Reynolds. Reynolds — who played for Hill at Central Missouri State from 1998 to 2000 — is a new addition to the Wildcat coaching staff, serving as a volunteer assistant coach.

With starting pitchers and last year's seniors Brett Bagley, Jim Ripley and Carlos Torres — a 15th round draft pick of the Chicago White Sox — now gone, Reynolds and pitching coach Sean McCann will have their hands full with staff development.

Reynolds said he hopes to teach the pitchers how to work with their mental approach to pitching.

"I want to try to help them out with the mental aspects of the game," Reynolds said. "I ask them what they're thinking, what caused them to make the mistakes and what they can do to fix them."

Hill said the bottom line is to make a name for Wildcat baseball this season.

"That's something that drives coaches — to not finish where you finished last year," Hill said.

Lengthy MLB season winds down as playoff contenders emerge

Both leagues have intensifying races for the postseason as the wild card takes shape

Good-bye pretenders, hello contenders.

A 162-game schedule that is nearly as worthless as the hockey season comes down to the final week.

With college football beginning conference play and the NFL entering week four, baseball countered with the end of the season — the only time to watch all nine innings of a game without switching to "Saved by the Bell" reruns.

The mundane game changes, players go all out, fans show up to games and don't just sit on their hands — and the players care.

A.L. WEST

Going into last night, Oakland led the division by only one game over Anaheim, who took two of three from the A's this past weekend.

Oakland starts its final week with four against the Seattle Mariners, whose only reason to play is for Ichiro Suzuki to chase the all-time record for hits in a season. Then, Oakland gets a home weekend series against the Angels.

With the wild card out of the picture, and the surge of the Boston Red Sox since they dropped the dead weight that was Nomar Garciaparra, the only way the Angels or Texas Rangers can make the playoffs is to overtake Oakland.

The Angels have the toughest road ahead, playing four at Texas and three at Oakland. Anaheim will be without Jose Guillen the rest of the year due to a team suspension, his third of the season. Guillen was batting .294 with 27 home runs and 104 RBI for Anaheim.

The Rangers finish with four against Anaheim and three at Seattle.

A.L. EAST

All of a sudden it is race time.

The New York Yankees are now barely holding on to their 3.5 game lead as of Monday, and are waiting for time to run out on the surging Red Sox, who are all but guaranteed to win the wild card with a 6-game lead, and seven to play.

The Yankees have all the offensive power to get them into the World Series once again. But when your most dangerous pitcher down the stretch is Orlando "el Duque" Hernandez, who you picked up on waivers, you're not a very deep staff or for that matter a good team.

N.L. WEST

The Los Angeles Dodgers got a bit of breathing room this past weekend, winning a three-game series at San Francisco — the first time they have taken a series on the road against the Giants in five years.

The Dodgers finish the season at home, with four against the Colorado Rockies and three against the hated Giants. I don't suspect any orange and black attire will be permitted into the stadium, unless it is accompanied by a cup of cold beer on top of the head.

N.L. WILD CARD

This is the Chicago Cubs only hope.

Trailing the St. Louis Cardinals by more games than are left, they take a Kate Moss-like wild-card lead into the final week of the season.

The Cubs play the rest of their games at the "Friendly Confines" of Wrigley Field. Four are against the lowly Cincinnati Reds, and three are against the Atlanta Braves, who already clinched their 13th consecutive division title last week.

San Francisco can either overtake the Cubs or Dodgers this final week. They have the toughest road ahead, though, playing four at San Diego and three against the Dodgers. It won't help that Barry Bonds injured his knee in Sunday's loss.

The Houston Astros rocketed up the standings going 17-6 so far in September.

As of Monday, the Astros are only 1.5 games behind the Cubs and finish with three at home against the Cardinals and Rockies.

Look out for the San Diego Padres. They have the most complete team in the N.L. West and get four games with the struggling Giants at home and three with the worst team in baseball, the Arizona Diamondbacks, to finish the year on the road.

It's baseball's turn under the spotlight this week and in October, for a sport that has been in the shadows of football since 1994 when they locked out the players and its fans.

NFL | Gannon sidelined with broken vertebrae

Oakland quarterback Rich Gannon has a broken vertebrae in his neck that will sideline him at least six weeks.

Gannon had an MRI exam Monday morning and was taken for further tests. Coach Norv Turner didn't believe Gannon was at risk for paralysis and said Gannon was walking around the team's training facility before receiving the news about his neck.

Turner said it would be premature to speculate whether Gannon, the 2002 NFL MVP, would end up on injured reserve for the second-straight season.

The 38-year-old Gannon left in the first quarter of Oakland's 30-20 win over the Buccaneers on Sunday night after taking a helmet-to-helmet hit from linebacker Derrick Brooks.

MLB | Report says Bonds tested for steroids Friday

Barry Bonds hopes his random steroid test last week will remove suspicion that he uses performance-enhancing drugs.

Bonds told MLB.com that he was tested last Friday as part of baseball's new drug-testing agreement. Each player is tested once during the season.

Under the collective bargaining agreement, a player is sent to counseling for a first positive steroid test and suspended for 15 days or fined up to $10,000 for the second infraction. An infraction is not made public until a second positive test.

"I'm glad this is finally happening," Bonds told MLB.com. "They'll get the results, and it will clear my name. It'll show that there's nothing behind what I've been doing (on the field) all year."

Melodic, tight jazz elements help album

"The End of the World Party"

★★★★☆

Album review by Jessica Grant

Unfortunately, jazz has never been a mainstream musical genre.

This is a travesty, particularly in America. Aside from blues music, jazz is one of the only art forms created exclusively in America and some of the most brilliant music ever created has been within the sphere of the jazz genre.

It may be tough for someone just beginning to explore the genre to jump right into the music of Thelonious Monk or Ornette Coleman, but the work of Medeski, Martin, and Wood is a bit more accessible. The music of MMW may be a bit more accessible because it takes some of the best elements from many jazz sub-genres — cool, fusion, be-bop, post-bop, and avant garde — and combines them in a nearly perfect amalgamation of music.

"The End of the World Party" is the latest release from the jazz trio who teamed up with producer John King of the Dust Brothers. King is probably best known for his hand in the production of classic albums like the Beastie Boys' "Paul's Boutique" and Beck's "Odelay."

As a whole, "End of the World Party" is one of the most focused MMW releases, and it certainly grooves enough to earn an album title with a party reference.

MMW's prior two records, "The Dropper" (2000) and "Uninvisible" (2002) were great records, but a bit too esoteric to appeal to most people.

However, "The End of the World Party" is a sort of combination piece of their two prior records and earlier releases like "Combustication" (1998).

The average track length is about four minutes, and each tune is based around retro keyboards and a tight rhythm section, layered with a funky undercurrent. Avant garde guitarist Marc Ribot is a presence on this album, but the only other real collaboration is that of a horn section on one track.

"End of the World Party" is an album heavy in polyrhythmic beats, flawless syncopation and inescapable melody.

The album begins with "Anonymous skull" a piece that begins with Billy Martin's heavy kick drum and the throb of Chris Wood's bass. The piece is laden with John Medeski's tinkling piano layered over thick samples.

The album's title track is full of grooving Fender-Rhodes keyboard licks and a sampled string section. "Reflector" is a piece containing subtle manipulations by King. Medeski uses electric keyboards and the group ends the piece on a salsa note.

For someone wishing to explore the genre of jazz, MMW is probably an easy place to begin.

Generic drugs face difficulty in approval, marketing processes

By Alison Filla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prescription drugs can solve a multitude of problems, but it is not easy to get a new drug on the market.

Mark Brown-Barnett, director of the Lafene Health Center's pharmacy, said getting a prescription drug on the market is a long process.

"A pharmaceutical company manufactures a medication," Brown-Barnett said. "When they discover something, they get a patent for it. They have 15 years on the patent."

Then they have to bring the product to market. This can take anywhere from three to eight years.

Brown-Barnett said it is expensive to make and market a drug, because pharmaceutical companies must cover these costs before a patent expires. However, companies only have the time between when the drug comes to market and the patent expires to do so.

When the patent expires, the chemical formula can be released, and that is when companies can step in and make generic drugs.

"One company can apply for the exclusive generic for six months," Brown-Barnett said. "They can sell it for 10 to 20 percent less. After that anyone can apply to the FDA to make the generic. Companies that specialize in generics make the generic drugs."

He said Lafene has a state contract that allows them to go through various buying groups asking for a single bidder. This allows them to get the best deal on generics.

However, he said the cost of the generic drug is the often dictated by insurance companies, not the actual price of the drug.

Brown-Barnett said some people prefer brand-name drugs because they think they work better.

"Some people like name-brand drugs," Brown-Barnett said. "They do have to pay extra. There are maybe five to 10 commonly used generic drugs that have a 'small margin of safety.' But the generics are cheaper."

Brown-Barnett said the margin of safety is a test that each drug must pass in order to be sold.

Pharmacist Katie Surowski said a doctor has two choices when writing a prescription.

"A doctor can check 'dispense as written,' or 'brand exchange permissible,'" Surowski said. "If it says 'brand exchange permissible,' we can substitute the generic equivalent. Most doctors check 'brand exchange permissible.'"

Some people prefer to have generic drugs, however.

Alex Olson, junior in business marketing, said he would buy generic drugs if given the choice between generic and brand-name.

"It's the same thing as long as they both have the same active ingredient," Olson said.

Justin Hunting, sophomore in construction science, said he would buy brand-name drugs instead.

"I have it in my head that they work better," Hunting said.

Generic drugs go through a series of tests to make sure they are safe and chemically equal to the brand-name drugs.

"Drugs have to be AB rated," Surowski said. "They have to have the same chemical formula. Even over-the-counter generic drugs have to go through the same process as prescription drugs. When a drug becomes generic it is called by its chemical name. Some big generic drugs are antibiotics, pain medicines and birth control."

She said most people prefer generic drugs because they are cheaper.

"There are lots of companies that make generic drugs," Surowski said. "A wholesaler finds the cheapest places we can buy the drugs from."

Elvis Costello rocks with country edge

"The Delivery Man"

Album review by Matt Groneman

Over a 27 year career and nearly as many albums, Elvis Costello has confounded expectations and continually pushed the frontiers of music.

Most of his early albums are brilliant and remain influential, though most of his 90s output veered towards symphonic pop experiments that didn't always work.

Following a decade of mostly mediocre output, Elvis Costello and his new band, the Imposters, released the hard rocking "When I Was Cruel" to critical acclaim in 2002.

2004 sees his second full-length outing with the Imposters, this time a pleasing country album with rock tunes thrown in for good measure.

The treasures on this album are its yearning ballads.

"Country Darkness" is the sound of despair and loneliness experienced when in a dive bar.

"Nothing Clings Like Ivy," one of three tracks to feature a vocal contribution by country legend Emmylou Harris, is gorgeous and touching.

Perhaps the strongest song on the album is "Heart Shaped Bruise," and could possibly be the most lovesick ballad to come out since George Jones' "He Stopped Loving Her Today."

This track, featuring Harris on vocals and John McPhee on steel guitar, is a beautiful tale of love lost with melody as rich in texture as those of Roy Orbison.

The country idiom is nothing new to Costello. He originally wished to be a country singer rather than a rock 'n' roller, though his record company was against it due to country's lack of popularity at the time; his early country songs may be heard on the expanded edition of 1977's "My Aim Is True."

By 1982, Costello was recording the country covers album, "Almost Blue." Another country album, "King of America," was released in 1986 and remains one of the strongest in his catalog and one of the best country albums of the 1980s.

Rock has usually been Costello's preferred form of musical expression, and it shows here as well. "Button My Lip," "Bedlam," and "Monkey To Man" all burn with a rock beat.

Even these tracks, however, harken back to early country-rock crossover artists such as Carl Perkins and Elvis Presley with rock-a-billy rhythms.

The lead guitar line in "Monkey To Man" sounds conspicuously like George Harrison's contribution on many of the Beatles' covers of 50s tunes.

Similarly, "The Name of This Thing Is Not Love" features a melody line that sounds similar to that of many early Beatles' hits. This may be the influence of his collaborations with Paul McCartney.

Other artists echoed include Sheryl Crow and Lucinda Williams, who duets on one track with Costello.

This is a strong contribution to the Costello catalog. Despite the sometimes inconsistent feel of the album due to the inclusion of songs that are much more rock than country, this effort contains some of Costello's strongest songs in years.

K-State receives bioterrorism grant

By Stephanie Swoboda
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Engineers at K-State received a $500,000 grant to research bioterrorism on airplanes.

K-State has teamed up with seven other universities to examine air quality in airline cabins.

K-State does not know its role specifically yet, but Byron Jones, director of engineering experiment station knows that the team will be working on a number of important items.

"We will be looking at air movement throughout cabin and air equipment such as the environmental control center, which controls air to cabin and filters contaminants out," Jones said.

Jones said the grant is not only for preventing bioterrorism, but also to improve the environment on the aircraft.

"With many people pushed together like sardines in a can, it's hard to control person to person contamination; the real problem for those who fly a lot, especially the crew," Jones said.

The Federal Aviation Administration has chosen the team, headed by Auburn University and consisting of K-State, Purdue, Harvard, Boise State, University of California at Berkeley and the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.

With the combination of Harvard and its school of public health, Auburn and the detection of chemical and biological agents, and K-State, which is well known for air quality research, a strong team has been formed, said Bill Gale, alumni professor of materials engineering at Auburn University.

"We are delighted to have Kansas State on board," said Gale.

"We believe we have assembled the best of experts and facilities," Jones said.

Mohammad Hosni, professor and department head of mechanical and nuclear engineering, leads the group of four other faculty members who will work together on the project.

They will also be looking to students to help with the research.

"We will need mostly engineering students, depending on nature of research, but we may also need some help from other areas of science, like chemistry and biology," Jones said.

As many as 20 industrial partners, including Boeing, Delta and Honeywell, are ready to help fund the project.

The team will meet with representatives of the Federal Aviation Administration on Oct. 4, to receive specifics on research assignments and allotments.

State Department sees viability of Iraqi elections

By Barry Schweid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Elections in January throughout Iraq are an achievable goal, the State Department said Monday, but it refused to predict the goal would be reached.

"I'm not going to make predictions," deputy spokesman Adam Ereli said.

"I will say that we have a goal that we are trying to reach in cooperation with the government of Iraq, and that's elections throughout Iraq by January 2005."

The impediment that might stand in the way — unspoken by Ereli — is a violent insurgency. It is active mainly in the Sunni Triangle, where Islam's Sunni sect is in the majority and ousted President Saddam Hussein grew up; and in enclaves of the much bigger Shiite areas among forces loyal to radical cleric Muqtada al-Sadr.

Ereli's evaluation followed statements Sunday by Secretary of State Colin Powell that the situation in Iraq was "getting worse," and while elections throughout Iraq by January were "an achievable goal" it would be up to interim President Iyad Allawi "to see what the situation is at the end of the year and make a judgment." Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld has suggested the elections might be held in only certain parts of Iraq.

"Nothing is perfect in life. So you have an election that is not quite perfect," he told Congress last week. "Is it better than not having an election? You bet."

Whether elections can be held by the deadline, and whether there would be voting in parts of the country where U.S. and Iraqi forces have failed to quash insurgents, is becoming a test of President Bush's Iraq policy.

Democratic challenger John Kerry had gradually made Iraq his top campaign issue. At the weekend he accused the administration of operating in a "fantasyland of spin," and he said on Monday's "Imus in the Morning" radio program, "It's pretty questionable now whether they can get the real elections they want to have."

Phil Singer, a spokesman for Kerry, said the administration was sending out mixed signals.

Spokesman Ereli, meanwhile, told reporters the administration was united in believing elections by January were achievable.

"I don't think you should read into different phrasings of the same idea differences of opinion or differences of assessment," he said.

Court demands touch-screen machine voters get receipt

Case reopened after Florida appellate court ruling

By Jackie Hallifax
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Just five weeks before Election Day, a federal appeals court Monday revived a lawsuit demanding that all Florida voters who use touch-screen machines receive a paper receipt, in case a recount becomes necessary.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals told a federal judge in Fort Lauderdale to reopen the case, which could affect 15 Florida counties whose electronic voting terminals do not issue paper records.

It was not immediately clear if the case could be decided before the Nov. 2 presidential election.

The three-judge panel in Atlanta wrote that U.S. District Judge James Cohn misapplied a 35-year legal doctrine when he threw out the lawsuit filed by Rep. Robert Wexler, D-Fla.

Wexler claims that paperless ballots cannot be recounted as accurately as those cast on paper.

He sued state election officials, arguing that the Constitution would be violated by a voting system that varies from county to county.

Florida adopted the screen machinery after the 2000 debacle involving punch-card ballots and hanging chads. A five-week court battle over disputed ballots from several counties kept the outcome of the presidential election up in the air until the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling that gave President Bush the state by a 537-vote margin.

Nationwide, hundreds of counties have installed paperless voting equipment, and as many as 50 million Americans will be eligible to cast electronic ballots on Nov. 2. More than 100,000 machines have been installed nationwide. A small percentage have printers and produce a paper record of every ballot cast.

Growing numbers of voter rights advocates and computer scientists say such systems expose elections to hackers, software bugs and hardware failures. They urge election officials to ban paperless machines — or provide stacks of paper ballots voters can use on Election Day if they want.

"You can't go into an election without clear procedures at the outset describing how recounts will be conducted," said e-voting critic Kim Alexander, president of the California Voter Foundation. "The only truly meaningful recount is to recount the voter's paper record, which they don't have in every Florida county."

The legal issue Monday was not about voting machines or paper ballots, but about the relationship between federal and state courts and when it is proper to allow similar lawsuits to proceed at both levels.

In a similar lawsuit filed by Wexler in state court, an appeals court ruled last month that a paper trail is not required, saying voters are not guaranteed "a perfect voting system." That case has been appealed to the Florida Supreme Court.

Bishop evades sex abuse charges

By Adam Gorlick
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — A district attorney said Monday he would not prosecute Roman Catholic Bishop Thomas Dupre on child rape charges because the statute of limitations has expired in the case.

In an indictment unsealed Monday, Dupre was charged with molesting two boys in the 1970s, becoming the first Roman Catholic prelate to face criminal charges in the sex abuse scandal that has rocked the American church.

But Hampden District Attorney William Bennett told reporters later in the day that he would not prosecute the case.

The statute of limitations, which was six years at the time of the alleged crimes, expired the case.

Dupre, 70, cited health reasons when he resigned in February after nine years as head of the Springfield Diocese.

But his departure came one day after The Republican newspaper of Springfield confronted him with allegations he abused two boys while he was a parish priest.

The indictment was handed up by a grand jury Friday.

Storm leaves millions powerless

By Mike Schneider
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MELBOURNE, Fla. — Hurricane Jeanne tore a fresh path of destruction as it finished its march up storm-ravaged Florida. The fourth hurricane in six weeks shut down much of the state and prompted recovery plans on a scale never before seen in the nation.

At least six people died in the storm as it plowed across Florida's midsection in a virtual rerun for many residents still trying to regroup from hurricanes that have crisscrossed the Southeast since mid-August.

"This is the price we pay for living in paradise," said Phyllis Cole, laughing at her predicament as she waited along with about a dozen others Monday outside a Home Depot in hopes of its reopening, many hoping to buy generators.

Jeanne came ashore around midnight Saturday with 120 mph wind, striking the same area hit three weeks ago by Hurricane Frances and rocketing debris scattered by earlier storms. Roofs were torn off, stop lights dangled and bridges were flooded from the mainland to barrier islands. About 2.6 million buildings lost power, but some 800,000 had it restored by midday.

Florida was the first state to withstand a four-hurricane pounding in one season since Texas in 1886. That's a milestone that came with two months remaining in the hurricane season.

with the ice cream.

Once the mixture gets properly blended with air, it becomes soft and consistent, McVay said.

Then the mix is packaged and frozen immediately for good quality.

The ice cream is then put in the walk in freezer at 20 to 25 degrees Fahrenheit.

This procedure in its entirety usually takes three days, McVay said.

Once the ice cream is done it is sorted out and put in the holding freezer for sale.

A normal day in Call Hall begins at 8 a.m. and is complete by 2 p.m.

"Vanilla and chocolate are the best sellers," McVay said.

Call Hall also provides milk to the residence halls.

They sell ice cream in the Student Union and also to TCBY at the mall. Call Hall's biggest customers are Dara's Fast Lane stores, McVay said.

Terri Baker, Call Hall student employee and sophomore in secondary education, said she has worked at Call Hall for more than a year.

"I just love the place. The Robyn Williams, senior in public relations, hands a customer a scoop of ice cream while working in Call Hall. The ice cream is also sold at the mall, in the K-State Student Union, and at Dara's Fast Lane stores.

best part is when the regular customers walk in, I know exactly what they want," Baker said.

Baker said she likes French almandine flavor the best.

Jamie Dunn, junior in agriculture communications, said she likes Call Hall ice cream.

"It's cheap and tasty. And my favorite flavor is Espresso Ecstasy," Dunn said.

Justice Department detects FBI backlog

By Curt Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The FBI has a backlog of hundreds of thousands of hours of untranslated audio recordings from terror and espionage investigations, despite large increases in money and personnel for translations since the 2001 terror attacks, a Justice Department audit released Monday said.

In addition, the audit by Glenn A. Fine, the agency's inspector general, found more than one-third of al-Qaeda intercepts authorized by a secret federal court were not reviewed within 12 hours of collection as required by FBI Director Robert Mueller.

The audit was completed in July in classified form. The version released Monday was edited to remove sections classified as "secret" by the FBI.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, more than 123,000 hours of audio in languages associated with terrorists still had not been reviewed as of April 2004, the audit found. In addition, more than 370,000 hours of audio associated with counterintelligence had not been reviewed.

This backlog existed even though money for the FBI's language services had increased from $21.5 million in fiscal 2001 to about $70 million in fiscal 2004. The number of linguists had risen from 883 to 1,214 over that period.

The audit found that the FBI still lacks language personnel necessary to do all the needed translation work, and limitations in its technology, especially computer storage capacity, also cause problems that lead to backlogs.

PRIVILEGE FEES | 24-hour newsroom proposal could resurface

"They did what they're supposed to do," he said. "You're always going to hope for the best."

Walton said she appreciated the hard work and dedication put forth by the committee's members.

"This group of students worked very hard to do what they think is right," she said. "We obviously disagree because we have different values, but their intentions were in the right place."

Committee Chair Michael Burns said he was pleased with the overall progress of the proposal.

"We came up with a good compromise," Burns said. "They came in with what they thought they needed, and our committee sat down and thought it out in terms of what the students need."

He also said if the station was unable to get the 24-hour newsroom considered in the potential Student Activities Center, they could bring the issue to the committee again.

Burns said legislation will be presented to Student Senate on Thursday and will be back in committee next week for review before final Senate action on Oct. 7.

Next on the committee's agenda is the budget for the Office of Student Activities and Services.

a large school district in suburban Chicago, where eventually he became assistant superintendent for personnel. He then left to become the superintendent for the 1A Rolla, Kan., school district.

"My opinion is that choice is a wonderful thought," he said. "It is choice many people want their children to attend moderate size schools."

Six years ago he became superintendent for Riley County schools, a moderate sized school Bowers said is ideal. He said low enrollment weighting is necessary to attract and keep good teachers in the district.

Overland Park attorney Dan Biles was appointed to defend the State Board of Education.

Biles said he doubts a decision will be rendered Oct. 15, but he believes the decision will be made before the Legislature returns to session Jan. 15.

"The Supreme Court understands this is an important issue," Biles said. "There is no mandate that states the Court must make a decision."

The record on appeal is full of boxes. The plaintiffs admitted into evidence seven boxes, each containing 56 volumes of research.

"I don't know how big the boxes are, but that is a lot of paper," Biles said. "These were filed in the last working day in May, so a lot of people didn't get the summer vacation they planned."

The District Court ruled the current school-finance formula to be unconstitutional, and say an additional $800 million to $1 billion is necessary to correct the formula. Biles said the budget is supposed to be decided by the State Board of Education.

"It's about who gets to decide what kids learn," Biles said. "The district court says judges, but I say educators should make the decision."

If the Supreme Court does find the current formula to be unconstitutional, it is up to the State Legislature to come up with a new formula.

John Robb, prosecuting attorney from Newton, Kan., asked for a special master to be appointed to make sure the legislature accomplishes the task.

"It takes more money to run smaller school districts," Biles said. "Everybody believes this, except the small number of schools who are plaintiffs."

"Even some of the plaintiffs have said to the Supreme Court low enrollment weighting makes sense; it's just 20 percent too high."

Children's workshop finds a home after building closes

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the doors to Wonder Workshop closed, Manhattan schools began opening theirs.

The children's museum that lost its building at 821 Poyntz Ave. when Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 sold the land, is now serving more children than ever before with new programming.

"We are serving more kids and families than we ever have in our whole existence," Wonder Workshop director Richard Pitts said.

The Wonder Workshop has been serving children and their families through after-school programs, educational programs and diversity training since 1989. It started as an after-school program at Amanda Arnold elementary and opened to the public in 1994.

"Our mission is to provide hands on education opportunities in the arts, sciences and the humanities for students, kids and their families. We go across the generations as well as the races," Pitts said. "We believe that the best way to get people to understand the arts and sciences and humanities is to directly be involved hands on and fully focused on whatever the program is we are doing."

Now that the children's museum headquarters is gone, Pitts has focused on the camp area, 25 miles north of Manhattan, which serves 300 children each month.

In addition, there is an after-school program at Woodrow Wilson elementary school in Manhattan as well as activities when school is out of session. Pitts said the program will be limited to one school for now.

"We have had the opportunity to do pro-

Kathy Lindsay, Manhattan, laughs after being asked a question about insects by Felix Amanor-Boadu, 9, as he takes part in Wonder Workshop. The program used to operate out of a house located on Poyntz Avenue, but the land recently was sold by the school district, so the program is now run at the schools.

gramming and more schools in Manhattan," he said. "I don't want to bite off more than we can chew. I don't want to stress out our staff. Most the staff we have are KSU students. I just want to take it slow."

Abby Houlton, junior in elementary education, leads the Woodrow program from 3 to 5 p.m.

"There's always an educational focus, but we do realize it's an after-school program," she said. "We talk about cooperative play and other social skills."

Groups push for voter registration

By Scott Seel
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voter registration season has kicked into high gear and reaches its apex during today's National Youth and Student Voter Registration Day activities.

The non-partisan event is being co-sponsored by 17 different organizations.

Several organizations on campus have been working on voter registration drives in recent weeks.

Rachel Olds, vice president of the K-State College Republicans and junior in political science, said College Republicans have been targeting Republican audiences on campus.

"We want to get it out there and make it easy for people," Olds said.

She said having to print registration forms from the Internet can discourage students from voting.

Olds said the close presidential election in 2000 brought everyone to the harsh realization that every vote counts.

"It woke up everybody, including students," she said. "It was so close in Florida and so close in the popular vote, it shows your vote really does matter."

Olds said even though presidential campaigns are skipping over Kansas to focus battleground states, there are other elections in Kansas.

Willie Wake, vice president of Students for Environmental Action and senior in political science, said his organization also will work to register voters on campus in the weeks prior to the Nov. 2 election.

"We have a few pamphlets — one on George Bush and John Kerry, and one on Nancy Boyda and Jim Ryan, as well," Wake said. "Obviously, our pamphlets focus mainly on environmental issues."

Wake said he feels voters between the ages of 18-30 have been discouraged in recent years and that some candidates, especially Democrats, see this as an opportunity. "Clinton really brought out the young voters," he said. "The Iraq war made college campuses hotbeds of liberalism and I think you're seeing that."

Commission salaries vary in city, county

By Leann Sulzen
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The compensation rates for officials throughout the City of Manhattan and Riley County can differ greatly depending on their governing board.

According to the Riley County Clerk's Office, County Commissioners' annual salaries are $27,024.05 for 2004.

Manhattan City Commissioners make only about $100 per month according to the Manhattan City Clerk's Office, which is about $1,200 a year.

City Commissioner Mark Taussig said the pay for city commissioners is low because it is viewed as a civil service position.

"It's the way we serve our community," he said. "When I ran, I didn't know there was any money involved at all."

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Dodgeball moves from silver screen to campus

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

MADISON, Wis. — As fictional coach Patches O'Houlihan claims in the summer movie "Dodgeball: A True Underdog Story," "If you can dodge wrenches, you can dodge balls."

University of Wisconsin students now have the opportunity to test this theory.

As mentioned in the Sept. 16 edition of Sports Illustrated: On Campus, the University of Wisconsin Division of Recreational Sports is adding dodgeball to the list of intramural sports offered on campus.

With increased attention to the sport due to the summer comedy, intramural dodgeball teams have popped up on campuses nationwide, according to Matt Horst, intramural sports director.

However, much more than the movie is behind the decision to offer the sport.

Horst claims the idea to bring dodgeball to Madison came about well before the movie.

"The movie helped," Horst said. "But it's not the reason we are bringing it to campus."

Instead, Horst noticed the national trend of playground games reappearing as intramural sports in a college setting. After viewing a demonstration by the National Amateur Dodgeball Association, Horst decided to bring the sport to campus.

"It's going to be a big hit on campus," Horst said.

MORE GRADS CHANGE MAJORS

SAN JOSE, Calif. —

For those San Jose State University students who struggle to stick to one major, there is good news ahead.

According to statistics, the graduation rate for college students who change their majors once is higher compared to the graduation rate for those who never make a change of major, said Ping Hsu, associate dean in the College of Engineering.

"To change majors is not a bad thing," Hsu said. "After (students) change their major[s] once, they may feel that they have found the right place, and so they are more likely to continue their studies until they graduate."

Another explanation for the graduation figures could be that by the time they change majors, many students are already close to graduation, Hsu said.

Melanie Sheft, a junior sociology major, said she swapped majors twice before picking sociology in her junior year.

"I did waste a lot of time and money and effort, and that was stressful," Sheft said. "But in the end, I'm happy I went through that because it made me more confident that this is really what I want to do."

TAKING A YEAR OFF

PRINCETON, N.J. — While peers contended with exams and early-morning lectures in college, Ned Rosenman was teaching skiing in France's back country the year after he graduated from high school.

"I spent a lot of time in train stations," said Rosenman, 21, a native of Jackson, Wyo.

Rosenman said he was afraid that without any real-world experience his freshman year of college would be "like grade 13."

Rosenman was not alone in his decision to take a year off.

In response to everything from academic burnout to internship opportunities, many students at Princeton have chosen to take a "gap year" before continuing their education.

Takingoff.net — a Web site which provides information for students considering taking a gap year — quotes former Princeton Dean of Admission Fred Hargadon as saying, "I've been recommending that students think about [taking a gap year] for many years now."

Harvard even recommends in its admission letter that students think about deferring.

MUSIC DOWNLOADING CONTINUES

MINNEAPOLIS — Since the University of Minnesota launched a new online music service this fall, more than 500 people tried the program during the first week of service, Shih-Pau Yen, university deputy chief information officer said.

Real Network's Rhapsody, a discounted digital music service, is designed as a legal alternative to people who seek digital music files.

Out of approximately 40 students who were contacted during the weekend, no users of the program could be found.

Many said they still prefer the free peer-to-peer file-sharing networks such as Kazaa or Morpheus.

First-year electrical engineering student Eric Mueller said he has heard about the service but is not interested.

"It's not like we don't have money, but we can get it free so much easier," Mueller said.

First-year biomedical engineering student Ben Bienert said buying compact discs is not the way to find music. He said he uses Kazaa Lite.

"We've gotten spoiled by the free ones," he said.

Child Development Center participates in day of play

Children's group at Jardine coordinates programming to bring children, parents closer

Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many years, scientists have studied the effects of play on children and have come to the conclusion play is an essential part of a child's development.

From an early age, it is important to foster relationships not only between the parent and the child, but also between children of all ages.

According to Debra Ring, director of the K-State Child Development Center, play is an integral part of development.

Such activities promote proper social skills, gross and fine motor skills, enjoyment of life and health.

On Tuesday, Jardine took the opportunity to participate in the national day of play entitled "Let's Just Play Across America," co-sponsored by Nickelodeon and the Boys and Girls Club.

These corporations encourage childcare facilities to set up games and fun activities to promote camaraderie.

Nickelodeon actually taped such events around the United States.

This program is scheduled to air Oct. 4. Jardine, however, did not endure the bright lights and cameras, a factor that didn't seem to hamper the children's spirits.

Ring was very enthusiastic about the program, taking pictures of the children in all the events and making sure everything was in order.

The parents of Jardine children, most of whom are students who work at least part-time and care for their families, are "just so busy they don't have time to spend with their kids — this is an opportunity for them just to play," Ring said.

Across the lawn of the Jardine Development Center were children pools, buckets of water balloons, balls and even a pink flamingo.

The events included a wet sponge relay, hula hoops, a three-legged race, water balloon volleyball, ball running, a water balloon toss and a bean bag toss and egg on a spoon, Simon said.

The Jardine children thoroughly enjoyed the festivities as they laughed, screamed, and ducked from descending water balloons.

One little boy became so enthralled when he saw a weiner dog, he screamed to his mother in Chinese with a huge grin as he curiously circled the animal.

Sierra Dunlap happily clung to her father, Sam, who also attended the program.

Sam, an army soldier, said

"Unfortunately I'm about to leave and I don't have a lot of time that I can spend with Sierra."

Sam felt this program gave him the opportunity to spend quality time with his daughter.

Proud parents videotaped their children in each event and encouraged both a competitive edge and friendship.

Many parents arrived from work just in time to greet their children, carrying both briefcases and their children's book bags, and later joined in the festivities.

Many parents approached Ring saying they hoped the Child Center would plan similar events in the future.

As for the children, many of them experienced their first K-State event at Jardine.

Survey: almost half of students want K-State dental insurance

Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dental care is a concern for many students at K-State, especially because dental insurance isn't offered through the university.

According to Lafene Health Center's biennial Community Attitude Survey, 46 percent of respondents requested preventive dental care.

Bethany Taylor, senior in marketing, said she doesn't understand why it isn't offered.

"I think that if they have medical insurance, they should have dental," she said.

"There are dentists in town and you would think they would want to work with the school because it's business for them."

Taylor said she and her husband currently have no dental insurance because they can't find anything that is affordable.

How to Properly brush teeth

1. Outer and inner surfaces: Place toothbrush at a 45 degree angle; starting along the gum line use gentle, short strokes against the gum line.
2. Chewing surfaces: Hold the brush flat and brush back and forth.
3. Inside Surface of Front Teeth: Tilt brush vertically; use up and down strokes with toe of brush.
4. Brush the tongue: Use a back to front sweeping method to remove food particles and freshen the mouth. Remember to gently brush the roof of the mouth also.
5. Brush long enough to thoroughly clean all tooth surfaces. The brushing motion itself helps remove stains, so cutting down brushing time will shorten the effectiveness.

Source: www.cresthealthysmiles.com.

In the meantime, Taylor said they do what they can to keep their teeth healthy.

"We just try to brush our teeth every night and every morning," she said.

According to www.cresthealthysmiles.com, it is important to brush and floss regularly and visit a dentist regularly.

The Web site also said certain foods are also better for teeth including fruits, vegetables, low-fat yogurt and cheese.

There are dental insurance plans are offered through local companies.

Lindy Gallaher, owner of Gallaher Insurance, said although he doesn't offer a special student plan he does offer several individual dental plans.

"A regular individual dental plan cost is about $31 per month," he said.

Gallaher said the plan covers exams and cleaning completely with a $50 lifetime deductible.

"You never have to pay that again," he said.

TO THE POINT K-State should provide student dental care

According to the Census Bureau, people in the 18-24 age category are among the group most likely to be without any type of health insurance.

And, research indicates, they are also part of the age category for whom early detection and prevention of disease will have the greatest effect.

Students at K-State are perhaps better off than many of their peers because they have access to moderately affordable health insurance through the university.

However, the lack of dental insurance is an issue that students are concerned about, and rightly so.

Untreated cavities and other dental problems only become more costly and painful to treat as they progress and can lead to more serious infections.

Dental cleanings, protective sealants and the early detection of dental problems are all critical to oral health, and if students are unable to afford private dental insurance, the chances are, they aren't getting necessary dental care.

Students need and want dental insurance.

The university should act to provide students with an affordable option for dental care as soon as possible.

Minimum wage in the way

Laws serve only to drive up labor costs, slow economy

Back in the 1980s, there was an embarrassment in the halls of Congress: a committee meeting on the plight of American farmers during which not one actual farmer testified.

Instead, actresses like Sissy Spacek and Meryl Streep spoke out for government intervention based on their experiences playing the wives of farmers in movies. I kid thee not.

Last spring, multi-millionaire actor Ben Affleck upped the ante and joined the ever-growing list of Hollywood movie stars who think their words count for beans because of their big names.

His deed? Testifying on behalf of Ted Kennedy's bill that would raise the minimum wage to $7 per hour.

We've all heard the jokes about Ben worrying about finding a full-time job when his movies go belly up again and again, but I'm not laughing. It's insulting to see a rich man like Ben Affleck try to screw so many out of a job.

Minimum wage laws, while noble in intent, perform no real good for society. They force employers to pay more for labor than it's really worth.

If a business wants a couple workers for a low-intensity job that requires no experience, it should be allowed to pay as little as it wants. If people want to work for more than that, they can look for jobs elsewhere.

By requiring businesses to pay out so much, they either have to hire fewer people and work the heck out of them or raise prices on finished products.

The former results in hostile workplaces and disgruntled employees. The latter causes inflation for all, including the dumb fools that got the higher-paying jobs.

Liberals like Ted Kennedy claim the need for a minimum wage law stems from big scary companies always trying to cheat the employees, and it will guarantee fair pay for minorities. Not an ounce of truth to any of it, though.

Business owners are cheated by minimum wage. They're not big, evil monsters that continually try to make more money.

For the most part, they're just people trying to earn a living and give others the chance to earn a living. But they're forced to pay unreasonable labor rates and lose profits they could use to open more jobs, give raises to other employees as rewards or just pocket it. It's their money.

Minorities are cheated by minimum wage. It destroys entry-level positions that less-trained, non-English speaking or unconnected individuals often work.

We make it harder for them to compete with other potential hires when the jobs pay better and people with more experience and skills want those jobs. The resulting higher prices for goods and services affects them negatively as well.

The kicker of it all, you see, is minimum wage screws everyone. Affleck claims that, in America, a parent cannot support a child working full time at minimum wage. Of course not.

Most full-time workers make more than minimum wage. Why, a large number make more than the $7 per hour supported by Kennedy and Affleck.

But if the minimum wage is raised, the labor market will dry up like slugs in a salt bin. Then, prices will rise for everything as employers have to make up for the boosted payroll.

Balancing school, job remains tricky

Shanna Hajek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There have been times when I thought to myself, "Gee it would be nice if my parents paid for my entire college career. School really would be a lot easier if I didn't have to work."

I've heard a lot of my fellow students and coworkers lamenting the same problem. It's hard to study when you work an eight-hour shift after school.

The numerous tuition hikes in recent years have had a profound impact on students, namely those who have to work their way through college.

It has been estimated that 57 percent of all college students work while in school, and that one in 10 students works and goes to school full-time.

This equates to working two full-time jobs at once. The performance at one or the other is bound to suffer at some point, and it's easy to guess which.

Studies have shown that working more than 20 hours a week (the average students works at least 25) can cause burnout and lower cumulative GPAs.

Several sources have shown that students make an average of $7.50 an hour, although this number is a bit high for college jobs here in Manhattan. Unless you've worked at a place for several years, you're more likely to earn around $6-$6.50 per hour.

The lower pay rate in places like Manhattan forces students to work more hours. More hours lead to less study time and poor grades.

A study performed by the U.S. Department of Education over a period of three years showed no direct correlation between working students and drop out rates or academic problems.

That my friends, is bull plop. There's 168 hours in a week, and 25-40 of those are spent at work instead of studying, with the rest either at school, sleeping or eating.

Somewhere in there, you're supposed to find two hours for every class you're taking to study every day. It's just not going to happen.

Trying to cram all that stuff into each and every week can lead to burnout. I know a lot of people who have "taken a break" from school just to work for a while, myself included.

Some of these people never end up coming back and even if they do, it will have taken them much longer to get their degree than their fellow students who didn't have to work their way through college.

In addition to these problems, the social life of a working college student suffers. If there's not enough time to study, there's definitely not enough time to just hang out with friends. Or watch TV. Or do anything remotely fun for that matter.

But, for those of you hard working students out there who hold a job, there is a bright side.

Studies have shown that students who work part-time tend to be more focused and use their time better.

Having a job forces you to manage your time, therefore you are more efficient. You just have to be able to find a balance between the two.

Also, having a job in college better prepares you for the "real" working world. I am of the opinion that if you work, you are already in the "real" working world, but that doesn't seem to be the opinion of professionals.

And college job experience can make you more marketable in the work force after graduation. We all need that.

So even though having a job while going to school seems like a constant battle (most likely because it is), it will be worth it in the end.

Your degree will be something you really worked for and that's something to be proud of.

City leadership reviews Aggieville-Campus Edge project

Presentation includes parking garages for Aggieville vicinity

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Presentations were displayed for the Aggieville-Campus Edge project Tuesday evening in a joint work session between City Commission and the Manhattan Area Planning Board.

A conceptual masterplan was presented by Jeff Levin with the Aggieville Business Association; Paul Shaw with RTKL Inc.; and Erich Dohrer with RTKL Inc.

The idea with the plan is to make the area have a more urban feel as opposed to suburban feel, Levin said.

The area consists of Aggieville, Manhattan Avenue from Bluemont Avenue to Bertrand Street, and Bluemont Avenue from Manhattan Avenue to 11th Street.

"We really need to develop in and out versus out and around," Levin said.

The plan also contains three parking garages, which are needed, he said.

"We're just talking about a whole area that has parking issues," Levin said.

Two of the parking garages are located in Aggieville, and one is projected to be along Bluemont, where it may be used by visitors and residents, he said.

The thought of having one garage was considered, but more were realized to be needed, Levin said.

"We learned really quickly that putting cars in one location would be difficult from a traffic standpoint and height standpoint," he said.

In the plan, retail buildings with an urban look similar to Moro Street are to be expanded to Bluemont. Retail, at least on the ground floor with residential on upper floors, line Bluemont Street.

Dohrer said the urban feel on Bluemont will help visitors know where Aggieville is, whereas now they have difficulty finding it.

"There's no real front door to the Aggieville area," he said.

Shaw said the designs RTKL is creating for the project are consistent to current

"The heart and soul of Aggieville is Moro Street. If you can expand that look to Bluemont, then you can expand that heart and soul."

Ed Klimek
CITY COMMISSIONER

national tendencies.

"That's what national developers are doing in other areas, also," he said.

Shaw and Dohrer said the plans are still flexible, but the buildings will not all look the same. They plan to have a mixed variety of two to four story buildings.

The plans were received favorably by the commissioners are planning board with some additional questions.

Commissioner Ed Klimek said he was apprehensive about the parking garages in general because it is expensive to build, as well as maintain them.

"Parking garages are, as I like to put it, a very threatening animal," he said.

However, Klimek said he approved of the expansion of Aggieville to Bluemont.

"The heart and soul of Aggieville is Moro Street," he said. "If you can expand that look to Bluemont, then you can expand that heart and soul."

Although the meeting was a work session, Mayor Brad Everett decided to open the session for public comment, because there seemed to be a desire to do so.

John Pence, Manhattan resident and landlord, said he owns some land in and near the area.

Pence said the only concern he has with the plan is the possibility the buildings may be too tall at three and four stories when normal houses are across the street. He said this may be this case on 11th Street.

Overall, he said he thinks the plan is workable for everyone.

"I think there's a balance between what's good for all, even though it's not owned by all, and what's good for me," Pence said.

North Korea says plutonium was used to create nuclear weapons

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — North Korea says it has turned the plutonium from 8,000 spent nuclear fuel rods into nuclear weapons to serve as a deterrent against increasing U.S. nuclear threats and to prevent a nuclear war in northeast Asia.

Warning that the danger of war on the Korean peninsula "is snowballing," Vice Foreign Minister Choe Su Hon provided details Monday of the nuclear deterrent that he said North Korea has developed for self-defense.

He told the U.N. General Assembly's annual ministerial meeting that Pyongyang had "no other option but to possess a nuclear deterrent" because of U.S. policies that he claimed were designed to "eliminate" North Korea and make it "a target of preemptive nuclear strikes."

"Our deterrent is, in all its intents and purposes, the self-defensive means to cope with the ever increasing U.S. nuclear threats and further, prevent a nuclear war in northeast Asia," he told a news conference after his speech.

In Washington, a State Department official noted that Secretary of State Colin Powell has said repeatedly the United States has no plans to attack the communist country.

But in his General Assembly speech and at the press conference with a small group of reporters, Choe blamed the United States for intensifying threats to attack the communist nation and destroying the basis for negotiations to resolve the dispute over Pyongyang's nuclear program.

Nonetheless, he said, North Korea is still ready to dismantle its nuclear program if Washington abandons its "hostile policy" and is prepared to coexist peacefully.

At the moment, however, he said "the ever intensifying U.S. hostile policy and the clandestine nuclear-related experiments recently revealed in South Korea are constituting big stumbling blocks" and make it impossible for North Korea to participate in the continuation of six-nation talks on its nuclear program.

North Korea said earlier this year that it had reprocessed the 8,000 spent nuclear fuel rods and was increasing its "nuclear deterrent" but did not provide any details.

"Our deterrent is, in all its intents and purposes, the self-defensive means to cope with the ever increasing U.S. nuclear threats and further, prevent a nuclear war in northeast Asia."

Choe Su Hon
VICE FOREIGN MINISTER

Choe was asked at the news conference what was included in the nuclear deterrent.

"We have already made clear that we have already reprocessed 8,000 wasted fuel rods and transformed them into arms," he said, without elaborating on the kinds or numbers.

When asked if the fuel had been turned into actual weapons, not just weapons-grade material, Choe said, "We declared that we weaponized this."

South Korean Deputy Foreign Minister Lee Soo-hyuck said in late April that it was estimated that eight nuclear bombs could be made if all 8,000 spent nuclear fuel rods were reprocessed. Before the reprocessing, South Korea said it believed the North had enough nuclear material to build one or two nuclear bombs.

The State Department official said he hadn't seen Choe's comments but noted the Bush administration has long believed that North Korea has at least one or two nuclear weapons. The official, asking not to be identified, said the North Koreans also made a number of conflicting statements about how far along their weapons development programs have come.

The crisis erupted in 2002 when the United States accused North Korea of running a secret nuclear weapons program. The United States, the two Koreas, Japan, China and Russia since have held three rounds of talks on curbing the North's nuclear ambitions, but have produced no breakthroughs.

"If the six-party talks are to be resumed, the basis for the talks demolished by the United States should be properly set up and the truth of the secret nuclear experiments in South Korea clarified completely," Choe told the General Assembly.

South Korea disclosed recently that its scientists conducted a plutonium-based nuclear experiment more than 20 years ago and a uranium-enrichment experiment in 2000. It denied having any weapons ambitions, and an investigation by the International Atomic Energy Agency is under way.

Choe told the press conference that North Korea wants an explanation because Pyongyang believes it is impossible that such experiments took place "without U.S. technology and U.S. approval."

He also accused President George W. Bush's administration of being "dead set against" reconciliation between North and South Korea, and of adopting an "extremely undisguised... hostile policy" toward the country after it came to power in early 2001.

"As it becomes clear that the U.S. has been pursuing the aim to stifle the DPRK by military means, so our determination to build up a powerful deterrent becomes resolute more and more," Choe said, using the initials of North Korea's official name, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

At the third round of six-party talks in June, the United States proposed that the North disclose all its nuclear activities, help to dismantle facilities and allow outside monitoring. Under the plan, some benefits would be withheld to ensure the North cooperates.

But North Korea said it would never scrap its nuclear programs first and wait to get rewarded later. Instead, it insisted on "reward for freeze."

Choe said a freeze would be "the first step toward eventual dismantlement of our nuclear program" — and that Pyongyang had intended "to include in the freeze no more manufacturing of nuclear weapons, and no test and transfer of them."

A freeze would be followed by "objective verification," he said.

Men's golf finishes 11th at Mason Rudolph Championship

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team remained steady to finish 11th out of 15 teams Tuesday in the two-day Mason Rudolph Championship in Nashville, Tenn.

Competing for the first time at the Roper's Knob Golf Course, the team carded a 293 in the final round to shoot 869 overall for the tournament.

In the Wildcats' worst finish since the Boilermaker Invitational last April, Coach Tim Norris managed to maintain an optimistic attitude.

"It was an average to a little below average tournament for us," Norris said in a release. "When the scores are low, the margin of error isn't very large, and we made our share of mistakes. It was a good learning experience for us."

Junior Tyler Cummins shot a 76 Tuesday to finish with an overall score of 214, dropping from fourth-place at the end of day one to 21st. Junior Ben Kern tied with Cummins for 21st by shooting a 72, contributing to his overall 214.

Kern said he thought his practice round went better than his actual tournament play.

"I worked on a couple of things in my game this past week, and I hit the ball a lot better in practice than I did at the tournament," Kern said. "I am hoping to shoot better in the next tournament."

Georgia State entered the final round in first place and secured its standing by firing an overall 831, finishing 21-under par. Second-place Vanderbilt finished 20 shots behind GSU, and Alabama exploded in the final round to shoot an overall 853, beating out Mississippi and Florida State for third place.

GSU also took first in individual play, with senior Ty Harris breaking the tournament record by firing an overall 195.

Senior Matt Van Cleave, who has top-10 finishes in the past two tournaments, landed an overall score of 221 to tie for 52nd. Freshman Kyle Yonke shot an overall 224, and freshman Clay Hodge tied for 65th with a 226.

CFB | No television for Sunflower Showdown

The football game between K-State and Kansas will not be televised — again.

Kickoff for the Oct. 9 game is set for 6:20 p.m. at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence, K-State Department of Athletics officials learned Tuesday.

For the sixth straight season, no live television network picked up the Sunflower Showdown for broadcast.

For fans unable to make the drive to Lawrence, they can catch the game on radio. The contest will be broadcast on the 29-station Mid America Sports Network.

Netters head to Norman to take on 8-3 Sooners as conference play continues

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 15 women's volleyball team travels tonight to Norman, Okla. to take on the Oklahoma Sooners in Big 12 Conference play.

The Wildcats (8-4, 2-1) currently sit in third place in the conference standings behind Texas and Nebraska. The Sooners come into the match at 8-3 with a 0-3 conference record. With the three conference losses coming to Baylor, Texas Tech and Iowa State, they are at the bottom of the standings.

Oklahoma is in a transition year. After a last-place conference finish in 2003, new head coach Santiago Restrepo is trying to get the Sooners back on track.

Although K-State will be the favorite, Coach Suzie Fritz said her team will prepare for the Sooners the same as any other opponent.

"For us, it's always been consistency of our preparation," she said. "We're going to prepare the same way that we do for every single match, not just because it's Oklahoma or Nebraska or Iowa State or Texas A&M. Whoever it is, we prepare exactly the same, our routines are the same, our scouting reports are the same. We talk a lot about the best way to respect an opponent is to crush them."

One Wildcat looking to help with the crushing of the Sooners is freshman libero Angie Lastra, who comes into the match leading the conference in service aces.

Lastra echoed Fritz, saying K-State will not overlook Oklahoma.

"We should have confidence, but we should work hard for every team no matter the record," Lastra said. "So we go like it's the best team we're playing. We just play right every time, no matter the opponent."

The Sooners are led by 2003 Big 12 Freshman of the Year finalist and outside hitter Joanna Schmitt, who is averaging 3.85 kills and 2.52 digs per game. Setter Rachel Jackson also is a leading contributor, averaging 11.9 assists per game.

After two straight three-game sweeps in conference play, Fritz said she likes the way her team is coming together and playing.

"We're making improvement," she said. "We've been better each time out. I was very proud of the way we went into Missouri, and right off the bat we were playing at a high level from point one. We still have some ebbs and flows; volleyball naturally does that. The good teams can keep those ebbs and flows minor. We're starting to level out and make progress as a team."

Selling the rights to name stadiums cheapens experience

MATTHEW GIRARD

Nothing strikes fear into an opponent's heart like having to play in a stadium called "PetCo Park" or "Minute Maid Park."

I know I wouldn't want to have to play somewhere where somebody's little yippy dog might attack my leg or where the fans could hurl cardboard boxes of orange juice.

Trust me, you don't want to get hit by one that has the extra pulp in it.

The reason for this sarcastic rant, you ask?

On Wednesday, the San Francisco 49ers sold the naming rights to the former Candlestick Park, and now, former 3Com Park. The stadium will now be named "Monster Park" after the San Francisco-based Monster Cable Products paid to have its name adorn the stadium until the team's new park is finished.

The City of San Francisco and the 49ers will split the earnings down the middle, and each side will get roughly $3 million.

Junior linebacker to return to play against Texas A&M as Big 12 Conference play begins

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The football team's defense may receive a much-needed boost Saturday, when the Wildcats travel to College Station, Texas, to open their Big 12 Conference season.

At the Wildcats' (2-1) weekly press conference Tuesday, Coach Bill Snyder said junior linebacker Ted Sims is likely to be back on the field against Texas A&M (2-1) after missing the last three games due to a leg injury.

"I'm a little more positive about it (Sims playing) now, than at any other time," Snyder said.

During his sophomore season, Sims saw action in all 15 games at middle linebacker, registering 79 tackles and four sacks. Sims' biggest play last season came in the Big 12 championship game against Oklahoma, when he collected his first career interception and ran it back 27 yards for a touchdown, sealing the win for the Wildcats.

This year, Sims has been sidelined with an injury he sustained in preseason practice.

"When it first happened, it took awhile to set in and was real stressful, but I'm getting back and ready to roll again," Sims said.

Sims suited up for the first time this season in K-State's 40-20 win over Louisiana-Lafayette Sept. 18 but did not play.

Although Sims won't start against the Aggies, he said he is ready to recharge the defense.

"This weekend, I want to bring some intensity and let them know we are still the 'Lynch Mob,' and we are going to be rocking some heads around," Sims said. "Hopefully, we can just get the energy up again."

Along with Sims, senior linebacker

Maurice Thurmond also will make his return in the Big 12 conference opener after being injured in the Wildcats' 45-21 loss to Fresno State.

Texas A&M leads the all-time series between the two schools 6-4, with K-State dropping its past three games against the Aggies.

NASCAR | Junior says father was a factor in rescue

Dale Earnhardt Jr. has trouble remembering those frantic seconds when he escaped from his burning racecar. He believes, however, that his late father figured in his survival.

"I don't want to put some weird, you know, psycho twist on it, like he was pulling me out or anything, but he had a lot to do with me getting out of that car," the NASCAR star said. "From the moment I made to unbuckle my belt to lying on the stretcher, I have no idea what happened."

Earnhardt recalled that perilous July day in Sonoma, Calif., during an interview with correspondent Mike Wallace for "60 Minutes" that will be broadcast today on CBS.

Earnhardt's father was killed three years ago during the final lap of the Daytona 500. The son insists he felt his father's presence on the day when he scrambled out of his flaming car and was left with second-degree burns on his legs, neck and chin. In fact, he said, when he reached safety, he began inquiring about the "person" who helped him from the car.

CFB | Ware back from lung injury; slated to start

Georgia tailback Danny Ware is ready to pick up where he left off for the Bulldogs.

After sitting out part of one game and all of another because of a bruised lung, the freshman sensation will start at the tailback for the No. 3 Bulldogs in Saturday's crucial game against 13th-ranked LSU.

Ware became the first freshman running back since the 1940s to start his first game at Georgia (3-0), doing little to dampen expectations when he rushed for 135 yards and three touchdowns in a victory over Division I-AA Georgia Southern.

Festival selects Wamego film

By Matt Groneman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Steve Balderson truly is living the dream.

Balderson's second feature film, "Firecracker," filmed in Wamego, premieres at 6 p.m. Oct. 3 at the Raindance Film Festival in London, England. An encore performance will be shown at 10 p.m. Oct. 8.

The film features several major stars. Lead actress Karen Black has appeared in more than 100 films, including such important features as "Easy Rider" and "The Great Gatsby." Vocalist Mike Patton, lead singer of Faith No More, stars in the male lead role.

Other well-known cast members include Jane Wiedlin of the Go-Go's and indie actress Susan Traylor.

The film is about a murder that takes place in Wamego. Balderson describes it as "a classic tragedy and a very serious drama."

Balderson said he grew up in the area and graduated from Manhattan High School. He enrolled at K-State in the fall of 1992 but found that his "viewpoints conflicted with K-State's."

Balderson said he dropped out of K-State and went to school at CalArts. After leaving CalArts, Balderson came back to Kansas to achieve his dreams.

"My goal was to make a high quality 35mm motion picture with some of Hollywood's most talented actors - and do it from my home in Kansas," Balderson said. "I did it. And I want to encourage other artists that anything is possible - regardless of location."

Balderson's influence has been felt.

Frank Cole, sophomore in open-option, helped Balderson on the film.

"It was an incredible experience," Cole said. "He has such a vision for a guy born and raised in Wamego, Kan."

One of the things Cole appreciated most about the film was that Balderson chose to make it here, Cole said.

"He could have done it in Hollywood, but he brought the people here."

Cole was inspired by Balderson's passion and vision.

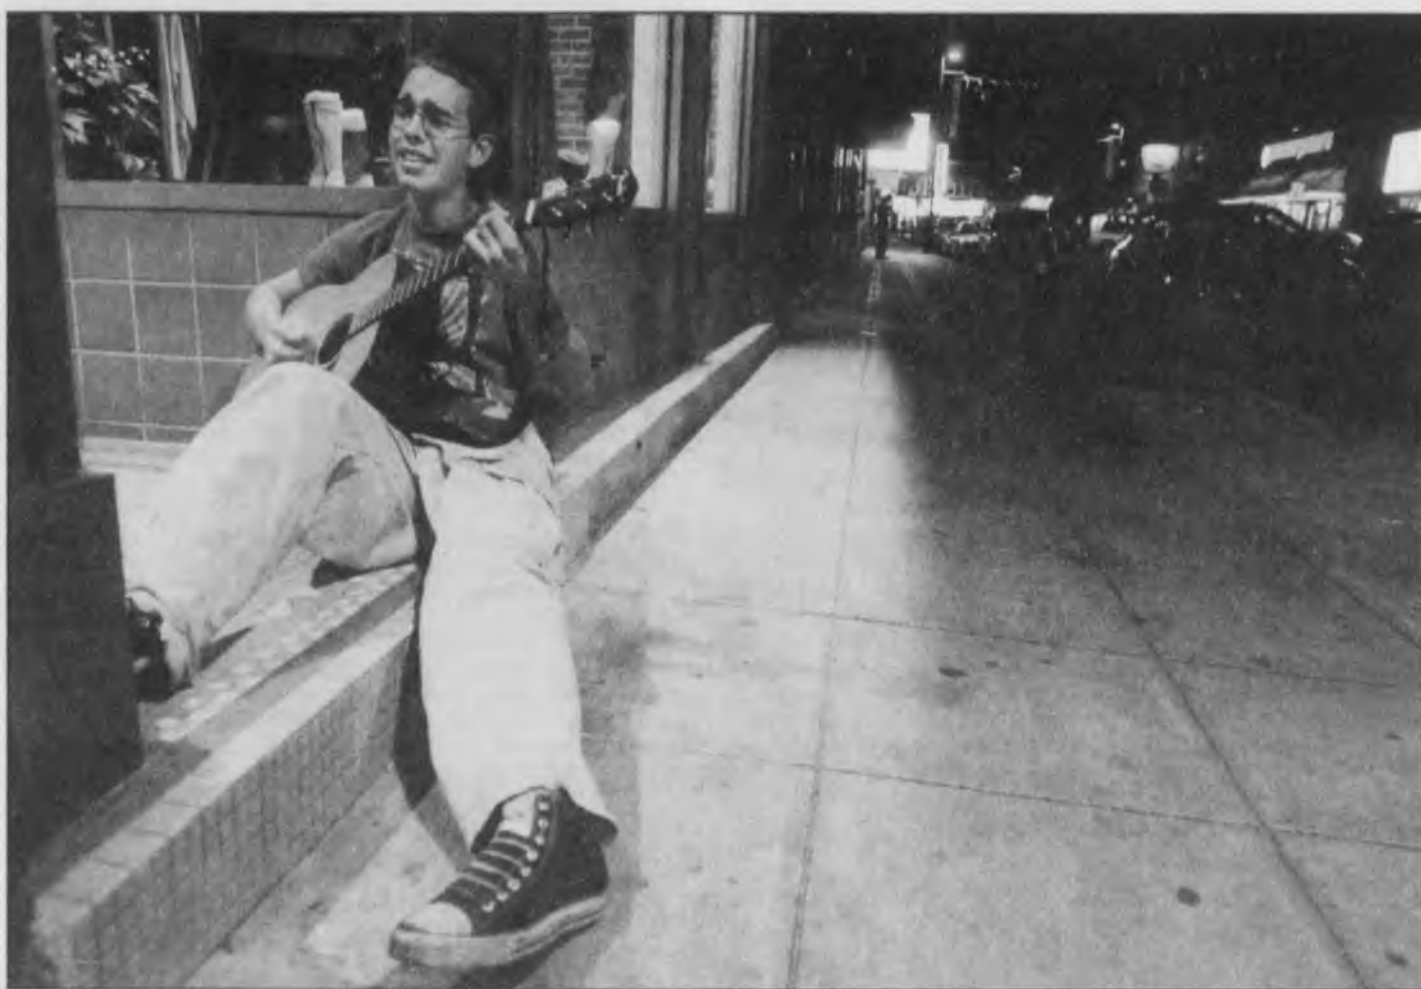

"I'm not interested in film, but it did inspire me to go after music," Cole said. "I was discouraged living in this part of the country, but now I am inspired."

Balderson said he turned his vision into a documentary - "Wamego: Making Movies Anywhere."

"Crazy stuff happens down here all the time, and it's great to just sit down here and play and take it all in."

Public performance

Local musicians use streetsides, walkways as their venues

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bars and restaurants aren't the only place to hear music in Aggieville.

When night arrives, local musicians take up posts on street corners and in front of small businesses, offering their wares for free or donations.

The reasons why they perform are many and range from the opportunity to make money to the simple pleasures of sharing their love of music with others and making new friends.

Hope Atchison, freshman in history, said she thinks the reasons to perform in public far outweigh the reasons against doing so.

"For one thing, it's less intimidating, because people can watch you if they want, but they don't have to," Atchison said. "If they don't like the music, they can just pass on by."

"It's also a good way to make some extra money. We've had donations of 20 and 50 bucks."

Kyle Schwartz, first-year student at the Kansas Massage Institute in Topeka, said the money is nice, but there are other reasons why playing in Aggieville is fun.

"It's great to get donations, but it's also fun to meet new and different types of people," said Schwartz. "Crazy stuff happens down here all the time, and it's great to just sit down here and play and take it all in."

Schwartz said he plays covers but feels the audiences enjoy original pieces, too.

"I play some of my originals, and they go over really well for the most part," he said.

"I'll also mix it up a bit and play some Radiohead, Dave Matthews Band, Tool, Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin - just about anything."

Miguel Caraballo, senior in music, said playing to the crowd is a must.

"We like to play original songs, but we also play requests and other songs that people want to hear," he said.

Caraballo said along with the joy of playing, musicians receive gifts from the crowds that can be both entertaining and lucrative.

"We've received a broken cell-phone, condoms, cigarettes and five Euros," Caraballo said. "We got them from a Spanish exchange student, but she said we had to keep them as a souvenir and couldn't spend them."

Schwartz said he is no stranger to odd offerings made by passers by either.

"I've received crackers, an angel pendant, a Dairy Queen pendant, peanut shells, lighters, a .22 bullet, and multivitamins to name a few," Schwartz said. "I've also gotten beer and cigarettes, though I'm only eighteen."

Aside from monetary donations and souvenirs, people offer themselves as donations.

"Quite often people will stop and ask us if they can play along," Atchison said. "It's really awesome, because a lot of them are really good musicians, and it's always wonderful to add extra talent to the group."

The musicians aren't the only ones who enjoy the music either.

Matt Simmons, senior in social sciences, said he appreciates the fact Aggieville offers more than the usual night life.

"It's good that Aggieville has people who will go out and play," he said. "I like the variety it adds, and I like the music if it's good."

Caraballo said despite having some negative responses, most are positive.

"Sometimes people drive by and give you stuck-up looks, and some people think they're cool and say some things that are less than desirable, but for the most part people like it and are courteous," he said.

Schwartz said he also thinks most people appreciate the musicians' presence in Aggieville.

"There are always people who don't appreciate you, but I've heard that I've gotten better," he said.

"As long as I continue to improve and people get the same enjoyment that I do, that's all that matters."

Audience to become victims at Murder Mystery Dinner Theatre

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Murder Mystery Dinner Theatre is an event filled with mystery, suspense and food to die for.

That is how Krista Biddle, Traditions Committee co-chair, said the Union Program Council has been describing the event.

"Basically it is a full evening event," Biddle, junior in public relations, said. "It's secretive and includes a lot of audience participation, because audience members are victims."

Biddle said the first part of the performance is talking to people and getting to know one another. She said dinner will be served throughout the entire performance.

"We normally do a dinner theater each semester," Biddle said. "It normally is a play, or something that will involve the audience more, like this."

Debbie Gates, Murder Mystery producer, said people should check out the performance, because it is something different.

"People should come, because it's interesting," Gates said. "It tickles the imagination and is a lot of fun."

Gates said the performance probably isn't what most people would expect. "It's different, because the actors are among the audience, and you don't know who the actors are," Gates said. "People end up dying, and clues are dropped."

"People help solve the crime with the detective that comes in."

Gates said Keith and the Margos Murder Mystery troupe have been performing for the past 20 years at many events. She said the story always changes at each performance.

Ex-boxer wins round in Stallone suit

Former heavyweight boxer Chuck Wepner won the first round of his legal dispute against Sylvester Stallone, although the actor managed to score some points with the judge.

U.S. District Judge Katharine Hayden denied Stallone's bid to dismiss the lawsuit, permitting a trial on one of Wepner's claims: that Stallone inappropriately used Wepner's name to promote his "Rocky" movies.

But Hayden knocked out Wepner's two other claims: that Stallone was unjustly enriched by trading on Wepner's life story and that Wepner suffered by relying on Stallone's promises. Hayden did not schedule a trial date.

France's first gay television channel, PinkTV, is an eye-opener. And that's the point. Pink's founders believe there's a ready audience for the channel, and not just among France's estimated 3.5 million gay people.

Pink's "a giant leap for television, a small step in high heels," said presenter Eric Gueho in a promotional clip shown at the channel's unveiling Tuesday.

Documentary on life of Fred Rogers out on DVD

Mister Rogers arrived on DVD Tuesday in a commemorative documentary about the life of the man in the cardigan sweater and sneakers.

The Emmy-nominated, three-hour documentary, "Fred Rogers: America's Favorite Neighbor," chronicles the life of Rogers, an ordained Presbyterian minister who produced, wrote and hosted "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood" for more than 30 years.

In January, the film was shown on PBS and was nominated for prime-time Emmys in the categories of nonfiction special and writing for nonfiction programming.

American forces continue attacks on al-Zarqawi bases

Convoy attacks, gun battles rage across Iraq as coalition targets Jordanian-led terror network

By Kim Housego
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — American forces bombed a suspected hideout used by the militant group of Abu Musab al-Zarqawi in Fallujah on Tuesday, and the military said its frequent strikes have taken a toll on the leadership of the Jordanian-born terror leader's network.

But in a sign of strength, dozens of militants — some waving banners of al-Zarqawi's Tawhid and Jihad group — drove freely through the streets of another central Iraqi city, Samarra, where U.S. and Iraqi commanders had claimed success weeks ago in suppressing the insurgency. The gunmen waved automatic rifles and rocket-propelled grenade launchers, stopping cars and taking music tapes from passengers — giving them tapes with recitations from the Muslim holy book, the Quran, in exchange.

Jordan's King Abdullah II warned in an interview published on Tuesday that extremists — "the best organized faction" in Iraq — would emerge the victors if elections are held on schedule in January amid the current chaos.

al-Zarqawi
MILITANT LEADER

In the southern city of Basra, insurgents attacked a British military convoy, killing two British soldiers, the Ministry of Defense in London said.

U.S. warplanes struck in Fallujah at about 4 a.m., and there was no immediate word on casualties. Early reports showed that no civilians were in the area when the blast went off, the military said.

Intelligence reports indicated that the militants targeted in the strike were "rising" associates of al-Zarqawi and "planning attacks using foreign suicide bombers in vehicles rigged with explosives," the military said.

The military said weeks of airstrikes in rebel-held Fallujah have exacted a heavy toll on al-Zarqawi's network and intelligence indicates the al-Qaeda-linked group has been forced to reorganize its leadership.

Al-Zarqawi's group has claimed responsibility for scores of suicide attacks and kidnappings across the country, as well as the recent beheading of two Americans. Last week, a top deputy to al-Zarqawi, Abu al-Anas al-Shami, was reported slain in a U.S. strike just outside Baghdad, and his father confirmed the death.

Monday night, U.S. warplanes were spotted over the city and explosions were heard. Residents said they saw a plane firing rockets into the city, but U.S. Marine officers said only illumination rounds were fired. Dr. Walid Thamer of the Fallujah General Hospital said at least three people were killed and nine wounded in that attack.

U.S. forces have not patrolled in Fallujah since ending a three-week siege of the city in April that left hundreds dead. Since then, insurgents have strengthened their grip on Fallujah, and military commanders say an assault may be inevitable to restore authority there ahead of nationwide elections slated for January.

Iraqi interim Prime Minister Iyad Allawi warned that a "decisive military solution" may soon be carried out in Fallujah if a political one is not found. "I think we waited more than enough for Fallujah," the Iraqi leader said in an interview aired late Monday on the Arab television network Al-Arabiya. He indicated Iraqi security forces would be used in any operation against the city.

Another possible target of an offensive is Samarra, where U.S. troops entered briefly on Sept. 9 under a peace deal brokered with tribal leaders aimed at breaking the insurgents' hold over the city. Allawi and U.S. commanders hailed the move into Samarra as a success in the fight against militants.

But since then, attacks in the city have increased, and for the first time gunmen on Tuesday made a bold public showing with their two-hour drive through Samarra's streets. Two of the vehicles they drove were police pick-up trucks, apparently confiscated by the insurgents.

"If elections take place in the current disorder, the best organized faction will be the extremists," Abdullah said. "The results will reflect this advantage of the extremists. In such a scenario, there will be no chance that the situation gets better."

Abdullah
KING OF JORDAN

Samarra has been under insurgent control and a virtual "no-go" area for U.S. troops since May 30.

King, Abdullah expressed his doubts that a proper election can be held "in the chaos of Iraq today," telling France's Le Figaro newspaper that "the situation is very, very difficult and in the immediate I don't see any chance of improvement."

"If elections take place in the current disorder, the best organized faction will be the extremists," Abdullah said. "The results will reflect this advantage of the extremists. In such a scenario, there will be no chance that the situation gets better."

The vote is a vital step in U.S. and Iraqi plans to move the country toward democracy, and Allawi and U.S. officials have insisted the vote must take place on time despite persistent violence.

In Baghdad, American troops and insurgents clashed Tuesday along central Baghdad's Haifa Street, an Iraqi Interior Ministry spokesman said, and half a dozen explosions rocked the city. There was no immediate word on casualties.

Haifa Street, an insurgent stronghold, has been the scene of bloody car bomb attacks, raids and fierce firefights. Dozens of suspected insurgents have been arrested there, including Syrian, Sudanese and Egyptian nationals.

U.S. aircraft also struck in Baghdad's Sadr City, the scene of continuing battles with Shiite militiamen. One Iraqi was killed and three injured, said Qassem Saddam of the Imam Ali hospital in the district.

In other developments:

— The U.S. military announced the detention of a suspected leader of an insurgent cell during a raid in the northern city of Kirkuk, the military said in a statement. Hussein Salman Mohammed al-Jbouri is suspected of leading a cell based in Kirkuk and nearby

Hawijah that aligns itself with Ansar al-Sunna, a Sunni Muslim group that has claimed responsibility for the beheading of 12 Nepalese hostages, the military said.

— Gunmen killed five members of Iraq's intelligence agency in Basra as they were returning a civilian freed from kidnappers to his family, said Maj. Jasim al-Darraj, an intelligence officer. The man was rescued by Iraqi authorities Monday and as the agents approached his family's residence, the gunmen opened fire. Authorities have been able to free some 15 hostages in Basra and capture about 30 members of kidnapping gangs in the past two months, al-Darraj said.

— A roadside bomb exploded on a street in Baghdad's central Karrada district, wounding three civilians, Interior Ministry spokesman Col. Adnan Abdul-Rahman said. The blast shattered windows and damaged several vehicles.

— A car bomb exploded in Ramadi, west of Baghdad, as a U.S. military convoy was passing by, damaging one American vehicle, said police Capt. Abdul-Razaq al-Duleimi. He said there were no immediate reports of any injuries.

One of six kidnapped Egyptian engineers working for a telecommunications company here was freed, Egypt's charge d'affaire in Baghdad, Farouq Mabrouk, confirmed Tuesday. "The kidnapping was motivated by financial reasons," he said,

Strong earthquake shakes 350-mile stretch of California

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARKFIELD, Calif. — A strong earthquake struck central California on Tuesday that was felt from San Francisco to the Los Angeles area. There were no immediate reports of injuries.

The quake, which struck at 10:15 a.m. PDT, had a preliminary magnitude of 6.0 and was centered 7 miles southeast of Parkfield, the town known as California's earthquake capital, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

The area is 21 miles northeast of Paso Robles, scene of an earthquake that killed two people in December.

"I had stuff everywhere... lamps and pictures and stuff on the floor," said Willa Sell, 77, who lives on a ranch outside Park-field.

"I was happy when it was over. It was a real shaker."

A series of aftershocks quickly rattled the area, one with a preliminary 5.0 magnitude four minutes after the main earthquake and three others 4.1 or above.

A little more than an hour after the main earthquake, a spokesman for the state Office of Emergency Services said the office hadn't received any reports of injury or damage.

"The aftershocks are tracking toward the northwest, which is good, according to the scientists, because it appears it is not a precursor to something larger," said Eric Lamoureux, an emergency services spokesman.

The quake was felt along a 350-mile stretch, as far north as

San Francisco and as far south as Santa Ana, southeast of Los Angeles, the geological survey said.

The Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department reported receiving several calls.

Parkfield, population 37, is located on the San Andreas fault and has experienced six similar, magnitude 6.0 earthquakes with apparent regularity — one approximately every 22 years.

The USGS even named its major long-term earthquake research project the Parkfield Experiment.

"This is earthquake country. It's a larger earthquake than what usually occurs, but it's not unprecedented," said USGS spokeswoman Stephanie Hanna.

"We expect big earthquakes in this area, but don't know when they'll occur."

The Dec. 22, 2003, earthquake collapsed old downtown buildings in Paso Robles, pitching an 1892 clock-tower building onto the street and crushing a row of parked cars.

Two people were killed in the state's first fatal quake since the 6.7-magnitude temblor that hit the Northridge area of Los Angeles in 1994.

Since December, many residents of the area have taken precautions to protect their property and valuables from the next inevitable temblor.

"I respect them, let's put it that way," Mary Vanderwert, 57, said by telephone Tuesday from her Paso Robles home.

She experienced Tuesday's quake as a series of ripples and vibrations.

"It just tickled your feet and then all of a sudden it's jerking and then the whips started."

The USGS estimate of magnitude was strengthened from 5.8, or "moderate," to 6.0, the threshold for a "strong" earthquake.

Preliminary magnitudes are determined by seismographs across the planet, and often change as scientists pinpoint where the epicenter is and interpret the data.

A magnitude 5 quake can cause considerable damage and a magnitude 6 quake severe damage, though problems are generally far less severe in remote areas and areas with strong building codes.

"We have good architecture and good building codes in California," Hanna said.

Floridians recover from Jeanne

By Deborah Hastings
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT PIERCE, Fla. — Floridians were again settling into the discomforts of a post-hurricane reality: lines for bags of ice or a hot meal, damaged homes that will take months to repair, and stifling heat and darkness amid widespread power outages.

Hurricane Jeanne, the fourth storm to hammer the state in six weeks, has left behind a trail of death, destruction and frustration.

"We're weary. We're tired. We have been doing this for more than 30 days," said Jay Clark, the owner of CYS Yacht Management and Sales in Fort Pierce, on Monday. "Preparation, then cleanup. Preparation, then cleanup."

Jeanne killed at least six people in Florida during the weekend, bearing down upon the state with winds of 120 mph. The havoc caused by hurricanes Charley, Frances, Ivan and Jeanne have prompted the largest relief effort ever undertaken by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

President Bush asked Congress late Monday for more than $7.1 billion to help Florida and other Southeastern states recover from their lashing by four hurricanes. His third request for additional storm aid brings total possible funding to at least $12.2 billion.

Patience was in demand at staging areas along the state's central Atlantic coast, where volunteers from the Salvation Army and the American Red Cross passed out bags of ice and containers of water to help residents keep cool under temperatures in the high 80s and massive power outages.

In Indiantown, a line of 40 cars waited in the parking lot of a strip mall where volunteers loaded bags of ice from a semitrailer that had arrived from St. Louis. Residents left behind homes without electricity to dine on hot plates of ravioli and corn and bottles of Snapple.

"It hasn't been a fun month," said Louann Dowling, 40, of Satellite Beach, who picked up food and ice for her four children.

Florida is the first state to get pounded by four hurricanes in one season since Texas in 1886. Two months remain in the 2004 hurricane season.

Dowling said the combination of the storms have caused financial hardships; her husband lost his job in the telecommunications industry after Frances, and she has had her hours cut back at the hospital.

Down the line, Jeff Sermon, 46, a car dealer, and Ann Yates, 43, sat in their red pickup truck in search of a hot meal, ice and water to bring back to their house in Melbourne Beach that lacks power.

"I have an awful headache," Yates said, reclining in the passenger seat, perspiring in the hot, humid weather.

At the only Home Depot in nearby Vero Beach, 75 people waited for tarps, gas cans and other supplies to begin repairing their homes. In a separate line, 25 people waited for generators on the promise that a shipment of 300 was on the way.

In Fort Pierce, Gladys Caldwell knew exactly how long she had waited for water and ice at a distribution station — "two hours and 18 minutes" — but could keep it all in perspective. The city's historic downtown area was marked by dangling power lines and flooded roads.

"I thank God that at least I have part of my house," Caldwell said. "Some people lost everything."

The unprecedented relief effort includes more than 5,000 FEMA workers spread over 15 states. Nearly 3,800 National Guardsmen were providing security, directing traffic, distributing supplies and keeping gas lines orderly.

In Florida alone, relief workers have passed out at least 16 million meals, 9 million gallons of water and nearly 59 million pounds of ice over the course of the four storms, state officials said.

COLUMN | Newly named stadiums lack legacies

Not a bad way to make a quick buck, and the name is a little scarier than the RCA Dome, right?

Wrong. This renaming the parks to the highest bidder stuff has got to stop. Because of this, we get ridiculously named stadiums and parks such as Network Associates Coliseum and Qualcomm Stadium. They may be the same exact stadium before the name change, but the selling of the naming rights dulls the elaborate pasts each has had.

No matter what memories were made in the formerly named stadium, once the name change happens, the history starts over.

But the real problem is, the newly named stadiums won't have time to create a new legacy. The names are changing faster than Britney Spears has had her last name hyphenated this year.

I'm sure new memories will be made in the newly named parks, and when I'm old and telling grandkids about the stadiums of yore, I'll remember the newer names of the stadiums and what happened there. But I want to be able to tell them about stadiums that kept the same name all those years and built an even stronger legacy.

Stadiums such as Soldier Field in Chicago have the right idea — renovate and update the stadiums as needed, but keep the tradition alive by leaving the original name of the park. It brings the stadiums and fans that fill them closer.

There are a few park names, such as Turner Field, Coors Field and Heinz Field, that may last and start new traditions.

I know these names were bought, too, but to me they have a comfort to them and provide a place that feels like home.

MIDWEEK | Off-week practices boost team's spirit

also marks the sixth straight season K-State has opened conference play on the road. The Wildcats are 2-4 overall in conference openers and have not won a road-conference opener since 2000.

READY TO PLAY

After an off-week, Wildcat players said they are ready to get back on the field after practicing against each other for the past two weeks.

"It felt like two-a-days all over again," senior cornerback David Rose said. "We are ready to play somebody again."

Under Snyder, the Wildcats are 10-3 coming off a bye-week but are on a two-game losing streak since 2002. K-State's last win after a bye week came in 2001 against New Mexico State.

Senior tight end Brian Casey said the team's emotion during the off-week practices was better.

"Last week, we had real good practices, we were more spirited in practice," Casey said. "We are ready to play on Saturday to show what we are this year."

THESE GAMES COUNT

The Wildcats move into the conference season after a 2-1 non-conference record and are looking to defend their Big 12 championship — a feat no team has accomplished since the conference's inception in 1996.

Rose said there is definitely a difference between non-conference and conference play.

"We could be 0-3 right now, and we could still make it to the Big 12 championship," Rose said. "These are the games that count and now it's time to step up."

K-State hopes to become the first school in Big 12 history with 50 conference wins.

SALARIES | Rates of compensation for commissioners vary in Riley County

Taussig said the $100 monthly stipend covers expenses involved with being a commissioner but it "certainly is no income."

County Commissioner Al Johnson said the pay is greatly different because they are two different forms of government.

"County commissioners actually manage the county because there is no county manager," he said. "Manhattan actually has a city manager that runs the city. The commissioners don't spend the hours the county commissioner does."

While most city commissioners work elsewhere, the amount of time spent as a county commissioner makes it difficult for a county commissioner to hold another job, Johnson said.

"If you own your own business and can afford to be gone two or three times a week, you could do that," he said.

Johnson said county commissioners usually are people who have retired.

"If you look back, historically most commissioners have been in this situation," he said. "You have to have some flexibility."

have been studying insects. After collecting insects on an insect safari, the children made posters, habitats in pop bottles and a menu of bug meals.

Charlotte Congleton, second grade teacher, said the Wonder Workshop has been expanding the learning outside the classroom after losing their building.

"It's awesome. Their loss is our gain," she said. "They need to find a spot for them because the community needs them."

Now the children at Woodrow are learning interviewing skills as they survey teachers on their knowledge of common bug facts.

Alex Brown, 7, usually answers the questions before the teachers, though.

"A bug is something larger than in insect," he told one teacher.

Brown brings his praying mantis named Katie to the Wonder Workshop program every day.

"She spreads out her wings, and that's how she says 'leave me alone,'" he said.

Emmanuel Hardy, 8, remembers the old workshop at the blue house on Poyntz.

"It's a lot different now," he said. "We don't do as much stuff."

Pitts said some of the exhibits and programming do have limitations.

For more information

For more information about the Wonder Workshop call 776-1234 or visit www.kansas.net/~wonder.

"One thing that isn't as predominant is our exhibits. They are a lot more limited now," he said. "We don't have the opportunity to travel to too many places. People have not heard the word that we closed, and they call and try to book tours to our museum. That part is sad."

The workshop is expanding to serve middle and high school students through cultural programming including African drumming presentations. Students of all ages also are working on a documentary about Manhattan to present at the city's 150th birthday celebration in 2005.

"Elementary school kids have quite a bit going on in this community," Pitts said. "We have been looking to middle school and high school students as well. There seems to be less for those kids to do. We try to fill the gap."

Funding for the materials is derived from tuition, as well as grants from various local and federal funds. Pitts said he hopes to purchase a building in the next three years to reopen the museum.

"We want to do the best we can with what we have," he said.

Locals eager to watch presidential debates

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Presidential candidates John Kerry and George W. Bush will face off tonight in the first of three debates — a series that could prove important in such a close race.

"The race is still relatively close, although I think Bush is slightly ahead, so there is opportunity there," said David Procter, head of the speech communication, theatre and dance department. "I think that a lot of people have concerns about foreign policy. That's what this first debate is going to be about.

"People are going to be interested in what the two people have to say. It can make a difference."

Voters will be looking for evidence of Kerry's ability to connect to people while Bush has to defend his decision to go to war in Iraq, Procter said.

"John Kerry has to communicate that he makes a connection with people not only based on what he says but how he says it," Procter said. "For Bush, a bigger concern is a disconnect between what he and others are saying about the situation in Iraq. Everyone else seems to say Iraq is falling apart. He's got that kind of threshold to make it over."

Kristin Wagner, head of technology for College Republicans, said this first debate is important because of the foreign policy focus.

"They will be very important especially with the war issue," she said. "A lot of people are strongly against it, and that's why they are looking toward Kerry. The debates will be good so people can ask questions about that and vote accordingly."

Vehicle strikes woman on campus

No injuries were inflicted Tuesday after Danae Doubek, senior in biology, stepped off a curb on campus and was struck by a van.

K-State Police Capt. Robert Mellgren said Doubek left the scene without being admitted to any hospital.

"She left with a few bumps and bruises," Mellgren said.

Doubek was in front of the Military Science Building when she walked into the street. The red Plymouth Voyager could not stop in time, Mellgren said.

The accident was reported at about 10:40 a.m. Tuesday.

Mellgren said it would be incorrect to say that accidents such as this do not happen, but very few are reported.

"Usually they are such minor accidents that it's not reported at all," Mellgren said.

He said, although pedestrians have the right of way, they should still be cautious.

"People cannot just walk into the street — they've got to stay attentive," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said the report did not indicate if Doubek was in the crosswalk or not.

He said the most dangerous crosswalks in the past have been any street on campus that is a through street.

"The through streets on campus, especially Mid-Campus Drive, see the most accidents because the pedestrians just aren't paying attention," Mellgren said.

AP misreports details of coach's contract

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A portion of head football coach Bill Snyder's contract was erroneously reported initially by the Associated Press, a K-State administration official said Wednesday.

Tuesday afternoon, the AP reported Snyder was guaranteed revenue from clothing and equipment manufacturers along with compensation for radio, television and university fund-raising appearances as a part of an additional $1.34 million in his contract.

Snyder does not receive a fixed percentage of revenues from clothing and equipment manufacturers, according to Assistant Vice President for Institutional Advancement and Director of Licensing John Fairman.

Under his current contract, Snyder receives 50 percent of payments made to the university from the team's shoe and clothing contract with Nike, Fairman said.

The AP corrected the story later Tuesday afternoon and released a correction Wednesday for all AP

Animal feed research ongoing

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This little piggy went to market. Well, not yet.

Crystal Groesbeck has been working on a mix of grains for feed for swine as a research project.

Groesbeck, doctoral student in swine nutrition, said it is simpler and cheaper with her research to look at the mixes available for swine food, but the applications of that research have yet to be sent to mass production.

Groesbeck's research looks at mixing times and performance by trying to mix efficiently and create the best selection for the animal's performance.

The mixture Groesbeck uses includes corn, soybean, vitamins and minerals.

"I've done the majority of my master's (research) looking at mixing this stuff," Groesbeck said. "This is a follow-up with the research."

Groesbeck started working on her doctorate a few months ago and said there will be several other projects to coordinate.

"I enjoy the research, working specifically with swine nutrition, doing something that is applied, which is awesome," Groesbeck said.

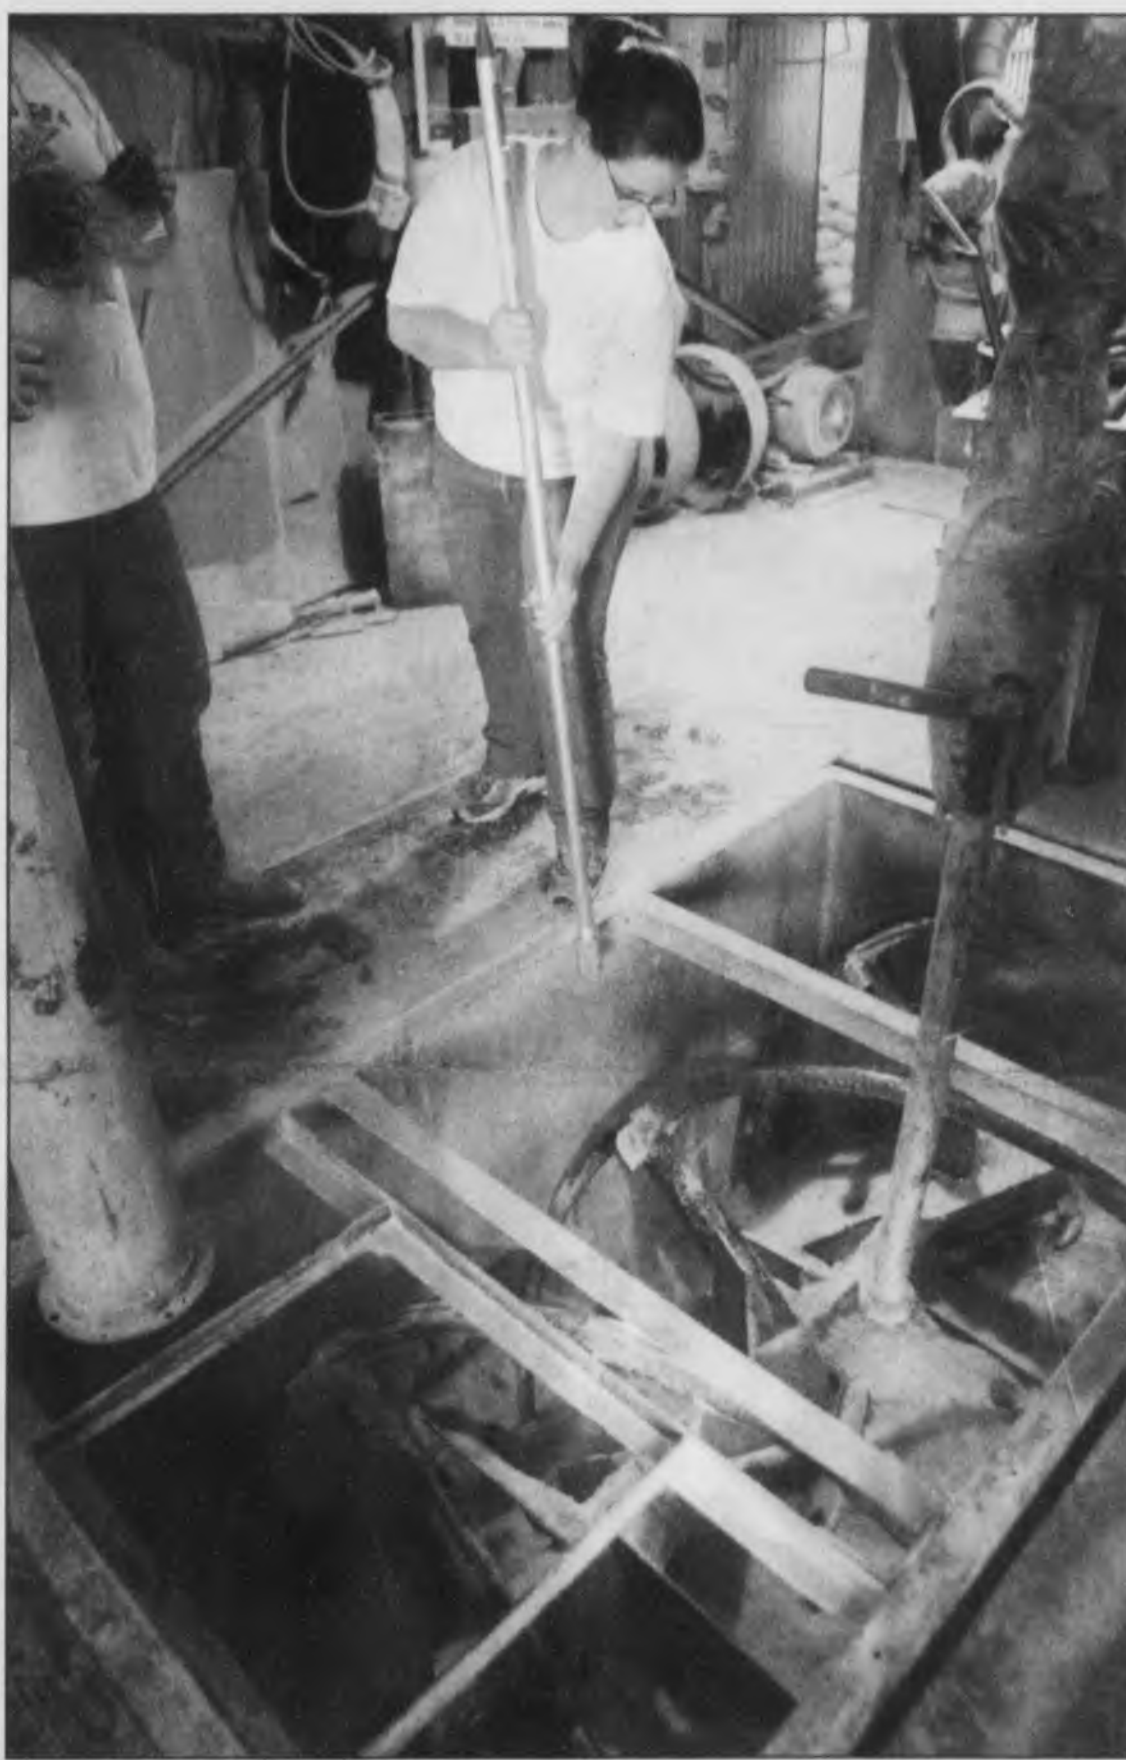

"I don't have to wait for prices to drop or companies to invent new things. I do it on my own."

Groesbeck hails from California and became involved with swine nutrition through 4-H when she was younger, she said.

"When I tell people I feed pigs, they usually say, 'are you sure that's what you want to do with the rest of your life?' I get a strange reaction with it, and it's incredibly awesome," she said.

Her project could be completed by Friday.

"My professor thinks it's a good thing I like my labs so much, and I suppose that's the truth," Groesbeck said. "I'm sure, though, that everyone else is ready to move on."

Above: Crystal Groesbeck, graduate student in animal science, takes feed samples out of the mixer after they have been mixed with other grains. Groesbeck will take the samples back to the lab for testing.

Far Left: Jake Capron, junior in feed science, pulls the mixing funnel toward another drop bin so it can be mixed with other grains. Capron assists graduate students with their experiments and prepares animals' feed.

Discussion panel hopes to put diversity into action

Anthony Garcia, sophomore in open-option, answers a question regarding diversity Wednesday afternoon during a discussion panel. The event was sponsored by the Multicultural Business Student Association.

Group stresses listening, learning

By Courtney Keith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Multicultural Business Student Association's goal was to put "Diversity in Action" during a panel discussion in the Union courtyard Wednesday.

"We want to bring real diversity issues to the table. We need to bring diversity into everyday life," said Thaddeus Murrell, president of MBSA.

Murrell was moderator for the panel including students, an adviser and a local business owner.

Eric Blevins, a member of the panel, pressed the importance of diversity.

"Diversity is important because it is a cohesive bind that looks past boundaries of gender, race and ethnicity and helps us move forward as a whole," Blevins said.

Josh Criswell, sophomore in kinesiology and member of Black Student Union, said he thinks diversity goes even deeper.

"Diversity is my life. I see it when I get up in the morning and look in the mirror, but when I go to class I don't see myself," Criswell said.

The panel talked about stereotypes and breaking down not only racist ideologies, but also breaking down all "isms." They encouraged enlightening others in small ways.

"You have to step out of your comfort zone. Start with just saying hi," said Anthony Garcia, Multicultural Affairs Director for Student Senate.

Garcia also serves as vice president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization and is an active member of the Queer Straight Alliance.

"I participated in this panel to represent a more diverse generation and to inform others of the cultural diversity that is on campus and how open we are to discuss relevant issues," Garcia said.

Blevins emphasized the importance of listening.

"Listen instead of reacting," Blevins said. "If you do this, you can't help but learn."

Patience Jackson, freshman in nutrition and exercise science, said she is a student of diversity.

"I came to the event for a leadership class requirement, but I would have come anyway," Jackson said. "It is important to address diversity because at K-State students can go all four years and not have a minority student in their classes."

Jill Fritzemeier, freshman in dietetics, said she came from a high school with only two minority students.

"I think diversity is important because I am ignorant of what others go through," Fritzemeier said. "Events like this help me to learn more."

Kara Wilder, president of the American Ethnic Studies Student Association, discussed her vision for our naturally diverse society.

"I want people to feel more comfortable when addressing diversity issues," Wilder said. "They need to seek education and be more accepting of others."

MBSA is open to all students. The next meeting is 6 p.m. Oct. 4 in Calvin 218.

Kansas photo project goes on display in Washington, D.C.

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Vicky Borchers traveled 8,500 miles and used 42 rolls of film as she took pictures Kansas in every county of Kansas.

Borchers participated in a national project called State Art, which hopes to have a compilation of photographs from every state in the nation.

Currently 21 photographers have captured 35 states, she said. She said the man who organized the event is a friend from Texas.

"I am good friends with Rick Vanderpool, and he organized the whole thing," she said. "At first I did it as a favor for him, but it ended up being a total blast."

Borchers said she extended her project over a two-year period.

"I photographed on my break between classes," she said. "Plus, I didn't really want to be in western Kansas in July."

On a good day, Borchers said she could average about eight counties, but things were not always easy.

"At one point my shutter broke, and I didn't even know it until I got the pictures developed," she said. "I lost 15 counties and had to drive back out and re-shoot them."

State Art is currently on display at the Washington D.C. School of Art.

The goal of State Art is to capture all 50 states by 2006.

"If we accomplish our goal, all the photographers will fly out to Hawaii," she said. "Then we will all work together to photograph that state."

Judy Roland, academic advisor for interior architecture and design, is a friend of Borchers, said she was amazed at her hard work.

"It is a huge job," she said. "Vicky should be applauded for putting in so much time."

It shocked Roland how difficult the project was at times.

"I thought the word Kansas would be readily found," she said. "I didn't know that in some places it would be hard to find the word."

Roland said Borchers drove up and down alleys at times, or looking on street signs.

Borchers said the city of Wichita was the most difficult city to find the word in.

"I found the word Wichita everywhere," she said. "It was so hard to find the word Kansas."

Vanderpool dreamed up the project when he started photographing black and white pictures for his wife to hand color.

"The inspiration of the project is simple," he said. "It is to look for the state name in its infinite variety and beauty."

Vanderpool, who has been working on the project for six years, said the teamwork has been great between the photographers.

"I put together the photographers over the phone, e-mail and just by looking at their portfolios," he said. "It's amazing how successful it's been, and we have never laid eyes on each other."

Vanderpool is more than satisfied with how the project has turned out.

"We have come up with a unique expression of state pride," he said.

"Over 100 images of the state name compiled together has never been done before."

Terror convicts receive death sentences

By Ahmed Al-Haj
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN'A, Yemen — A Saudi suspected of being an associate of Osama bin Laden and a Yemeni militant were sentenced to death by firing squad Wednesday for the bombing of the USS Cole four years ago, the first convictions in the al-Qaeda terror attack that killed 17 American sailors.

The judge ordered four other Yemenis jailed for five to 10 years.

With army snipers on nearby rooftops and armored vehicles and soldiers surrounding the courthouse, Judge Najib al-Qaderi handed down guilty verdicts in trial that saw the five defendants in Yemen's custody refuse to enter pleas, claiming U.S. interference in the case.

The judge ordered Jamal al-

Badawi and Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri executed for plotting the attack by two suicide bombers who blew up an explosives-laden boat next to the Cole as it refueled in the Yemeni port of Aden on Oct. 12, 2000.

In reading the verdict, the judge pointed to the prosecution's statement that Badawi and al-Nashiri bought the speedboat the bombers rammed into the Cole.

TO THE POINT Presidential debates give clearer views

The 2004 presidential election will probably be one of the most critical in our lifetimes. The winner will have the task of directing the war on terror, shaping our foreign policy and most likely nominating a slate of new Supreme Court justices, effectively directing our nation's domestic policy, as well.

Both major parties and groups such as the Swift Boat

Veterans for Truth and MoveOn.org are well aware of this fact and have flooded America with propaganda for both candidates.

Comedy shows, biased news sources and disgruntled employees have tried to influence the outcome of this race.

Rather than relying on those with ulterior motives, students should make their decisions based on the one area where special interest groups, political fat cats and shady political action committees will be barred: the debates.

The debate tonight is your chance to see for yourself how the candidates compare, how well they know their policies and the skill with which they make their cases.

We cannot allow special interest groups or big money decide our futures for us; we should take advantage of the opportunity to make that choice for ourselves.

FRIDAY'S OPINIONS

LETA REPERT

Leta Reppert discusses the problem with partisan voter registration.

Abby Hiles describes the growing feud between Jon Stewart and Bill O'Reilly.

ABBY HILES

Casting ballot leads to change

Rock the vote.
Make a difference.
Piss off your parents.
There are lots of reasons to vote, and if your education was anything like mine, you've been force-fed that fact since your first gasping breath for oxygen.

JAMES HURLA

Your doctor, as he held you by your feet and slapped your bottom, said "Vote Republican - they keep your health care costs high and my paycheck even higher."

At this point, babies either cry or ask for a campaign button. Believe it or not, there is a reason society has been pushing you to vote.

It's important. Just like your mother telling you not to sneak up behind Mr. Caribou while you were on vacation, it is feasible others understand the scheme of the world slightly better than you.

Voting can make a difference. Ask the thousands of people who failed to vote in Florida in 2000.

Ask the hundreds in only a few counties who could have altered the future of the world if they would have voted for Al "The Bore" Gore.

Granted, we don't live in a swing state. The candidates came to Kansas very early in the campaigns to celebrate the Brown v. Board of Education anniversary and haven't given the state a second thought.

This is one of many feeble excuses college kids from Kansas give not to vote. None is acceptable.

1. KANSAS ALWAYS VOTES REPUBLICAN

Two of our past three governors have been Democrats. One of our four representatives in the House is a Democrat.

The only thing at this point keeping the Republicans dominant is the disorganization of Democrats.

If all registered Democrats voted, they could blow any Republican candidate out of the water.

Lucky for us, they're all a bunch of jackasses.

2. ONE VOTE DOESN'T COUNT

My grandmother-in-law voted against Franklin D. Roosevelt four times. Why did she think her vote mattered in some of the most lopsided losses in electoral history? Because she also voted in local races, and she made the difference.

She and her husband filled out absentee ballots during World War II for a candidate they believed in strongly. They took the time to get the ballot, complete it and return it despite the physical distance separating them from the race.

Their candidate won by a single vote.

Not all races will be this close, obviously, but the possibility exists. Jim Ryan is the Republican incumbent facing off against Democratic challenger Nancy Boyda in one of the nation's most-heated Congressional races. Your vote could make the difference.

I realize how theoretical and corny this all sounds. But if nothing else, you can cancel out your parents' votes. After all, you are a lot smarter than them.

James is a senior in political science and public relations. Please send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

Electoral system a hoax

I've always been pretty serious about politics.

Even when I was a kid, I was a devoted Republican. This was not because I had any idea what the Republican Party stood for, or because my family was Republican. It was because I liked the mascot.

CHANCE YORK

Really, when you think about it, elephant always defeats donkey.

The elephant is the largest land mammal and a magnificent beast. The donkey is a small animal used for hauling and long-distance travel in third world countries.

There's no debate here, folks. Go Republicans!

But my dedication to both the Republican Party and politics in general came to an end in high school.

Year after year I would vote for the homecoming king and queen, even though I didn't believe in having a monarchy in a public school, and year after year the people I selected would lose.

Of course, it probably didn't help I was writing in "Captain Crunch" every year, but still I realized then even high school voting systems don't work, and my faith in politics came to a close.

Fast forward to this November, when millions of Americans will be turning out to the polls to vote for the man they believe is least likely to run our country into the ground.

On one side of the ballot we have President George W. Bush, whose loyal followers will be out in force, prepared to give Bush their full support before safely returning to the asylum.

The Democratic presidential contender is John Kerry, the horse favored to win this race if he doesn't decide to drop out first.

Then there's independent candidate Ralph Nader, who has lost.

You know, bearing in mind the candidates, even the act of registering to vote would appear completely pointless, but, I have to change my negative view on voting right now, because I realize this is the most important time in our history to be casting a vote.

Voting in this election will decide our futures and our children's. It will determine our fate as a great and powerful nation, or as a country of cowards. Thousands of years from now people will be saying, "Remember that Bush/Kerry election? That was critical!"

Yep. I can definitely say voting is not a waste of time. Or is it?

The answer? Yes, the entire voting process is simply a huge waste of time.

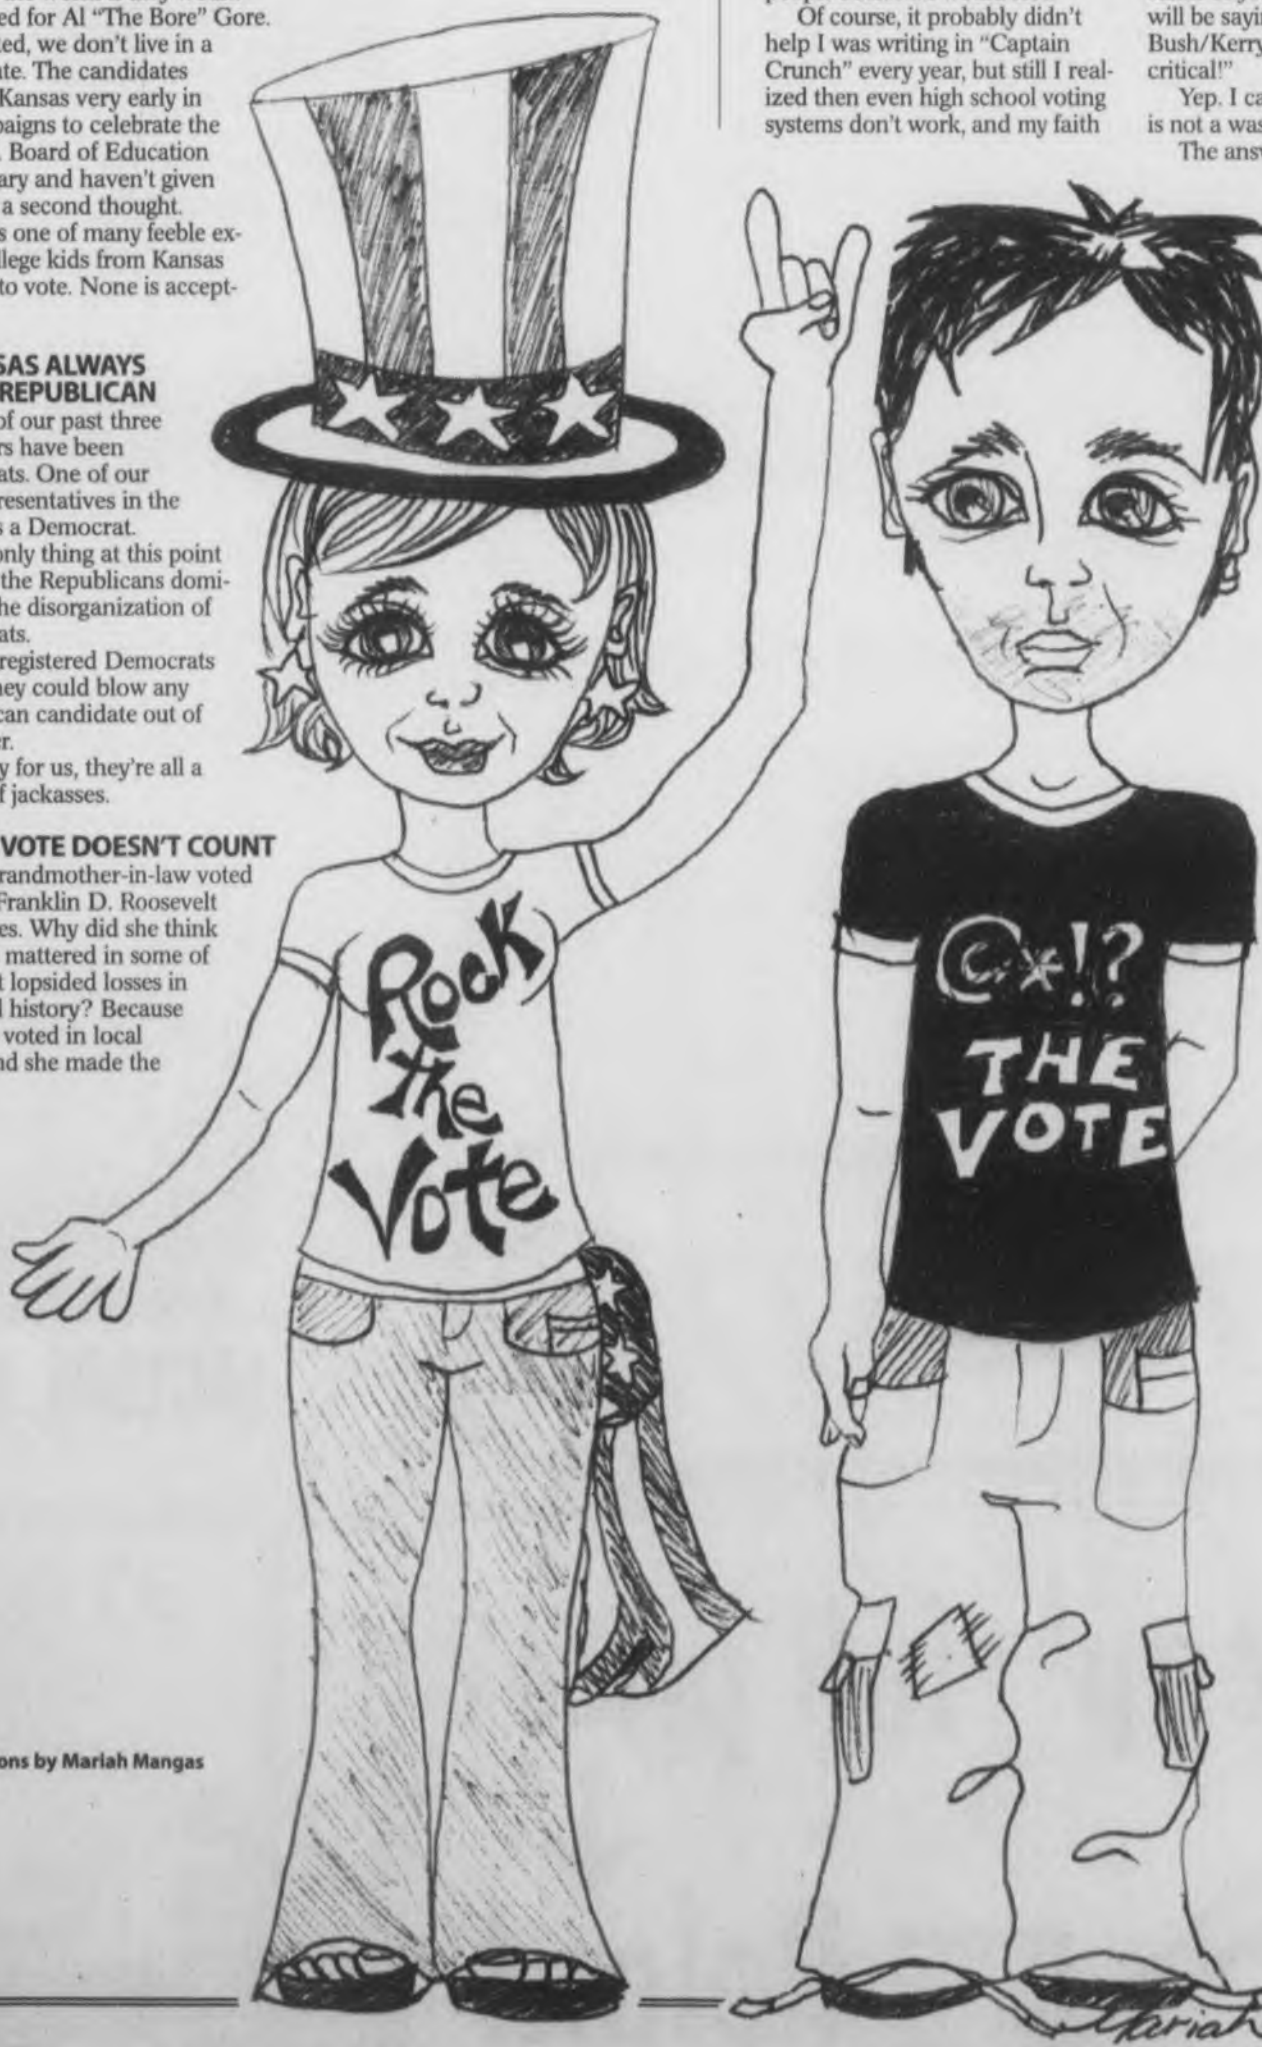

According to federal statistics, Al Gore actually won the popular vote in 2000 by more than a half million votes and still ended up losing the election.

Gore had more votes, and he lost. That doesn't make any sense at all.

Here's the truth: voting is all just a big hoax, like UFOs.

And that's precisely why you'll see me at the polls this November - I love buying into hoaxes.

Team effort takes down Sooners

The No. 15 women's volleyball team won its third straight Big 12 Conference match and second straight on the road Wednesday night 3-1, beating the Oklahoma Sooners 30-22, 30-20, 27-30 and 30-22.

K-State improved its record to 9-4 overall and 3-1 in the Big 12, while Oklahoma remained winless in the conference, falling to 8-4 and 0-4.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team turned in another good performance against a Sooner team that's on the rise.

"I thought we played very well for stretches," Fritz said. "Oklahoma made us play a solid match, and we executed our gameplan well. Oklahoma is a much-improved volleyball team. I have no idea how they're 0-4 in the conference. They played us tough and had a very solid team. If they continue to play like that, they could cause some damage."

The Wildcats had five players with 10 or more kills on the night, led by senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas' 14 kills and career highs of 12 apiece by sophomore middle blocker Joy Hamlin and junior outside hitter Agata Rezende, who hit .500 for the night. Hamlin added 10 blocks for her second career

MLB | D.C. new home for Expos starting 2005

Baseball is returning to the nation's capital for the first time in 33 years, in the form of the Montreal Expos.

Major League Baseball announced Wednesday the team is moving to Washington to begin play at RFK Stadium in the 2005 season.

"It's a day when the sun is setting in Montreal, but it's rising in Washington," Expos president Tony Tavares told a news conference at Olympic Stadium in Montreal.

The announcement came one day before the 33rd anniversary of the Washington Senators' final game. The team moved to Texas after the 1971 season, which was also the last time a major league team moved.

Relocation of the Expos is subject to certain contingencies, including a vote by team owners in November and passage of legislation by the District of Columbia Council to build a ballpark on the Anacostia River waterfront in southeast Washington, baseball said.

NFL | Winslow needs second surgery; season done

Browns rookie tight end Kellen Winslow Jr. needs a second operation on his right leg and will miss the remainder of this season.

Winslow, who broke his fibula during a loss on Sept. 19 in Dallas and had it operated on last week, will have surgery Wednesday to stabilize ligaments.

Winslow, the No. 6 overall pick in this year's draft, was initially expected to be out for at least eight to 10 weeks but will now need longer to recover.

Winslow fractured his fibula—the outer bone in his lower leg—while scrambling to recover an onside kick in the final seconds of the Browns' 19-12 loss to the Cowboys.

MLB | Bradley's tantrum leads to suspension

Dodgers outfielder Milton Bradley was suspended for the rest of the regular season by Major League Baseball on Wednesday, a day after a bottle-throwing tantrum during a win over Colorado.

Los Angeles leads the NL West by three games over San Francisco with five games left. Unless appealed, the penalty was set to start for Wednesday night's game against the Rockies at Dodger Stadium.

Bradley also was fined an undisclosed amount by Bob Watson, baseball's vice president of on-field operations. Earlier this season, Bradley was suspended for four games after throwing a bag of balls onto the field following an ejection.

Bradley was hitting .267 with 19 home runs and 67 RBIs in his first season with Los Angeles. His temper was one of the reasons Cleveland traded him to the Dodgers right before opening day.

Lacrosse opener versus Kansas honors former coach

By Zachary Payne
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every year the K-State lacrosse club team begins the season with the Tillar Classic — a tournament named in honor of Donnie Tillar, the team's first coach.

The first game the Wildcats played with Tillar in command was against University of Kansas.

It is now tradition for the first game of the season to be played against Kansas in late September or early October as the opening game of the Tillar Classic, and this year is no different.

On Oct. 1, the two teams will face off against each other and vie to be crowned Tillar Classic champions.

Though many of the new team members never knew Donnie Tillar, junior treasurer Bill Casper said his presence is still evident.

"The alumni are still very involved with the team," Casper said. "They are always our coaches and provide a lot of funding. Most of those guys were coached by Donnie or by guys Donnie coached."

"His coaching styles, like hard work, perseverance and discipline, have been passed down through the years."

Former Wildcat's prowess in WNBA deserves attention

Michael Ashford

I must admit, before this season, I was never a fan of the WNBA. Professional basketball, men's or women's, never really caught my eye.

That all changed this last year when former K-State center Nicole Ohlde was selected sixth in the WNBA draft by the Minnesota Lynx.

I followed Ohlde throughout her four years as a Wildcat, and once she became a pro I was intrigued at how she would fare against the best athletes in her sport.

As good as Ohlde was here at K-State — she is K-State's all-time leading scorer, men's or women's — she has become even better as a professional.

The Lynx just wrapped up their season after their playoff loss to the Seattle Storm. Ohlde started all 34 games for the Lynx this season, averaged 11.7 points per game, led all rookies in rebounds and blocks, and in Minnesota's last 10 games, Ohlde was the leading scorer in six of those contests.

Even more impressive than her stats was the way Ohlde physically matured. As physically imposing as she was when she was in a Wildcat uniform, Ohlde became even more of a presence in her first pro year.

While I watched Minnesota battle Seattle on Monday night, I noticed a slight mean streak in her play. She has bulked up and is much more physical than she was here at K-State.

It is obvious Ohlde has molded her game to include more contact and a little less finesse. In college she was the epitome of a finesse center. She had more moves in the lane than Michael Jackson had in "Thriller."

It's a shame Ohlde's accomplishments have been overlooked because she is in the same rookie class as former Connecticut stand-out Diana Taurasi.

Taurasi, now with the Phoenix Mercury, was named WNBA rookie of the year by an overwhelming majority. She received 42 votes, while Ohlde finished third with two votes.

Taurasi is a great basketball player, no doubt. However, I'm not so sure Taurasi meant more to her team this season than Ohlde meant to the Lynx.

Sure, Taurasi went to the Olympics and finished fourth in scoring at 17 points per game. However, the Mercury didn't make the playoffs while the Lynx did. Ohlde's Lynx beat Taurasi's Mercury three out of four times.

When Minnesota's all-star point guard Katie Smith went down to injury late in the season, Ohlde responded by averaging 14.7 points and 5.2 rebounds during the final ten games.

With her rookie season now complete, Ohlde will return to Manhattan to complete her schoolwork.

She captured the hearts of fans as a Wildcat and turned many of them into WNBA fans.

But what else would you expect from her? After all, she's an Ohlde, but a goodie.

Money talks

Play tackles issues in hostile world of corporate takeovers

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Are loyalty, tradition and friendship more important than making money? Should a failing business be closed so it can create several other jobs?

These are questions addressed in "Other People's Money." The play originally opened off-Broadway in 1987, but director Patricia Weisenburger said the play's themes are as relevant as ever.

"I think we still have all these problems coming up on the evening news, with CEOs taking exorbitant amounts of money," Weisenburger said.

"Other People's Money" is the story of a New York corporate takeover artist who tries to take over the small New England Wire and Cable Company. The owner and his staff fight back to save the company and the 1,200 jobs that might be lost.

Bill Pugh plays Lawrence Garfinkle, who tries to take over the company.

"The thing that brought it back to me was it's Wall Street versus Main Street," Pugh said. "I remember a few years ago when Wal-Mart was trying to open back where Target is now. They didn't want corporate developers, they shied away from it, and now there is a Target out there."

The play's title comes from the acronym Garfinkle uses to enable himself to buy more company shares.

His attempt at a takeover is halted by Kate Sullivan, played by Suzy Dotson. The conflict leads to sexual tension.

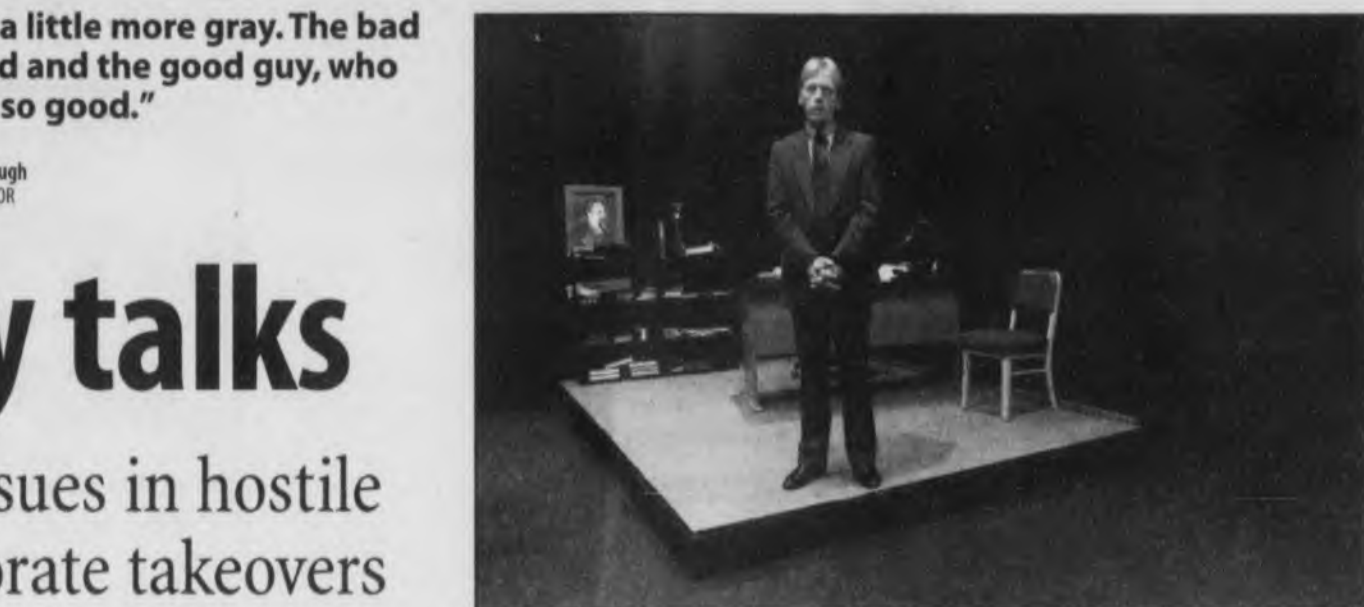

Pugh said the play's appeal stems from the conflict of good and evil.

"By the end of the play it's a little more gray," he said. "The bad guy, who isn't quite so bad and the good guy, isn't quite so good."

Kim Riley, who plays the company's president, Bill Coles, said his character approaches the situation like a game.

"Initially, he's on the defense and then switches to offense," he said. "The first response is to keep it from happening. His next response is, 'If you can beat 'em, join 'em.'"

Paul Berger plays the company's owner, Andrew Jorgenson, and Maggie Jackson plays Bea Sullivan, who is his assistant and Bill Coles, played by Kim Riley, rehearses a solo Tuesday night during rehearsal for the play "Other People's Money."

Nicole Coleman | COLLEGIAN

Kate Sullivan, played by Suzy Dotson, sings a solo as Lawrence Garfinkle, played by Bill Pugh, listens during a dress rehearsal scene for the play, "Other People's Money."

Kate's mother, Jorgi and Bea are the play's other love story, which is resented by Kate.

The play is a drama and deals with a serious subject of corporate merger, Weisenburger said, but also includes humor.

"When I sit and listen to it, every once in a while a line will make me laugh out loud, and I've heard it hundreds of times," she said.

Unknown to Weisenburger while casting the play, nearly all of the cast members have experience in the business world. Pugh works in an office; Berger is a former executive; and Dotson has worked with lawyers in the past and now is an adjunct professor at Cloud Community College.

"It's realistic, almost too realistic," Weisenburger said.

The miraculous world of condiments

Every Thursday I come before you with a snooty attitude. I try to tell you how to cook and, depending on your qualifications, whether you should.

You'll all be pleased to know today's topic isn't obscure foods or dishes you'll never eat.

The following is an introduction into the secret and mysterious double life of kitchen condiments.

First off — mayonnaise. Mayonnaise is all encompassing word for fun and excitement. It is a versatile condiment that can easily be prepared right in your own kitchen.

All you need are eggs, some extra yolks, oil (whichever type you prefer), mustard, salt, pepper and lemon juice. There are countless ways to mix it all together, and it really comes down to your own preference for spice, flavor and consistency. Go ahead and experiment; that's what college (and food) is all about.

Now you've got the ingredients, it's up to you to make your adventure-filled mayonnaise extravaganza live up to its potential.

Mayonnaise isn't just a foodstuff to be made into Ranch dressing or put on so many pieces of bread. You also can put it on your head.

Mel Brooks will shoot the film version of his hit Broadway musical, "The Producers," at a new movie studio in the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Brooks, a Brooklyn native, said new financial incentives and his love of New York helped persuade him to shoot at the recently opened Steiner Studios.

"The Producers: The Movie Musical" will star Nathan Lane, Matthew Broderick, Nicole Kidman and Will Ferrell. The $45 million production will begin shooting in late February, Brooks said Tuesday at a press conference at Steiner Studios.

Junior Justin Smith said the hard work is still evident now. "We practice four days a week, anywhere from an hour-and-a-half to three hours per practice session," Smith said. "We take it pretty seriously."

It was 1989 when the first

K-State lacrosse club team was formed, and later that year Tillar became the first coach.

Tillar was stationed at Fort Riley and had played four years of lacrosse at the United States Military Academy at West Point. He taught the inexperienced K-State club the game by stressing hard work and discipline.

When the 1991 Gulf War began and units were stationed overseas, Tillar was among those called to defend the United States.

He died Feb. 27, 1991, while serving in the Persian Gulf.

Because of the club's history, Casper said the team has a strong bond both on and off the field.

"Our team is a very close knit group of guys," Casper said. "We hang out a lot outside of practice and stuff. We don't have varsity status, but we definitely practice as much and have developed a strong chemistry."

COLUMN | Homemade mayo has a diversity of edible, non-edible uses

Internet one day, I happened upon a cheap and convenient recipe for killing head lice (no, for those of you in construction science, a blowtorch and skin grafts aren't involved). Jennifer (whose last name shall remain undisclosed, because I don't know it) posted her recipe for mass head lice genocide on tip-king.com.

The idea is to thoroughly saturate your head with full-fat mayo, cover it with cling wrap, and let it set for two to three hours or until it becomes clear, runny and oozes down the side of your face. Then giggle with glee, because not only can you hear the screams of all the momma lice and their babies causing their last itch, you also saved a few bucks.

Amazing, no?

You can also use it as a hair and scalp conditioner. Vi, from askjeeves.com, contends you only need to leave it in your hair for 30 minutes, and then easily remove it with a lemon and vinegar solution. Now you smell all pretty for the big date. Who could resist?

It also can be used as a ring loosener.

Next we have ketchup. Or is it catsup? Anyway, ketchup isn't as versatile as mayonnaise, but it's alternative use is quite interesting, as Tracey from unusualuses.com explains.

Say, for instance, your dog comes home from a nice romp in the woods, and you notice a fox has defecated on him/her (maybe he/she just rolled in it...who knows?). Apply a liberal, not republican (we all know what happens when they get involved with anything), amount on the tainted area, let it set for five minutes and wash away with shampoo.

Olola! Problem solved!

The same treatment works for skunk spray, so I've heard.

It also makes great faux puke if you apply some shredded vegetables and let it emaciate in the sun for a couple of hours.

Well, folks, I've enjoyed preaching to you about the merits of mayonnaise and ketchup.

If you've managed to read this far, I applaud you for your patience, focus and desire to learn.

See you next week. Same K-State time, same K-State paper.

double-double.

Fritz said Rezende's play of late has given the Wildcats an added spark.

"Offensively, she's a very terminal attacker," Fritz said. "She provides a strong presence on the right side. As she becomes more comfortable in our system, she has more confidence in her ability and has been having some success."

K-State had 17 blocks as a team, with senior middle blocker Lisa Martin contributing a season-high eight to go along with 13 kills on .632 hitting.

Freshman libero Angie Lastra continued her season-long streak of 10 or more digs each match, finishing with 17 on the night.

The Wildcats continued to serve the ball well, notching 10 or more service aces for the third consecutive match, as they finished with 10 against the Sooners.

Fritz said the aggressive serving is something this year's squad has emphasized.

"We set out early in the year with the goal of serving as an identity for the team," Fritz said.

Ella Fitzgerald, who hailed Maye as "the greatest white female singer in the world."

Maye, who now resides in Kansas City, tours year round and has appeared in theaters, concert and symphony halls around the world. Though the audience at the benefit is estimated to be around 200, Maye said she enjoys performing for smaller audiences.

"Two-hundred is great," Maye said. "It's intimate, and it's a wonderful size."

The proceeds from the benefit go toward improving the museum's art collection and preserving those works already in the museum.

"All of the money goes to acquire works of art for the museum and conservation of any works that are in need of repair," Piper said.

Piper said she is looking forward to having Maye perform at the fund-raiser.

"It's going to be a lot of fun," Piper said. "She's a good entertainer."

DEBATE | Nationwide watch party has local venue

communications class, is sponsoring a Debate Watch forum at the Beach Museum of Art. The watch party is a nationwide program sponsored by the Commission on Presidential Debates.

"The purpose is two-fold," he said. "One, it's to bring people together to talk about political issues, and the other one is hopefully to increase the level of civil discourse through politics as opposed to what we hear on Larry King or the O'Reilly Factor. It's time for people to come together and improve the level of political talk."

April Chancellor, Young Democrats vice president, said even if voters are watching at home, the debates are a chance for everyone to help make their decision.

"I think it gives a chance for people that maybe aren't politically active, who don't necessarily read the press about it, to get a visual image and listen to what the candidates are saying," she said. "It's a moderated way to get information."

There also will be watching parties for the remaining two presidential debates on Oct. 8 and Oct. 13 and the vice presidential debate on Oct. 5. The watch parties will be on Oct. 5 and Oct. 8 in the Union Flint Hills Room and back at the art museum Oct. 13.

With political analysts and comedians giving their on responses to the debate, voters' opinions of the candidates can be swayed easily, Procter said. For that reason, Debate Watch participants will turn off the television immediately after the candidates finish.

"People get to talk among themselves without the contamination of political pundits," he said. "This is really fundamentally based in a broader belief that bringing citizens together to talk in a reasonable way is positive for democracy."

A right to read

Michael Donnelly, professor in English, reads through "Women in Love" by D.H. Lawrence on Monday afternoon in the Bosco Student Plaza. In recognition of Banned Book Week, Donnelly, graduate students, librarians and other professors read through different books that have been banned for one reason or another.

members who ran the original story.

Fairman said there is a common misconception that Snyder gets paid for every K-State product sold. "Something you and I would buy doesn't go to one individual person," Fairman said.

K-State released the contracts of Snyder and other athletic department employees, including head men's basketball Coach Jim Woodriddle and Director of Athletics Tim Weiser to the AP at the organization's request.

The AP requested the contracts last week following the orders of a Douglas County judge for the University of Kansas to release the full contract of Kansas Athletic Director Lew Perkins.

According to the AP's corrected report, Snyder's contract with the university totals at least $1.58 million in compensation, including a $211,055 salary and the potential for numerous bonuses based on the team's performance.

Students, Manhattan residents participate in debate watch party

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sen. John Kerry wants to close the slight lead President Bush has in polls — and some K-State students said he took steps Thursday night to do just that.

"As Americans, we want to know why do this or why we do that," said Erica Hazen, senior in public relations and rhetorical communication. "As Americans, we want answers. Kerry did an excellent job of being more straightforward on his points and his policies."

Bush and Kerry faced off at the University of Miami in the first of three presidential debates. A Debate Watch party at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art attracted about 75 students and community members — less than 10 of which identified themselves after the debate as undecided voters.

The 90-minute debate, moderated by PBS's Jim Lehrer, focused on the war in Iraq and terror prevention.

Kerry called Bush's invasion of Iraq a "colossal mistake" and accused Bush of using Saddam Hussein as a diversion to his inability to find Osama bin Laden.

"The president just talked about Iraq as a center of the war on terror. Iraq was not even close to the center of the war on terror before the president invaded it," Kerry said. "The president made the judgment to divert forces from under General Tommy Franks from Afghanistan before the Congress even approved it to begin to prepare to go to war in Iraq. And he rushed the war in Iraq without a plan to win the peace."

Bush responded by referring to Kerry's flip-flop position on Iraq.

"He voted to authorize the use of force and now says it's the wrong war at the wrong time," Bush said. "I don't think you can lead if you say wrong war, wrong time, wrong place. What

Woman files rape report with RCPD

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 19-year-old woman was raped in City Park early Tuesday morning.

The Manhattan woman reportedly was walking through City Park between 12:15 a.m. and 12:30 a.m. when she was accosted.

"She was walking from a friend's home through the park to Aggieville," said Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department. "She was near the Pavilion when the suspect knocked her to the ground, raped her and then fled the area."

The rape wasn't reported until 1 p.m. Tuesday. The woman did not require medical treatment, Moldrup said.

The suspect is a 22-25-year-old man, 170 pounds with blond hair and a goatee. He was wearing a dark shirt and blue jeans.

The victim said he smelled of alcohol.

Moldrup said there is no connection to any other rapes.

Anyone with information should contact the RCPD at 587-2112 or Riley County Crimestoppers at 539-7777.

Israeli attack on refugee camp kills 22

By Ibrahim Barzak
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JEBALIYA REFUGEE CAMP, Gaza Strip — Israeli troops struck deep inside the largest Palestinian refugee camp Thursday, battling masked gunmen in an unprecedented campaign to stop deadly rocket fire on Israeli towns. Twenty-six Palestinians were killed and 131 wounded, the bloodiest single-day toll in fighting in 30 months.

Three Israelis — two soldiers and an Israeli woman jogger — were killed in two Palestinian shooting attacks in northern Gaza.

Prime Minister Ariel Sharon approved a large-scale military operation in the northern Gaza Strip after meeting with advisers late Thursday, an Israeli official said. The plan, a response to the killing of two Israeli children, ages 2 and 4, by a Hamas rocket attack on an Israeli border town Wednesday. However, he stopped short of ordering a call-up of reserves.

The plan, which has the backing of Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz, was expected to be given final approval by the security Cabinet later Thursday. Troops would focus on the Jebaliya refugee camp and the nearby town of Beit Hanoun.

The army's push Thursday into the center of Jebaliya — a first in four years of fighting — signaled a change in military tactics.

Since fighting erupted in 2000, the military has refrained from reoccupying large areas of crowded Gaza for long periods, for fear of getting bogged down in urban combat. The army has felt less constrained in the less densely populated West Bank.

Armored vehicles rolled into squalid Jebaliya, a militant stronghold with 106,000 residents, on Thursday morning. Throughout the day, masked Palestinians taking cover in camp alleys fired assault rifles — and occasionally anti-tank missiles and grenades — at tanks, which responded with machine-guns. Militants were seen laying explosive charges and unraveling detonation wire.

In the bloodiest incident, a tank fired a shell toward a group of gunmen, killing seven Palestinians and seriously wounding 23, including

Explosions kill 35 children, 7 adults in Iraqi neighborhood

By Alexandra Zavis
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A series of bombs killed 35 children and seven adults Thursday as U.S. troops handed out candy at a government ceremony to inaugurate a new sewage treatment plant. Hours earlier, a suicide blast killed a U.S. soldier and two Iraqis on the capital's outskirts. The bombs in Baghdad's al-Amel neighborhood caused the largest death toll of children in any insurgent attack since the conflict in Iraq began 17 months ago.

"The Americans called us, they told us, 'Come here, come here,' asking us if we wanted sweets. We went beside them, then a car exploded," said 12-year-old Abdel Rahman Dawoud, lying naked in a hospital bed with shrapnel embedded all over his body.

Two bombs went off in quick succession at the ceremony about 1 p.m., then were followed by a third explosion a short distance away, said Interior Ministry spokesman Col. Adnan Abdul-Rahman. He said there were two suicide car bombs and one roadside bomb; the Americans said all three were car bombs.

The explosions killed 42 people and wounded 141, including 10 U.S. soldiers. The wounded included 72 children under the age of 14, said Dr. Mohammed Salaheddin.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zebari said he was disturbed by the televised images of the attacks, and he denounced the "criminal gangs, terrorists or Saddamists who are trying to undermine Iraq, to undermine the political process."

He also said the ongoing violence

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

Chris Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

Dean Honas, 4, from Council Grove, Kan., draws on the sidewalk in front of the K-State Student Union during the 2003 Family Day. This year's Family Day takes place Saturday.

1 | A WILDCAT FAMILY AFFAIR

You haven't been home in weeks to see your family, so this weekend, they're coming to you instead. K-State's annual Family Weekend begins today, with events sponsored by the Union Program Council, the K-State Alumni Center, and various academic departments and student organizations within campus. Bring your family to K-State to tee off at Colbert Hills, get hands-on education with a chemistry magic show in Willard Hall, or find out whodunit at a murder mystery dinner theater in the Union — there are events for young and old alike. Show your parents family exactly what they're missing. Check-in and registration will take place from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union.

2 | BLESSED BE

Manhattan residents, K-State students, and Wiccans and non-Wiccans alike are welcome to celebrate the Pagan faith this weekend with the first Pagan Pride Day festival, which kicks off at noon Saturday in Manhattan City Park.

The celebration also centers on the Autumn Equinox, and will include free Tarot card readings, a Pagan religious ceremony, face painting and Pagan singer Joe, formerly of the group Sona. All events are free, and attendees are asked to bring a non-perishable food item to benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The festival is sponsored by the global organization the Pagan Pride Project, which can be found on the Web at paganpride.org.

4 | A FISHY FILM

If identity theft is a little too heavy for you, take a plunge under the sea with a small fish trying to make a big difference and a shark with heart.

DreamWorks' latest venture, "Shark Tale," pairs the most unlikely of friends in Oscar (voiced by Will Smith), a fish who wants to be a hero, and Lenny (voiced by Jack Black), a shark who is pressured to fit into a macho image and who just wants to be himself. Robert DeNiro, Angelina Jolie, Martin Scorsese and Renee Zellweger also add their voice talents to the family movie.

"Shark Tale," rated PG, opens today in theaters nationwide.

3 | LOSS OF IDENTITY

Losing yourself was never more dangerous than in playwright Arthur Kopit's "BecauseHeCan."

The play, presented this weekend by KSU Theatre, chronicles the life-altering events a couple go through when someone steals their identities through the Internet. Tickets are still available for the play at the McCain Auditorium box office, which is open from noon to 5 p.m. today. Call 532-6428 to reserve seats.

"BecauseHeCan" will be presented at 8 tonight and Saturday in Nichols Theatre.

Up Til Dawn benefits hospital

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This week the Bosco Student Plaza has been filled with activities trying to promote student participation in Up Til Dawn, an annual philanthropy raising money for children with diseases. "Awareness Week" runs through Oct. 3 and includes drawings for free Chipotle burritos and cookies and entertainment for students, said Lindsay MacAdam, public relations director for Up Til Dawn.

If you go
K-State Kares, Up Til Dawn

What: music and food promotion
When: noon to 1 p.m. today
Where: Bosco Student Plaza
For more information or to make donations contact the Greek Affairs Office 532-5546 or go to www.ksu.edu/uptildawn.

The events included a promotion by KSDB FM-91.9, a visit from the women's basketball team, cookie decorating and a luau, MacAdam said.

Today's theme is "K-State Kares" and will include a band in the afternoon from noon to 1 p.m. and a food promotion.

"The main goal of this week is to get the word out about Up Til Dawn and to promote the event," MacAdam said. "Last year K-State had 150 teams so this year we are looking to get at least that."

There will be a booth available from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in the Union where students can get more information about making donations and a letter writing party and all-night celebration later this year, MacAdam said.

MacAdam said St. Jude Children's Research Hospital treats and tries to help cure children free of charge.

"It is a hospital run purely on donations," she said. "They need at least $800,000 to run the hospital and are a non-profit organization — they are always in need."

There will be more activities taking place throughout the year to get the entire community involved, MacAdam said.

Senators discuss compensation options

SGA has one month to pass resolution disapproving of increases

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senators on Thursday heard the Joint Committee on Officers' Compensation's report and recommendation on the salaries, compensation and scholarships.

The report laid out increases in the compensation packages for the student body president, vice president, attorney general, student senate chair and vice chair.

The senators also added compensation for Student Governing Association treasurer/allocation chair and privilege fee chair, as well as for college council allocations chair.

By the numbers
2005-06 school year

Officer	Scholarship	Compensation	Total
Student Body President	$4,665	$960	$5,625
Student Body Vice President	$2,812	$960	$3,772
Student Senate Chair	$3,499	$960	$4,459
Student Senate Vice Chair	$2,332	$0	$2,332
Attorney General	$3,499	$960	$4,459
Allocations Chair	$2,332	$0	$2,332
Privilege Fee Chair	$2,332	$0	$2,332
College Council Allocations Chair	$1,166	$0	$1,166

The committee also recommended the administration consider "parking accommodations" for the student body president, vice president and student senate chair.

Committee Chair Bill Muir said the reason for such a request is these three positions require the students who hold them to be more mobile.

If the Senate does not pass a resolution disapproving of the committee's proposal by Nov. 15, the numbers will be included in the Office of Student Activities and Services privilege fee budget.

In other business, a resolution supporting "Pack the Library, Pack the Polls," was referred to the Government Relations Committee for further consideration.

Senator Laura Wood said she was concerned some of the language of the resolution might be too harsh because it was being sent to legislators.

The resolution outlined SGA's support for the voter registration and absentee ballot drives for the upcoming couple of weeks.

Architecture students, faculty celebrate program's centennial

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State architecture program celebrates its 100 year, with all students in the program traveling to Kansas City today.

There are about 310 undergraduate and 20 graduate students participating in the program, said Madlen Simon, architecture associate professor.

"Last month, we began celebrating our 100 anniversary here in Manhattan," she said. "Next we are in Kansas City, and later, we will go to Wichita."

All the events gather scholars, former K-State architecture students, and professors, Simon said.

"But the trip to Kansas City is a special event," Simon said. The program is trying to diversify all aspects of architecture, introducing students to different culture and style influences over design, she said.

"That is what our trip to Kansas City is about, giving our students a different experience," Simon said.

Corey Schneider, junior in architecture, looks forward to the trip.

"We usually go on trips twice a year, but I know this trip to Kansas City will be pretty exciting."

We will introduce students to different aspects of architecture by visiting architecture firms and looking at important sites, Simon said.

Other highlights are attending part of an American Institute of Architects convention, a dance party and a film.

"By traveling there, students should get a good taste of urban architecture," she said. "Fun, education trips like these really make our program stand out."

Will Yankey, junior in interior design, said the K-State program is ranked in the top ten in the nation.

"We are one of the few public schools ranked that high," he said.

Andrea Coulter, junior in interior design, said, went to Drury University, a private school, but said it was too expensive.

"I like K-State's classes and people much better," Coulter said.

Yankey said he agreed. "Here you get the better bang for your buck," Yankey said.

Schneider said K-State's location stifles the reputation it could have.

"They know we are good, but nobody knows how really good we are because we are in the middle of Kansas," said Schneider. "There are not high expectations for us being really diverse."

Going on trips helps develop the program, Simon said.

"But we don't just travel," said Schneider. "We also bring a lot of world class architects into the school. We have some guest professors who come in for a couple weeks, lecturing and teaching class," he said.

He said some stay and join as faculty.

"It's really cool how the college is constantly pulling in people who are involved and influential in the world of architecture," Schneider said. "This is why our program is great."

TO THE POINT Book banning harms processes of democracy

There are negative implications for banning books in schools.

When we teach our children "Harry Potter" and "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings" are not acceptable in their library, we teach them that some ideas are so abhorrent or dangerous that they cannot even be submitted to the free market of ideas.

We instill in them the idea that some values, goals and beliefs can be dismissed outright by guardians who know better than they do.

Obviously, some ideas are more feasible than others, but teaching our children that censorship is acceptable is contrary to democracy.

Whether or not communism, Satanism or magic would destroy our society is irrelevant.

In a country where the people rule, we must trust the people to discern what ideas are best.

If we don't believe that the people can be trusted to discard fanaticism, lunacy or evil when they see it, what we are implying is we don't trust them to govern themselves.

We are in effect, establishing a tyranny of the mind.

In reality, as beings capable of reason, the only idea we should censor is censorship itself.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Party politics Partisanship hurts campus

Walking to the library last week, I noticed several chalkings done by the College Republicans.

Beside them, in different handwriting, were additional comments someone apparently thought clarified Republican views: "Forcing people to believe in God since 1981," "We hate fags," and "Kill the poor."

Hmm. I don't think those are things you will find on the official Republican platform.

As a registered Republican, I can assure you I stand for none of those views.

Unfortunately, many people perceive these comments as close to the truth about the Republican Party.

If you walked by the K-State Student Union last week, you might have noticed a voter registration table set up on the Bosco Student Plaza.

You might also have noticed a big sign that said, "Register to Vote Republican Here."

Another, smaller sign repeated the message, but down at the bottom in small print it noted that anyone could register there.

While it is admirable to try to get out the vote, it would reflect better on the Republicans on this campus and on the Republican Party as a whole if we did so in a less partisan manner.

As a Republican, I, of course, would prefer that more Republicans than Democrats voted Nov. 2.

But everyone's vote is important in this country, and if more people want Kerry than Bush, so be it.

Our party already is plagued with a reputation for being elitist; it doesn't help when we act like we think only those who agree with us should vote.

Unfortunately, our campus isn't alone in these partisan registration drives.

The Boston Globe reports that "College Republicans on several liberal campuses in Massachusetts and other states say they will not work with Democrats on voter registration drives this fall because the efforts lock in more youth votes for President Bush's opponent."

Partisan registration drives are particularly ill-timed now, since the Associated Press reports that "Turnout among 18- to 24-year-olds in the 2000 election was about 42 percent, an all-time low since 1972, when the voting age was dropped to 18."

This reflects poorly on us as a generation, and trying to only register those who agree with us won't do much to fix the problem.

Instead of trying to register only Republicans, we would do better to try to inform people as they register why we prefer our candidate and party.

Focusing on the issues will not only advance our political views but also encourage those to vote who might not otherwise, since helping people register to vote does not guarantee that they will actually make it to the polls.

The "Slacktivist" Web site (slacktivist.typepad.com) gives hints on what it calls "Guerilla Voter Registration." It advocates printing voter registration forms and setting up your own voter registration place.

It also shows the kind of bad reputation we Republicans have.

It says, "Admittedly, this process favors Democrats. The kinds of places where predominantly Republican crowds gather also tend to be the kind of places where they frown on people with clipboards talking about democracy and empowering the electorate..."

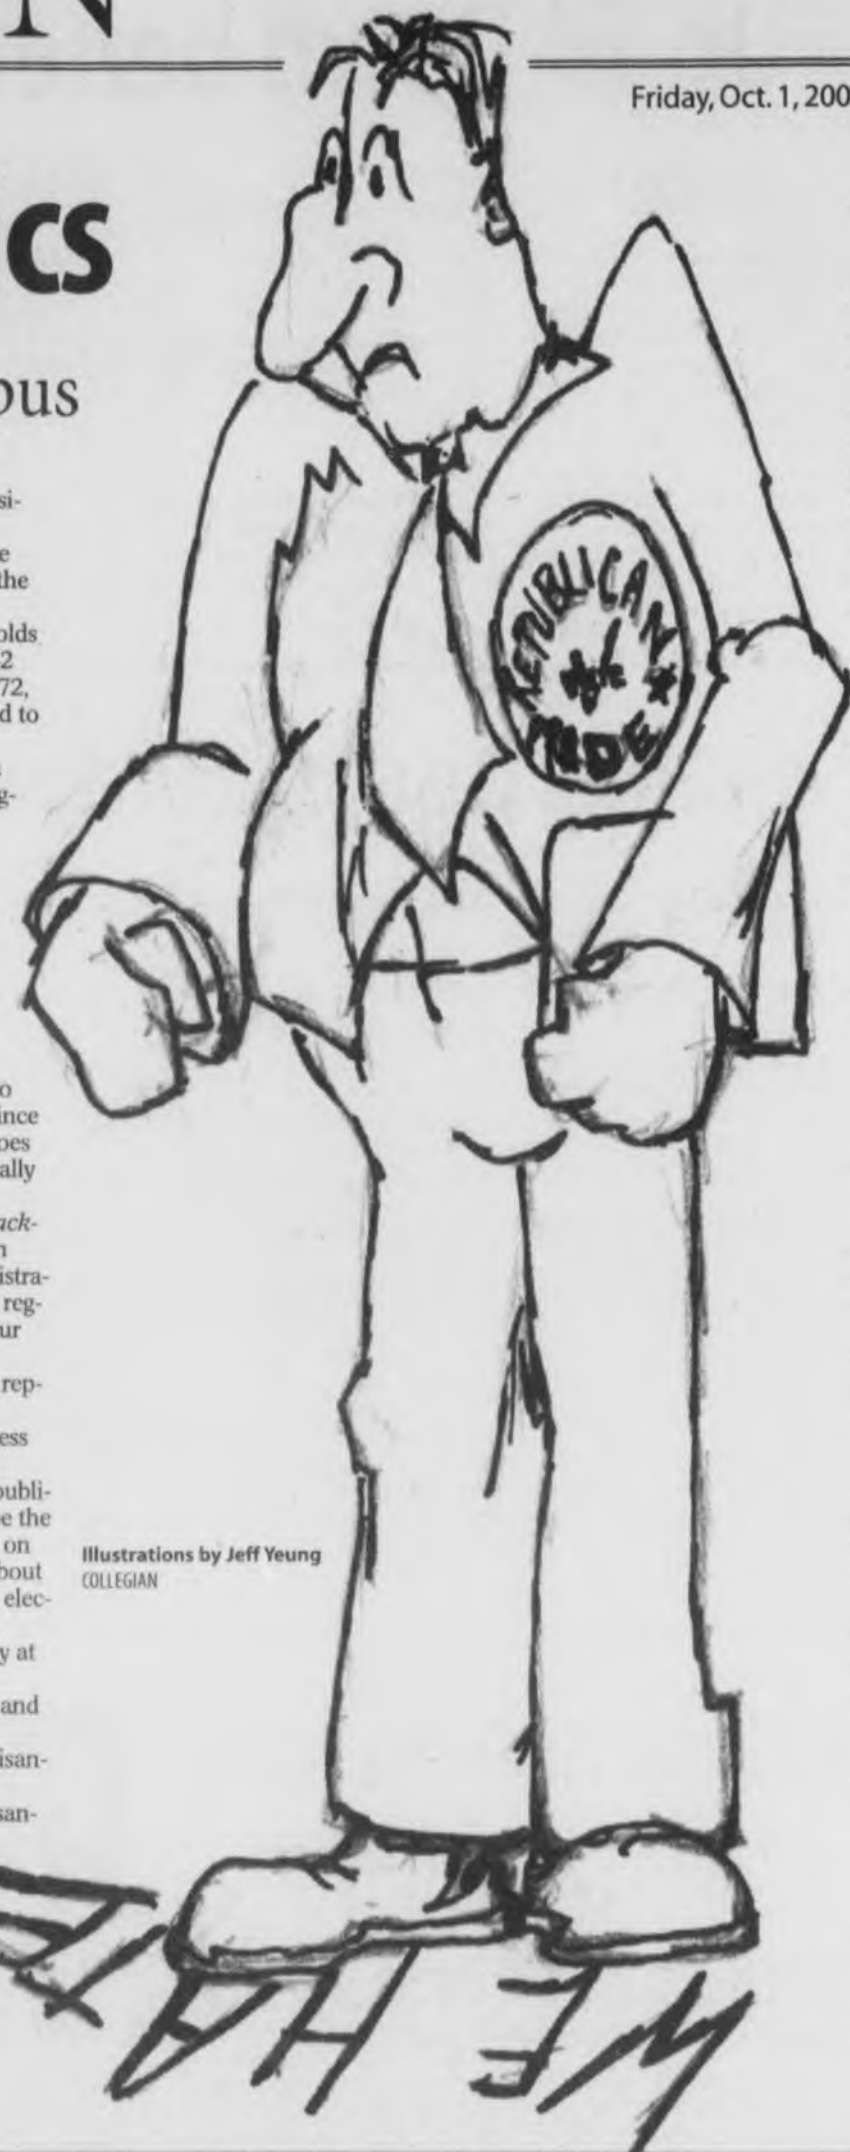

Voter registration aimed solely at Republicans only increases the stereotype of Republican elitism and hatred.

Politics can get ugly, and partisanship is one of the ugliest parts.

Neither party is perfect. Partisanship is one area where both sides, left and right, have it all wrong.

'Daily Show' viewership reflects educated, informed public

Let me just say I have been a fan of "The Daily Show" for a long time.

I even watched it when Craig Kilborn was the host and the only good segment was Five Questions. Yup, that's right; I have been a follower for that long.

You see, Jon Stewart is a comedic icon in my family.

In fact, this summer "The Daily Show" was the only time that my cousins spent quality time with their parents. Every night at 11 p.m. (10 p.m. central), the whole family would hurry down the stairs, find their designated spot in the basement TV room, and enjoy the humor, timing, and intelligence that is "The Daily Show."

My aunt and uncle even got my cousins fake IDs in order to take them to a taping over their summer vacation - you have to be 18 to attend.

So on Sept. 17, when Bill O'Reilly told Jon Stewart that his viewers only consisted of "stoned slackers," I almost lost it.

Not that anything O'Reilly says, nor anything on Fox News, should ever be taken seriously, but just the same, I got a little angry.

Just because shows like "South Park," "Reno 911," and "Crank Yankers" are on the same network, doesn't mean that "The Daily Show" is completely devoid of any real intellectual content.

And for the record, I doubt just any "stoned slacker" would really appreciate the shows' brands of humor. It even takes some brains to catch all the allusions to pop culture and current media topics thrown around in an episode of "South Park."

Which probably explains why O'Reilly made the comment in the first place, since he (1) has little to no IQ, and (2) has no sense of humor.

Stewart, however, is having the last laugh. According to Nielsen Media Research, viewers of "The Daily Show" are 78 percent more likely than the average adult to have four or more years of college. Stoned slackers, huh?

That's sort of ironic since O'Reilly's audience for his show, "The O'Reilly Factor," is only 24 percent more likely to have as much schooling.

So whose audience really is more educated? Whose audience hosts the greatest of the slacker population?

And one more thing, just to put the proverbial nail in O'Reilly's coffin, according to the National Annenberg Election Survey, those who watch "The Daily Show" know more about election issues than people who watch TV news or read newspapers.

So although the farce created by the wondrously funny cast of "The Daily Show" tweaks the real news, they still seem to get the real issues out to the public, and at least make the election more interesting. Unlike that of "The O'Reilly Factor" and its parent company Fox News' conservative skew on the political arena.

After all the hoopla surrounding O'Reilly and Stewart's meeting on "The O'Reilly Factor" two weeks ago, Stewart has decided to take the high ground. On Oct. 7, O'Reilly is scheduled to appear as a guest on "The Daily Show."

I don't know about everyone else, but I'm pretty sure that I'll be tuning in that night. If only to see O'Reilly squirming at the mere thought of verbal sparring with Stewart, or a possible special report by the hilarious Rob Corddry.

And if O'Reilly thinks Stewart and his clan are ready for retribution, just think of all the families, college graduates, and stoned slackers everywhere who readily await his downfall.

TO THE EDITOR

Columnist neglects wage realities

Editor,

Normally I don't respond to student opinions, but with Logan Adams' recent submission I have to make an exception.

I agree that someone sweeping the floor, cooking hamburgers and stocking shelves might not deserve a $7-per-hour wage. The reality is that problems with wages are not in the low-end jobs. It is the jobs that take more than a few weeks to train.

Far too many skilled jobs, especially locally, don't pay anything. Yet prices here in Manhattan are as high, sometimes even higher, than most locales in of Kansas.

Some local companies don't even try to keep up with inflation even if their skilled jobs take several years to learn and get good at.

To solve the problem, every worker in the United States would have to at least get a cost of living increase every year. After all, do not most companies raise their prices based on inflation every year? You know the answer is yes as well as I do.

I've been on both sides of the fence, as a worker and as management. After 25 years in management in two different industries, when I tell you companies are out for only one thing, to make as much profit as possible, it is the truth. I have spent far too many hours in meetings finding ways to make more profit, no matter who suffers.

After a few years out on your own, maybe it will open your eyes a little bit more than your idealistic youth will allow you right now.

Drunk-driving not tolerable

Editor,

Oct. 3 is my 21st birthday. It's not just my birthday, it's 334 days after I was almost killed in a car accident on the interstate by a drunk driver.

According to statistics from 2000 collected by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, 40 percent of car accidents are caused by drunk drivers. And every year, countless innocent people are killed while the drunks usually walk away with minor injuries.

My car accident involved four people. My boyfriend and I had to be cut out of our Blazer, while the other two (had they been sober enough to walk) could have walked away with cuts and scratches.

My boyfriend, however, underwent a total of nine surgeries in two weeks to repair a shattered femur, a severe break in both of his lower leg bones, and a dislocated shoulder with rotator cuff injuries. He will not ever run; he also was medically disqualified from military service — the only reason he'd come to college was to join ROTC.

Someone else almost killed us. Someone else took Justin's career. All because no one told them not to get into their truck.

I learned more in that one night than I have in my three years at college. It taught me a lesson that, unfortunately, I can't say that drunk driver learned. The price for such an irresponsible behavior is way too high, especially since we're given so many alternatives.

So on my birthday, I might go to a bar, but most likely, I'll go home and celebrate my 21 years of being alive — something that could very easily have been taken away from me.

PATRIOT Act threatens media

DAILY NEBRASKAN
LINCOLN, NEB.

LINCOLN, Neb. — Balancing the "right to print" with the "public's right to know," particularly while covering the U.S. government often requires reporters, editors and publishers to provide and protect information within the same keystroke.

Since the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, 2001, Attorney General John Ashcroft, the Justice Department and those in the Department of Homeland Security have launched not just a war on terror, they've declared war on government sources and the journalists who use them.

New York Times reporters Philip Shenon and Judith Miller, both respected journalists, could have had the identities of their confidential sources disclosed not by their newspaper or a judge's mandate, but by a third party: the telephone company.

The U.S. Justice Department, while investigating government "leaks," subpoenaed the phone records of both Shenon and Miller in an attempt to identify the government employees suspected of providing the journalists information in the days and months after the terrorist attacks on 9-11.

Though U.S. District Judge Victor Marrero struck down the USA PATRIOT Act provision granting the FBI's right to phone and Internet providers' records, the attempt to shake down these companies providing services to Shenon and Miller sent a sweeping, ominous chill across journalism's landscape.

Attempts to interfere with the free press violate every American's right to be informed citizens during turbulent times.

Column lacks facts necessary to form opinion

Editor,

I would like to respond to Logan Adams' column, "Minimum Wage in the Way," published on Wednesday.

Although I can understand where Adams is coming from, I believe there are critical facts that were left out of his argument.

I will first point out for those unaware that the federal minimum wage is currently $5.15 per hour. States have the ability to set their own minimum wage laws, and whichever amount is higher between the federal and state regulations is the amount that will determine minimum wage pay.

For example, the U.S. Department of Labor notes that Kansas' minimum wage, by law, is $2.65 per hour. However, because the federal amount of $5.15 is higher, this is the standard we abide by.

Adams pointed out that if a business feels compelled to employ a few workers in a low-intensity job that requires no real experience, it should be allowed to pay them as little as they like. Adams states that business owners are simply "people trying to earn a living and give others the chance to earn a living."

Is anything less than $5.15/hr. really allowing someone to earn a living? Is $5.15 itself really enough to allow this?

Taking into account Adams' belief that "most full-time workers make more than minimum wage," it is also critical to note that 44 percent of workers who would benefit from this wage increase do work full-time, and another third work between 20-34 hours/week.

Until minimum wage is given an increase, we can all sit back and continue to watch the rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

April Lindquist

AND CONSULTATION

Minimum wage laws make survival possible

Editor,

Logan Adams' column in Wednesday's Collegian was horrifying.

As a single parent, I can honestly say that it is hard to make ends meet. Even arguing that it will drive up consumer costs, the truth is that unless employees make a living wage, our economy will continue to drag. Consumer costs will go up regardless of what the minimum wage is.

Adams doesn't cite his sources, and this is troublesome, especially when he asserts that "a large number make more than the $7 per hour." It is obvious Adams does not have children, does not support himself, and does not really grasp his subject.

His opinion seems to be based on the opinions of others, not on facts and research. Even without a raise in the minimum wage, jobs are still being outsourced to other countries. He suggests that business owners are "cheated" by minimum wage. These laws protect workers.

Yet, businesses are "big, evil monsters that continually try to make more money." The bottom line in any business is profit. If they could get away with paying workers 50 cents an hour, they would.

Minimum wage was implemented to prevent a recurrence of what happened in the early part of the 1900s, when businesses often banned unions and fired workers who tried to start them.

I shudder to think of what our economy would be like if minimum wage was repealed. Can you imagine being offered a job that paid $2 an hour?

Think before lambasting latest pick

In today's special Road Trip edition of the Collegian's Gameday, there's a little section where yours truly breaks down Saturday's matchup between K-State and Texas A&M.

Kent Hildebrand

I do it for every Wildcat football game, attempting to point out the strengths and weaknesses of both teams and make a prediction of how the game will unfold. Maybe you've read it.

If you did, you might have noticed I not only picked the Aggies to win, I gave them the advantage in every category of the game except special teams, which was a draw.

Before you make that call into the Forum saying what a huge tool I am for going against the Wildcats, there's a few things you should know.

First, when I put the breakdown together, it's based as much on statistics and past performance as possible, and — as a diehard Wildcat — I try to avoid bias as much as possible.

Secondly, I'm hardly Lee Corso or Kirk Herbstreit, and I only know slightly more about college football than Terry Bowden. Last time we did staff picks for Gameday, I went with Florida, Louisiana State and Clemson.

They all lost. So, maybe picking the Aggies is more of a blessing than a curse for K-State. But I had to go with my head over my heart on this one.

My friends would ask me, when are you ever going to give the other team the advantage on defense or offense? Until the Fresno State game, my answer was, "When we play Oklahoma."

Unfortunately, the time to pick against the Cats has come a couple of weeks early.

Sometimes the truth hurts. The truth is, right now, Texas A&M has a better football team. We can only hope that may change by around 9 p.m. Saturday, but for now, the people who actually put money on this game have the Aggies as four-point favorites.

Going with Texas A&M is still a gutsy call for me. Now an entire student body, not to mention the football players I have to interview, will see me as some kind of K-State-dissing Benedict Arnold. My response: I'm a journalist. It's my job to tick people off.

Seriously, though, I struggled with who to pick all week. The Aggies are hardly an outright favorite, and I have a feeling K-State just might turn things around and do something special in College Station, Texas.

But I doubt it. You look at these two teams, and they're heading in opposite directions.

Texas A&M, with second-year coach Dennis Franchione and athletic quarterback Reggie McNeal, is on the rise.

They'll have 80,000 screaming fans on their side Saturday.

K-State is struggling to find an identity, to put it gently. Unless several Wildcats step up, the likelihood of the season's second loss is high.

If I'm wrong — and hopefully I am — at the end of the season, everyone can point to the idiot columnist who picked Texas A&M and say he was who caused the 2004 Wildcat football team to rally before having another great year.

If that's how I find my place in K-State football lore, so be it.

Now you know the difficulty and huge responsibility I have each week. An entire football season hangs in the balance.

Just keep that in mind when you call me dirty names in the Forum.

Tennis players head west for Riviera

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior Jessica Simosa and senior Maria Rosenberg will represent the Wildcats at the Riviera/All-American Championship Tournament this weekend in Los Angeles.

The athletes will be competing in both singles and doubles play throughout the weekend. The competition begins with 128 players in the pre-qualifying round, with the top four players advancing to the qualifying round. The 64 players in that round then compete for one of the four spots available in the 32-player main draw.

Coach Steve Bietau said the field of play — even in the pre-qualifying round — is very strong because many of the best teams in the country are represented at the tournament.

One of the main obstacles is making it through the early rounds to qualify for the main draw. Once the athletes reach the main draw they compete against returning All-Americans and the top players from six regions of the country.

"There is a little bit of everything, and the field of play is stronger than the NCAA. There are new players who are good, but they don't have a record so they are in the pre-qualifying round. By the end they could be nationally ranked players, but right now they don't have a record," Bietau said.

Simosa and Rosenberg said they know the tournament will be tough but hope to qualify.

"It will be challenging. It is going to be a test as to where I stand right now and show what I need to work on," Rosenberg said.

Simosa said she agreed that the tournament will be a measuring stick.

"We've been practicing a lot and doing extra work. It is going to be a tough tournament, but we can measure ourselves to the competition, and it will give us a chance to see how good we are," Simosa said.

Both athletes said the Ole Miss Classic last weekend helped them prepare for this week's competition.

Simosa and Rosenberg said they hope to see many good players and learn from them.

"This is really a comparison tournament. It's a chance to find new things to work on and see where we're lacking. We'll get to see what they do that makes them better," Simosa said.

Getting serious

Cowboy Jamboree gives runners a chance to adjust, improve

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If nothing else, cross country coach Michael Smith said he knows he will be fed well when he takes his team to Stillwater, Okla., for the Cowboy Jamboree this weekend.

"I hope we eat a lot of good barbecue when we get down there," Smith said.

All joking aside, the K-State cross country team has a specific task at hand this Saturday. With the Big 12 Championships less than a month away, the time has come for the runners to begin fine-tuning their training in preparation for the league meet.

Junior Micha Gamper said he has seen the changes being made in practice.

"We have just picked up the pace and have kept the repetitions shorter to try to get ready for the Big 12 Championships," Gamper said. "We have a really good base, and now we try to pick up the pace."

K-State has not raced since hosting the Wildcat Invitational in Topeka three weeks ago. Since then, the Wildcats have changed their training methods to better prepare them for Saturday's meet.

Smith said he adjusted his athletes' training routines to be more intense and faster-paced. He said he hopes the results show on the course.

"It's faster work and less volume," Smith said. "The kids are running faster in practice and that should translate into faster racing."

The K-State men will face off against a 23-team field. With senior Mathew Chesang likely to lead the Wildcat charge, Gamper said he expects a strong showing from the team.

"There is going to be tons of good schools there, but I'm sure we are going to do better than last year," Gamper said. "I think we have a pretty good team this year so we can expect to do more than we did last year."

On the women's side, senior Trisha Culbertson will race as the Wildcats' number-one runner. So far this year, the Wildcats as a team have finished first and third in their two meets.

Culbertson said for the team to reach its goals, steady improvement from her and the rest of the team is a must this weekend.

"We want to run really well as a team," she said. "If we could beat a bunch of teams that aren't in our region that would help our chances of getting an at-large bid to nationals."

The competition heats up for the Wildcats at the Jamboree, as they will be joined by fellow Big 12 members Oklahoma State, Oklahoma, Texas Tech and Texas A&M.

Culbertson said the meet on Saturday will be the toughest competition to date for the Wildcats.

"It will be a big measuring stick for us," Culbertson said. "It might not be as competitive as the Big 12 meet will be, but it will definitely be a step up from what we've been doing."

MLB | Denney back with team after being shot

Cleveland Indians pitcher Kyle Denney on Thursday shrugged off being hit in the right calf by a stray bullet, and said he was grateful he may have been protected by a cheerleader's boot he was wearing as part of a hazing ritual.

Denney

An X-ray showed no internal damage, and team trainer Lonnie Soloff said he thinks Denney only suffered a flesh wound.

The shooting occurred Wednesday night as the team rode to Kansas City International Airport after a game with the Kansas City Royals.

Team trainers removed the bullet from Denney's right calf. He stayed overnight at a Kansas City hotel after being treated at a hospital and arrived in Minneapolis a few hours after his teammates.

Team spokesman Bart Swain said the shot was fired into the side of one of the Indians' two buses while it was on a ramp between interstates 435 and 70. Outfielder Ryan Ludwick was hit by debris when the bullet entered the bus.

Police said Thursday they have no solid suspects in the case.

General | Local firm picked for new KC arena

City officials went for the home team Thursday, passing on an offer from internationally renowned architect Frank Gehry to pick a consortium of Kansas City-based architects to design the city's new downtown arena.

But the hometown team — comprised of rivals HOK Sports+Venue+Event, Ellerbe Becket and 360 Architecture — are just as well known in architectural circles for their work in designing sports venues around the world.

Mayor Kay Barnes and City Manager Wayne Cauthen announced the choice after a selection committee interviewed the consortium, who call themselves the Downtown Arena Design Team.

The committee also interviewed a second group that consisted of Los Angeles-based Gehry and members of Crawford Architects, which has offices in Kansas City and Australia.

Those interviews were held behind closed doors after a judge rejected an effort by The Kansas City Star to force the city-appointed committee to open the meetings to the public.

NBA | Bryant records to be released today

Some previously sealed documents and evidence from the sexual assault case against Kobe Bryant will be released Friday, the Eagle County sheriff's office said.

Bryant

The records could include a transcript of the NBA star's interview with investigators, statements from some witnesses, an arrest affidavit and investigators' reports. They also could include phone records and other documents.

Attorneys were reviewing the evidence to remove the name of the alleged victim and other information protected by privacy law, sheriff's spokeswoman Kim Andree said Thursday.

A judge had temporarily sealed the documents at the request of Bryant's attorneys shortly after prosecutors dropped the felony sexual assault charge against him on Sept. 1.

NFL | Panthers fine Smart for missed practice

The Carolina Panthers refused to show "He Hate Me" any love, fining running back Rod Smart for missing practice when he was stuck in Florida during Hurricane Jeanne.

Smart returned to his home in Lakeland, Fla., during Carolina's bye weekend, intending to return Sunday night. When the forecast for Jeanne worsened, he tried to leave Florida a day early.

But the Tampa airport was closed, and Smart found himself stranded in Florida and unable to return in time for Monday's practice.

From his conversations with coach John Fox, Smart said he assumed he was not in trouble for missing practice.

Smart didn't know how much the Panthers were fining him, estimating it would be between "$5,000 and $10,000."

Netters return home to face Iowa State

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State returns home after a two-match road stint to play Iowa State at 1 p.m. Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The No. 15 Wildcats (9-4, 3-1 Big 12) are riding a three-match Big 12 Conference win streak into Saturday's matchup. The Cyclones (7-5, 1-4) have dropped three straight conference matches.

Iowa State is led by outside hitter Katie Kruenegel (2.8 kills per game), setter Amanda Craig (11.74 assists per game) and Brittany Dalager (4.05 digs per game).

Because of Saturday night's football game and convenience for Iowa State's travel, the match was moved to 1 p.m.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the time change shouldn't be a factor for the Wildcats.

"We prepare the same for everybody. We'll prepare exactly the same, only we'll be doing it a few hours earlier," Fritz said.

K-State will begin preparing for the Cyclones today after Fritz gave the team the day off yesterday.

"They've been working extremely hard, and it's very difficult to find days off in a Wednesday-Saturday game schedule," Fritz said. "We played really well Wednesday night, and we gave them a day off to rest and recover. We're four matches in, and we've got to find opportunities (for rest) when we can."

The Wildcats are in the heart of their Big 12 schedule, and Fritz said the team has gauged its standing and is focusing on making improvements through this first half of the conference slate.

"We've always looked at the season in three distinct segments — the preseason, the first half (of the conference season) and the second half," Fritz said. "I think as you enter each phase, you have to go back and evaluate where your team is at."

So how does Fritz evaluate her team's play thus far in 2004? "I feel very good about the way that we're playing right now," Fritz said.

Holmes wrecker

Latest feature about presidential offspring disappoints

"First Daughter"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Movie review by Christopher Harrop

Rarely does a film about a president or a member of his/her family stink so badly, it makes the current political climate seem fun by comparison.

"First Daughter" does just that. Katie Holmes ("Wonder Boys," "Pieces of April") stars as Samantha Mackenzie, daughter of the President of the United States (played by Michael Keaton) and First Lady Melanie Mackenzie (Margaret Colin).

Samantha is heading off to college, and all the usual plot devices come into play. She has difficulties with her roommate Mia (Amerie Rogers), the interference from her detail of Secret Service Agents and the preservation of her privacy.

Through a series of lame, PG-rated stunts that somehow land her in the tabloids, Samantha manages to get her father's attention. It does the trick, and her father grants her wish of having some extra privacy in return for an end to her outbursts.

Enter the hot, young adviser James Lansome - played by Marc Blucas - to sweep Samantha off her feet. But instead of plowing ahead full force with this budding romance, the story takes a few twists that - while being less predictable than the earlier clichés - ultimately disappoint.

Holmes' portrayal of the first daughter seems like she was transported into the modern world from some far-away universe where everyone is as boring as vanilla ice cream. Audiences will find a hard time relating to the character on any level.

Keaton is entirely unrealistic as the fictional commander-in-chief. One must wonder why he was cast for the role in the first place. My only explanation is that studio executives wanted Holmes to get tips from the former Caped Crusader before starting work on the upcoming "Batman Begins."

Director Forest Whitaker, whose previous behind-the-camera credits include "Waiting to Exhale" and "Hope Floats," shows little improvement in his directorial skills.

Whitaker seems to rely on stellar performances from his cast to draw the attention away from an inattention to detail. However, performances of that caliber are nowhere to be found.

The story was created by Jessica Bendinger (a former creative consultant for the terrible "Sex and the City") and Jerry O'Connell, who is as adept at story creation as he is acting. The screenplay itself was formed by Bendinger and Kate Kondell, whose only other screenplay work came on the laughably bad "Legally Blonde 2: Red, White and Blonde."

Not only is "First Daughter" weak in comparison to this year's similarly themed Mandy Moore vehicle, "Chasing Liberty," but it plays worse than the 1996 Sinbad comedy, "First Kid."

If anything can unite such a divided nation this election year, it should be the avoidance of this film.

Judge orders FBI to release Lennon files

The FBI must turn over the remaining secret files on Beatle John Lennon to a professor who has waged a more than 20-year legal battle to get the documents, a judge ruled.

U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi rejected government arguments Tuesday that releasing the last 10 pages poses a national security risk because a foreign government provided the information.

Jonathan Wiener, a professor at the University of California, Irvine, sued the U.S. government for the documents in 1983 under the Freedom of Information Act. He received 248 pages in 1997 as part of a settlement.

Accused Zeta-Jones stalker pleads innocent

A woman accused of stalking actress Catherine Zeta-Jones pleaded not guilty Wednesday, two weeks after a judge ruled she was competent to stand trial.

Dawnette Knight, 33, entered the pleas at an arraignment on one count of stalking and 24 counts of making criminal threats. If convicted, she could face up to 19 years in prison.

The charges stem from nearly two dozen letters she allegedly wrote. One letter read: "We are going to slice her up like meat on a bone and feed her to the dogs."

Knight allegedly apologized in a letter, claiming she was in love with Zeta-Jones' husband, Michael Douglas.

'Forgotten' lacks suspense, scare factor

"The Forgotten"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Album review by Jay Dillon

"The Forgotten," which was labeled as the next "Sixth Sense," keeps the audience interested and guessing through the entire hour and a half.

The movie follows a similar trend, which was set by "The Sixth Sense," in being a modern psychological thriller.

Telly Paretta (Julianne Moore) lost her 9-year-old son, Sam, in a plane crash over the Atlantic Ocean more than 14 months ago, or so she thinks.

Telly has been so consumed with her son since the tragedy, she must see a psychiatrist, Dr. Muncie (Gary Sinise), to help her deal with the loss.

One day, all of her pictures of Sam disappear, and all she has left are her memories. Nobody remembers Sam, including her husband, Jim (Anthony Edwards).

Jim and Dr. Muncie explain to her she never had a son. But Telly is not willing to give up on her son just yet.

Telly meets Ash Correll (Dominic West), who also believed to have lost his daughter in the plane tragedy. Unfortunately, Ash can't remember her either and has to be reminded of his daughter by Telly.

Together, Ash and Telly are determined to find out the truth behind what really happened to their children.

Ash and Telly are followed by the government and are continuously being followed by someone known only as "A Friendly Man" (Linus Roache). Roache's character seems to know all the answers, yet poses a threat towards Telly in her pursuit of her son.

The movie keeps the audience guessing with multiple twists in the story line.

The storyline is great and is not the typical "man meets woman, man and woman fall in love" type of storyline, and the writers smartly avoided this situation.

Though the movie was labeled as being similar to "The Sixth Sense," there is no creepy music or creepy special effects that make the viewers jump or give them goosebumps.

The special effects used were slightly cheesy and were mostly revealed in previews. Had the special effects been saved for the moviegoers, things may have been different.

"The Forgotten" is not as scary or creepy as advertised and probably will leave viewers wanting more. It doesn't seem to have a complete ending. There are many questions left unanswered by the end of the movie because the end seemed to be in a hurry to finish.

The plot had many holes and leaves many questions. If you're looking for "The Sixth Sense"-type of movie with great special effects, try another movie.

This movie does not have the punch that it had been billed.

Guys need to see the signs when their girls want action

Last weekend, my friend Mary came over in a rage.

Apparently Mary had just spent the entire day with her boyfriend and his family. They went to a movie, went out to dinner and had a great day.

But all of this family bonding time with her boyfriend, Mary was ready for some alone bonding time with him. Eight hours of only holding his hand had gotten to Mary, and she was ready to get it on.

There was one small problem, though. When they got back home, Mary's boyfriend was more interested in watching TV than making out. After a half hour of sighing, hinting and finally flat-out telling him what she wanted, Mary was brutally rebuffed. Her boyfriend wasn't interested.

What enraged Mary was that similar situations repeatedly happened in their relationship. She was, it seemed to her, always the one who wanted to get it on.

This scenario is one I've seen in numerous relationships, both mine and my friends'. We're the ones constantly thinking about getting action. We're the ones initiating everything. And I'm not talking just about sex here, but intimate action of all kinds.

I thought college was the homiest time in a guy's life. They're supposed to constantly be thinking about getting some and jumping at every girl who offers it to them, right? But more and more it seems like girls are the guys in the relationships.

What's happened to cause this role reversal? Are women evolving into the more sexual sex? Has our Britney/Christina/"Sex and the City"-obsessed society made women feel more comfortable expressing their sexuality? Could it be that the stereotype of the sex-crazed, hormonal college male isn't as common as we think?

It's not like we want our guys to be groping us at all times. There are times when we're not in the mood, and we understand when occasionally you're not, either.

We just want to feel like we're wanted by our boyfriends, or at least like they want it as much as we do. It's never fun when a girl gets rejected by her guy. It makes her feel undesirable and unattractive - two things a guy should never make his girlfriend feel.

Plus, it confuses us. We assume guys are programmed to want this stuff, that your penises automatically take over when a girl wants to get on you.

My friend Brad assures me this is the way most red-blooded males operate. He says guys want to get it on just as much as girls do, if not 10 times more.

"I don't know too many guys who wouldn't get on their girlfriend if they were like 'Hey, I want to get it on right now,'" Brad said. "I can't even fathom it."

Perhaps some guys are uncomfortable with a girl who's comfortable initiating stuff. They might not be used to girls who are so open about telling guys what they want.

Whatever the cause, this dilemma is frustrating and puts a strain on the relationship. It's never good when two people don't feel the same need to satisfy their physical desires.

Because, really, if you're not on the same sexual page, how long can the relationship last? To some not being on the same sexual page is like not being on the same emotional page. It's a big deal.

For Mary, the solution came to her in the form of sitting her boyfriend down and explaining that she didn't like feeling like she was the one who always initiated stuff and it hurt when he rejected her.

Since then, things in the getting-it-on department have been much better.

So girls, if you're feeling frustrated with your man's lack of physical attention, just tell him what you want. He probably has no idea that getting some is that important to you. He may even be pleasantly surprised at this notion.

And guys, next time your girl is looking for a little loving, don't make her beg for it. Just give her what she wants. Trust me, she'll make sure you have fun, too.

Ready or not, here he comes

Ted Sims will make his return to the field on Saturday looking to revamp a struggling defense

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The play is still vivid in the minds of many Wildcat fans.

K-State led Oklahoma 28-7 on that cold December night. Oklahoma quarterback Jason White took the snap and immediately felt heavy pressure from K-State's defensive line. He heaved a hurried pass to his left.

He never saw Ted Sims.

Sims snatched the pass out of the air and raced down the sideline into the end zone. In one quick play, Sims slammed the door on No. 1 Oklahoma and K-State took the Big 12 championship.

K-State's defense has been searching for that kind of big play all season, but Sims has not been able to provide it due to an injury that has kept him sidelined through the first three games.

The junior linebacker, while not at 100 percent, is expected to return to the field Saturday against Texas A&M, though he's not projected to start.

Sims said he is looking forward to playing and hopes to provide some leadership on the field.

"I'm ready for this game, and it's going to be a big game for us this weekend," Sims said. "(The defense) just needs some leadership out there, some intensity. We haven't really seen the fire like we usually have with the Lynch Mob."

The Wildcat linebacking unit returned little experience from last year, and missed tackles and assignments have hurt the defense.

Defensive Coordinator Bob Elliott said he hopes Sims' return helps heal some of the wounds K-State's defense has suffered.

"(Sims) has some quickness to him and some movement," Elliott said. "It brings another guy in there that kind of knows what were doing and can help us get in the right places."

Cornerback David Rose said the defense has missed Sims' playmaking ability.

"Ted is one of the only linebackers with a lot of game experience and that's what we're missing from the linebacker position," Rose said. "He made plays and that's what we're missing."

So far this season, there has been a glaring absence of big plays on defense. After last year's unit tallied 51 sacks on the year and forced 29 turnovers, this year's defense has started slowly in comparison.

Through three games, the defense has sacked the quarterback only three times and forced six turnovers.

Rose said it's only a matter of time before the defense starts resembling the K-State defenses of old.

"We have great talent at D-line, we have great linebackers, we're deep in the secondary," he said. "We've been correcting little mistakes here and there ever since the Fresno State game, and we've just been getting better each practice."

The defense will face a stiff test from Texas A&M. The Aggies' quarterback, Reggie McNeal, is cut from the same mold as former K-State quarterbacks Michael Bishop and Eli Robertson, and running back Courtney Lewis rushed for 165 yards and two touchdowns during the Aggies' win over Clemson two weeks ago.

Elliott said the Wildcat defense has to be prepared for what Texas A&M brings to the game offensively.

"They are excellent athletes with great speed," Elliott said.

Fast facts

Wildcat Defense

■ The Wildcats have only three quarterback sacks in three games. Last year they finished with 51.

■ The defense has forced nine turnovers.

■ In the first three games last season, K-State gave up 47 points and 845 yards of total offense. This year they have given up 78 points and 1,001 total yards of offense.

"These guys are going to make their plays. We just need to make plays."

Sims said the defense needs to take on the challenge of stopping A&M and play with a new level of intensity.

"It's time for us to step up and show what we're all about," he said. "It's time this year to step it up. This weekend is definitely the weekend."

GAMETIME

Edge

Edge

OFFENSE

There will be a tremendous amount of pressure on the K-State offense this week. Playing at the always hostile Kyle Field, the offense has to put up some points to offset any problems the defense may have. This will be Dylan Meier's first test on the road, and he will need all the support he can get from the line and his receivers. Another Wildcat who needs some help is Darren Sproles. If he gets some blocking, he'll do fine, if not ... remember Fresno State?

The Aggie offense is experienced with eight returning starters. It's averaging 26 points and 473 yards a game behind dual-threat quarterback Reggie McNeal (86 yards rushing a game, 229 passing), running back Courtney Lewis (104 yards a game) and receiver Terrence Murphy (16.8 yards a catch). McNeal, who Bill Snyder compared to past K-State quarterbacks, but, "a lot faster," will cause problems with his passing as well as his ability to scramble.

DEFENSE

The Wildcat defense is the biggest question mark going into Saturday's game. K-State opponents are averaging 26 points a game, and the defense has been inconsistent at best when it comes to stopping teams, especially on third down (38 percent). The possible return of junior linebacker Ted Sims may help, but this unit will have to make stops this week to give the offense any kind of chance on the road.

This year's edition of the Wrecking Crew is led by a solid secondary featuring Thorpe Award candidate, free safety Jaxson Appel (20 tackles this season), and cornerbacks Byron Jones and Erik Mayes. The Aggies have held their opponents to 15.7 points and 337 yards per game so far in 2004. They are yielding only 89 yards a game rushing, so the matchup between Sproles and the Texas A&M defense will be intriguing.

SPECIAL TEAMS

The kicking game is solid with senior Joe Rheem, who is perfect this season on field goals and extra-point attempts. The return game always has potential for a spark with Sproles. Punting remains a weak area, with K-State only averaging 31.6 yards per kick.

The Aggies also have strong kicking and return units. Kicker Todd Pegram is a Lou Groza Award candidate and is perfect on field goals and point-after attempts in 2004. Murphy and Mayes have combined to average 17.5 yards per punt return.

INTANGIBLES

Both teams come off a bye week. K-State is on the road in one of the nation's toughest venues, but the Wildcats are 1-1 in Kyle Field under Coach Bill Snyder. They also come into the game as an underdog — a role the Wildcats haven't played since last year's Big 12 Championship Game. K-State is 4-0 when its games are on TBS.

First, Kyle Field and "The 12th Man" Aggie fans are a huge advantage. Also, Texas A&M is playing with a ton of confidence after wins over Wyoming and Clemson in the last two games. The Aggies have won three straight against K-State, dating back to their double-overtime win in 1998's Big 12 Championship Game.

Battle of strengths

Sproles and the K-State offense face the 18th ranked Aggie defense; Meier looks to throw more

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Heisman Trophy candidate and the 13th best rushing offense in the country versus a defense that has given up a total of 55 rushing yards in its last two games and ranks 18th in the nation against the run.

Something's got to give when Darren Sproles and the K-State offense take on the Texas A&M defense Saturday.

Sproles comes into Saturday's contest two weeks removed from a 292-yard performance against Louisiana-Lafayette that broke the senior running back's own school record, but the Aggie defense should provide a much greater challenge.

Coach Bill Snyder said Texas A&M's defense is talented and will showcase many different looks against the Wildcats.

"They are a very varied defensive football team, and they can do an awful lot of things," Snyder said. "They are strong enough to compete well against offensive linemen and play off blocks, and they run well enough to get the tackles."

After a 41-21 drilling at the hands of Utah on Sept. 2, the Aggie defense has bounced back, allowing a combined six points in its past two games against Wyoming and Clemson.

With Texas A&M no doubt focusing on stopping the Wildcats' rushing attack, the pressure will be on sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier in his first Big 12 start.

Meier threw just 10 passes in K-State's last game against Louisiana-Lafayette.

Against a pass defense ranking 93rd in the country, that lack of passing will likely change Saturday, Meier said.

"We know we're going to need to put the ball in the air more than 10 times to win a game against this caliber of team," Meier said. "But we're excited. All we're looking for is a 'W' no matter how it comes. We know we're going to need to put the ball in the air and execute in the passing game."

The game will mark Meier's first experience in front of 82,600 strong at Kyle Field in College Station, Texas — a stadium widely regarded as one of the toughest places to play in the country.

Is he ready?

"Time will tell," Snyder said. "We'll find out. At least he has the approach and demeanor that would say 'yes.' It remains to be seen."

To prepare for the crowd noise the Wildcats will deal with Saturday and in other opponents' stadiums, the K-State coaching staff has piped in simulated crowd noise as part of the weekly practice routine this season, Snyder said.

Wildcats open Big 12 Conference play against Texas A&M

Cats ready for another road opener

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After two weeks without playing a game, K-State travels to College Station, Texas, to open Big 12 Conference play against the Texas A&M Aggies on Saturday.

The matchup will mark the 11th time the two schools have met, with the Aggies (2-1) winning the last three contests against the Wildcats (2-1). K-State is trying to snap a three-game losing streak in conference openers.

The Aggies are also coming off a bye week and are on a two-game winning streak after dropping their opener to Utah. During its past two games, Texas A&M has outscored its opponents 58-6, which included a shutout of Wyoming on Sept. 11.

Offensively, the Aggies rank fourth in the Big 12, averaging 473 yards of total offense per game and are led by junior quarterback Reggie McNeal. In three games this season, McNeal has gained 943 yards of total offense, ranking him second in the Big 12.

Coach Bill Snyder said the 6-foot-2, Lufkin, Texas, native is at the top of his game right now for the Aggies.

"He's such a major threat running the football, and he is throwing the ball really well," Snyder said. "He's reminiscent of some of the quarterback types we've had at Kansas State University, and they have that kind of an offense. It is a well-balanced, dangerous offense, because they can do so many things."

On the defensive side of the ball, Texas A&M is led by its run defense. The Aggies are ranked fourth in the conference, allowing only 89 yards per game on the ground. Texas A&M also leads the Big 12 in sacks with 13 on the year.

For the sixth straight season K-State will open its conference schedule on the road — the Wildcats are 2-4 in those games.

Snyder said he would like to see more balance around

"You have to play on the road at some point, but I just want it to be balanced. I don't think it is necessarily appropriate to play them all on the road."

the Big 12 when it comes to scheduling conference openers.

"You have to play on the road at some point, but I just want it to be balanced," Snyder said. "I don't think it is necessarily appropriate to play them all on the road."

With a win at Kyle Field, K-State could become the first school in Big 12 history to amass 50 wins since the inception of the conference. The Wildcats and Nebraska Cornhuskers are tied with 49 wins each.

Senior running back Darren Sproles will continue his assault on the Big 12 record books against the Aggies. Sproles is 497 yards shy of former Texas Longhorn running back Ricky Williams' Big 12 All-Purpose yard record and is 1,078 yards behind Williams in all-time career rushing yardage.

Kickoff is scheduled for 6:10 p.m., and the game will be broadcast on Turner Broadcasting Station (TBS) from Kyle Field. "The Home of the 12th Man" is one of the biggest stadiums in the conference, holding over 82,000 fans.

Sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier said he watched his brother, Shad, play at Kyle Field and found out how imposing the stadium can be for visitors.

"It's an experience, and I can't wait to get down there and play."

Helpful tips for selecting the perfect wedding date

Congratulations! You just got engaged, but do you know when you're having your wedding? This decision can be a difficult one, however have no fear. Here are some tips to remember when selecting your wedding date.

1. Symbolism. How romantic would it be to marry on the date your eyes first met, on the date you officially became a couple, or on your grandparents' anniversary? Keep these important dates in mind when selecting that special day. Remember that you may not be able to get the exact date you want, for instance, if your first date falls on a Monday, however choose a date that's relatively close. Also include why you chose your special day on your wedding programs. This way the audience knows why they're taking part in your wedding!

2. Season. Weather not only affects your wedding's style and location, but may set a completely different mood. From snow falling to 90-degree heat, people's moods are affected by the weather outside. Talk to your future mate about your personalities, and then decide on a season based on the following characteristics. For free-spirited fun, go with a summer beach party. For elegant snowfall, choose a holiday setting. If you're into rich colors, nostalgia, and mulled apple cider, then a fall wedding is for you. Go with spring if you want a fresh, bright memorable day.

3. Price. June, August and September are the most popular times to marry, so as a result, prices are inevitably higher. On the other hand, weddings in January, March, or December may cost less because 50 other couples aren't lined up behind you offering to pay top dollar. Days of the week also matter: Saturday nights carry a hefty price tag, but marry during the week and you can save a bundle.

4. Holiday. If you've always wanted a Nutcracker wedding, or you're hot for a heart-covered wedding cake, sounds like you're a holiday wedding couple. Other ideas are to try a wedding party in pastels and an Easter egg hunt in March or April. Have a Fourth of July celebration with flags, barbecue, and fireworks. The good news: Most holidays are make longer weekends, which means family and friends have an easier time making it to your big day. The downside: Prices tend to increase with the holidays.

5. The off-limit days. There are definitely wedding dates to avoid. Take the following into account before making your wedding day decision. The weekend before tax day tends not to be a popular choice, especially if you or a family member is an accountant. Also avoid marrying during your own peak time at work, which you know better than anyone else. Your religion also may dictate some times of year, or even days of the week, that are off-limits.

Autumn weddings can be joyful despite common perceptions against them

Following simple guidelines can make fall nuptials into a celebration

Ah, fall is in the air. Trees are turning their shades of yellow, red, and orange. Crisp breezes have replaced the dry, humid air of the summer.

It's the perfect time to light a bonfire and enjoy some warm apple cider.

And to get married, at least for some.

I have never been a fan of fall weddings. Maybe it's because the one fall wedding I ever attended felt more like a funeral rather than a marriage ceremony.

There I was, sitting and watching in awkwardness as bridesmaids walked down the aisle looking like pall bearers. No smiles, no laughter, and no fun - for the wedding party or the wedding audience. The wedding was so stiff and formal that the bride and groom didn't even share a kiss after their "I Do's."

However, my one fall wedding experience doesn't justify the multitude of fall weddings that are happening this year. It seems more college students are choosing the fall season to get married, and for multiple reasons.

Some couples find the fall season to be the most beautiful, while others see it as the best time to get married.

Take, for instance, my Collegian co-worker, sports writer Matt Girard. He and his fiancée, Jennifer, are getting married Saturday. It's supposedly the biggest social event of this fall season, except for the Collegian vs. Student Governing Association flag football game.

And Matt and Jennifer are not alone.

Next weekend, Audree Bazil, senior in animal science and industry, and her fiancé, Russell Gottlob, graduate student in swine nutrition, will tie the knot in Winfield.

Traditionally, everyone in their families was married in the spring, so the couple decided to do something different - in a season they both enjoyed.

"There are a lot of weddings in the spring," Gottlob said. "You have the same type of weather in the fall, but there's not near the busyness as there is in the spring."

Bazil said their personal style played a key factor when setting their fall wedding date.

"We both enjoy this time of year," she said. "We don't really like the heat and we don't like it freezing cold, we just kind of like that medium, nice cool weather."

Not to mention the colors are beautiful and make the perfect backdrop for pictures. Oh, and the fact that the couple received a huge discount when booking their honeymoon in Wyoming.

"Nobody really likes to go there at that time of the year - it's an off-season," Bazil said. "We found our lodge price dirt cheap, and it's the really nice, honeymoon suite."

1. Use fall colors. So, are you one of the many getting married in the next few weeks or setting a wedding date for next fall? Here are some tips to have the fall wedding of your dreams.

1. Don't spend a large amount of money on decorations. Instead, use nature's beautiful fall colors of reds, oranges, yellows and browns.

2. Go au naturel with flowers. Again, think nature. Replace the typical rose bouquets with wildflowers and herbal ones. Decorate with apples, pine cones, and leaves.

3. Think Thanksgiving. Not sure what to feed your guests? How about serving a Thanksgiving-style meal, complete with turkey, potatoes, cranberries and pumpkin pie. Instead of punch, serve warm apple cider as a fall treat to your guests.

The most important tip, though, is to have the wedding fit your style. You can read all the bridal magazines found on the racks in Hastings, but you won't enjoy your wedding unless it fits the style of you and your future mate.

Budgeting for weddings crucial to planning

Identifying essentials and desired amenities important

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Before anything is purchased, setting a budget is an integral part in planning a wedding.

Esther Maddux, professor of personal financial planning, said couples first need to decide what type of funds are available.

Couples also need to decide whether they will be paying in cash or credit, she said, and if it is credit, they need to find out how much they can make payment for.

"If they can't afford the payments now, then they might want to rethink their expenses," Maddux said.

She said it is not necessary for couples to keep track of every penny spent, unless they like to.

"People do need to know where their money is going," she said.

Online couples can use budget planners that allow them to type estimate how much they may be spending their wedding. Such Web sites include www.mikesartwedding.com and www.weddingsolutions.com.

There also are tips for how to save at www.cheap-chic-weddings.com.

Shena Niedens, who is getting married May 21, said her fiancé, Ben Schmidt, graduate student in business, and she were still figuring out their budget.

"A lot of it is dependent on how much out parents can contribute," she said. "Basically, we're trying to do it as cheap as we can."

"My mom and his mom can't foot the bill."

Niedens, senior in elementary education, said they are prioritizing what they need and what they want.

"We're trying to figure out what's the necessity and find out what we want and go for the necessities first," she said.

Niedens and Schmidt plan to pay by cash or credit, Niedens said.

"We're trying not to charge," she said. "There'll probably be little things we charge. We're trying to avoid that as much as possible."

Brides get in shape for their wedding day

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bride-to-be Heather Edmundson said she is working out five times a week to lose weight for her wedding day.

Edmundson, K-State alumna, is not alone.

Dianna Schalles, nutritionist at Lafene Health Center, said she talks with several women about getting in shape for their big day.

"There are a lot of people who do the crash diet type of thing," she said. "It's the classic big-event pressures as far as wanting to look good and there is so much pressure on the bride anyway."

Schalles said it is important to try to lose weight safely.

"Usually people do have the luxury of having an engagement period from about six months to a year where they can do more realistic and safe weight management which is more beneficial health wise and more long term," she said.

A safe rate of weight loss is no more than one to two pounds per week, Schalles said.

Edmundson said that is the goal she is trying to accomplish.

"I started early because I wanted to keep my weight off and I knew the only way to keep it off is to go slowly and lose about a pound a week," she said.

During her workout, Edmundson said she tries to include about 45 minutes of cardiovascular exercises.

"For my cardio I use the elliptical machine, the treadmill, the stair machine and the exercise bike," she said.

"I try to change it up so I don't get bored and so my muscles don't get used to the same workout. They are forced to work harder that way."

Edmundson said she also does weight training about twice a week to tone her muscles.

Julie Gibbs, fitness consultant for the Wellness Center in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, said working with weights is very important.

"It helps develop the muscles so you can get a better cardio workout," she said.

Along with exercising, Edmundson said she also is trying to eat healthier to help lose weight.

"I tried to cut out a lot of junk foods," she said. "I'm eating a lot more vegetables, salads and lean meats like chicken and turkey."

Gibbs said weight shouldn't be the only thing measured to help record progress.

"You need to look more at body fat percentage to help determine fitness," she said.

Schalles said women should not buy their dress in a smaller size and try to lose weight to fit in the dress.

"I would encourage them to be realistic," she said. "When you're going to get fitted for your dress get something that fits you then."

That's what Edmundson did.

"I bought my dress to fit me because I can alter it after I lose weight," she said. "I would never suggest buying a smaller size because you never know what could happen."

Family Day activities scheduled for Saturday

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Family Day, a K-State tradition for more than 76 years, is being celebrated Oct. 2 on campus.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said Family Day is a wonderful opportunity for K-State parents and other family members to visit campus and learn what K-State students experienced in and out of the classroom.

He said Family Day usually was celebrated on a non-football weekend in order for K-State to concentrate solely on the event.

"It is a great K-State tradition and a natural activity for the community. I remember celebrating Family Day with my father in 1969," he said.

Beth Bailey, assistant director of the K-State Student Union, said the departments and other organizations on campus planned the Family Day events.

She said brochures were displayed all over campus listing the various activities for the day, and an updated list of events was available at www.k-state.edu/familyday.

Bailey also said an information and registration table would be located on the concourse level of the Union on Saturday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"It is a good opportunity for parents to visit students at K-State and get a feel for the campus. They can participate in the various activities and have experiences similar to college students," she said.

The K-State Family of the Year, chosen by Chimes Jr. Honorary, would be honored at the dean's dinner and the volleyball game, she said.

Mindy Weixelman, director of development for student life, said Family Day helps bring people closer.

"Parents and families have always been involved at K-State. It is really exciting for them to meet students' friends and living groups at K-State," she said.

She said, she thinks Family Day was a tradition celebrated by generations of people at K-State and involving not just the Manhattan community but people all over the country.

Family Day generated lots of enthusiasm for a day of togetherness with families dressed in purple apparel all over campus, she said.

Students were equally enthused and were actively involved with coordinating events and showing their families around campus, Weixelman said.

Banned books reading enlightens, empowers citizens outside Union

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today is the last day students will have the opportunity to participate in "Banned Books Week."

Co-sponsored by the Department of English and K-State Libraries, approximately 20 volunteers are reading selected works from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. outside the K-State Student Union.

According to the American Library Association, this program has been nationally observed since 1982 in celebration of the First Amendment and to remind Americans of their freedom of speech.

Some cases of book burning even reach the Supreme Court. Supreme Court Justice W.J. Brennan in the case Texas v. Johnson, said, "If there is a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment, it is that government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable."

That is the idea that KSU "Banned Books Week" participants hope to endorse through this program, the freedom of each individual to have the right to read or be exposed to literature that may challenge normal views, said Roger Adams, rare books librarian at Hale.

"We want to bring awareness about challenged books," Adams said. "We have always believed that information is free in the United States and yet there are groups on both the left and the right of the political spectrum who have challenged books for various reasons."

"It surprises people when they find out that one particular translation of the Bible has been challenged."

The challenged books usually have disagreeable content involving issues such as cultism, Satanism, magic, witchcraft, disobeying parental authority, offensive language, sexual expression and religious contexts.

Today, the "Harry Potter" series is the most frequently burned and challenged set, particularly by Christian organizations, due to witchcraft and sorcery content, Adams said.

Other challenged books include such classic literature as "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "Of Mice and Men," and "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings," according to the ALA.

Dean of KSU Libraries, Lori Goetsch, said she thinks it's important to bring the issue to light for children because many banned books are children's books.

Among censored children's titles are "Goosebumps," "Captain Underpants," "Blubber," "James and the Giant Peach" and "Where's Waldo?"

Hundreds of students have passed the Union each day this week and smiled as they recognized passages from familiar books. Among those students who stopped to listen was Patricia Newton, freshman in animal science.

"I think this [program] is great and something should be continued. I was so surprised and disappointed to see Shel Silverstein and a Wrinkle in Time on the list [of challenged books]," Newton said.

These banned books are available in Hale Library.

For more information and a list of the 100 most frequently challenged books, visit www.ala.org or pick up the flier provided at the last "Banned Books Week" reading today.

United Way begins annual fund-raiser

By Josh Heck
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United Way of Riley County aims to increase donations from last year during its annual fundraising campaign.

Executive Director Maxine Coffey said she could not tell how much money has been raised so far because the campaign is still in progress, but the United Way has set a goal that is 14 percent higher than the total from last year.

"Our goal for this year is $675,000, last year we exceeded $589,000," Coffey said. "We look forward to trying to reach our goal again this year."

The United Way begins the last portion of the K-State campaign today with an ice cream social from 4 to 5 on the Bosco Student Plaza. Coffey that K-State has more than 100 volunteers who work with the various colleges and departments to raise money.

"Being the largest employer in Manhattan, K-State inspires participation," Coffey said. "K-State is a tremendous help to our organization."

According to their Web site, the organization funds 14 agencies in the Manhattan area, including the Ogden Youth Center. Nearly all of the money raised through the donation campaign stays in Riley County to benefit people and to help make the county a better place to live.

In addition, the Pacesetter and General Business campaigns help as well. The August Pacesetter program is designed to select companies who will act as leaders in the community and the fundraising efforts.

Intrust Bank was one of the many companies who participated in the Pacesetter program.

Theresa Miller, branch manager, said she is proud to support United Way and encourages her employees to give individually. The company matches all individual employee donations.

"We give because it affords us the opportunity to contribute to a lot of different causes with a single donation," Miller said.

Farm Bureau Life Insurance Company is a contributor to this program. Creative Service Manager Susan Shipman said the United Way gets the most out of the money they receive and said the ways they help the community can be seen every day.

"They take a dollar and turn it into ten dollars worth of service," Shipman said.

Local schools collect letters, aid for soldiers

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To support troops, groups from K-State, Manhattan High School and the Manhattan community have come together for a collection drive and letter writing campaign.

On Saturday, booths will be set up at several locations on campus for Operation Appreciation, which is organized by Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, said Larry Long, events coordinator and senior in mechanical engineering.

Long said people can donate including entertainment items, novelties and food.

Long said Operation Appreciation brings the community together to support soldiers.

"Mainly the reason we are doing this is to support our troops and unite the Manhattan community," he said.

Val Converse, adviser for NHS, said they have been focusing on collecting items but the letter writing campaign.

"We decided we'd rather get the donations together than start a letter writing campaign," she said.

Converse said NHS and Greek Club have collection boxes at most Manhattan schools and various businesses in Manhattan.

"So far the response has been a little slow," she said. "I'm hopeful we will get a lot of items from the general public at Homecoming."

Converse said that by contributing to Operation Appreciation people are showing their support for the soldiers in the war.

"It's not a statement of your being for or against the War in Iraq," she said. "It's just to let the soldiers know that we're thinking of them and appreciate them."

How to Contribute to Operation Appreciation

DEBATE | Viewers dislike format, broadcast of debate

message does that send to our troops?" the Republican incumbent said.

Jack Elsea, freshman in architectural engineering, said it's hard to know what Kerry would do if he were in Bush's position.

"He's not actually the one at the time who had to make the decision," Elsea said. "It's hard to justify everything you do when little things go wrong."

Both candidates said they agreed that nuclear proliferation was the biggest threat to America. However, they differed on how to handle conflicts with North Korea.

Bush said he would continue with a five-country summit to negotiate with North Korea, while Kerry pushed for bilateral talks.

The format of the debates, which had 32 pages of rules, did not allow for radical ideas, said Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of theatre and dance.

"I really hate this format," she said. "I would love this to be a real high school or college debate."

"We are not an informed electorate. I worry about the scripted, carefully planned things like that."

The lack of actual disagreement might deter voters at the polls, said David MacFarland, associate professor of mass communications.

"When they try to be so close to each other, people wind up saying, 'why vote for either of them?'" he said.

While there were no significant gaffes like Al Gore's big sigh or the senior Bush's glance at his watch, there were plenty of mistakes.

"I think there was one moment when the camera was on Bush, and he had that deer-in-the-headlights look. I didn't see that from Kerry," MacFarland said.

Kerry's mistake, however, was in his word choice, Elsea said.

"He did use several qualifiers that the common American wouldn't understand," he said. "He needed to dumb it down."

However, it was Kerry who came across as the best choice for president, Hazen said.

"Kerry had an aura about him," she said. "He was a figure of an American president."

showed how important it was to quickly train Iraqi military and security forces and improve intelligence gathering so the country does not fall to control of militants.

"The Iraqi people have suffered enough at the hands of these people," Zebari said on CNN, speaking from London. "We want a new Iraq, a different Iraq."

The day of violence across Iraq, including insurgent attacks and U.S. airstrikes in Fallujah, left a total of 46 people dead and 208 wounded.

In the northern city of Tal Afar, a car bomb targeting the police chief killed at least four people and wounded 16, Iraqi and U.S. officials said. The chief, whose name was only given as

Col. Ismail, escaped the assassination attempt, police said.

Also Thursday, the Arab news network Al-Jazeera showed video of 10 new hostages seized in Iraq by militants. Al-Jazeera said the 10 — six Iraqis, two Lebanese and two Indonesian women — were taken by The Islamic Army in Iraq, a group that has claimed responsibility for seizing two French journalists.

A Lebanese official later said kidnappers had released one Lebanese captive, although it was not clear if he was among the 10.

In the al-Amel bombings, grief-stricken parents wailed over the bodies of their children at the Yarmouk Hospital morgue.

One man carried his younger brother — both legs bandaged — to the hospital, where some children were put two to a bed because of the many wounded. Outside, women sat on the ground and wept as they awaited news about their children.

The hospital received 42 bodies — including those of 35 children — and 131 wounded, said Iyhan Nasser, head of the facility's statistics department.

At the site of the blasts, body parts were strewn in the streets amid pools of blood. A U.S. helicopter evacuated some of the wounded while other aircraft circled overhead and soldiers sealed off the area.

gunmen and civilians. Many of the wounded lost limbs, and at least four were under age 14, doctors said.

Kamal Adwan Hospital was overwhelmed by the influx, and doctors had to treat some patients on the blood-soaked floor and on cafeteria tables.

Ahmed Salem, 10, said the shell was fired from a tank at a U.N. school near Jebaliya's market. "I was hit and fell to the ground. The man lying next to me had no head," said the boy, who was wounded by shrapnel in the leg.

Maj. Gen. Dan Harel, the army commander in Gaza, said the shell was aimed at militants who had fired an anti-tank shell at an armored personnel carrier, lightly wounding three soldiers. Harel said several Palestinian children were apparently nearby. "We are very sorry that civilians are being hurt," Harel said, but accused gunmen of using civilians as a shield.

Palestinian militants have fired hundreds of rockets and mortar shells at Gaza settlements and Israeli border towns since 2000. Most attacks caused damage and minor injuries. There have been two deadly strikes, including Wednesday's hit on the border town of Sderot that killed two children as they played on the sidewalk in a quiet neighborhood at the onset of the Jewish holiday of Sukkot.

Continued rocket fire could turn public opinion against Sharon's plan to remove all settlers and soldiers from Gaza in 2005. His opponents argue a withdrawal would only encourage Palestinian militants to stage more attacks.

Palestinian militants have intensified attacks in recent months in hopes of portraying the Israeli withdrawal as a retreat under fire. Israeli troops, in turn, have stepped up military operations to pound militant groups before the pullout.

Israeli government spokesman Gideon Meir said Israel was forced to act after 11 previous operations in northern Gaza failed to stop the rockets. "The purpose of a wider operation is to protect the Israeli civilian areas," he said. "They (militants) want to show Israel is running out of Gaza under fire."

Palestinian Cabinet minister Saeb Erekat denounced the Israeli raid as "a war crime and state terror," and said he feared all of Gaza would soon be reoccupied.

Israeli troops moved into northern Gaza Wednesday morning, several hours before the Sderot missile strike. By Thursday, they controlled the towns of Beit Lahiya and Beit Hanoun, as well as large areas of the Jebaliya camp.

Palestinian gunmen killed three Israelis — two soldiers and a woman settler — in two attacks in northern Gaza.

In one incident, two gunmen fired on an army observation post near Jebaliya, killing a soldier before being shot dead. Near the Jewish settlement of Elei Sinai, two attackers killed a woman jogger and an army medic who came to her aid. The gunmen were eventually killed by troops.

However, the heaviest fighting raged in Jebaliya. For the first time in four years of fighting, troops came close to the downtown market and set up two positions in the camp, one at a U.N. school and the second at a Palestinian police training center.

Army bulldozers demolished 22 homes along a relatively narrow road leading into the camp, U.N. aid officials said, apparently to widen it and allow more tanks to get through. Armored vehicles avoided the booby-trapped main street.

"A bulldozer entered our living room and demolished half the house," said Hussein al-Jamal, a resident of the camp's Block 2, adding that he and his family fled, along with many of his neighbors.

Thursday's deaths marked the highest one-day Palestinian toll since April 2002 when 35 were killed in the West Bank, during Defensive Shield, a major Israeli military operation.

More than 20 of the dead were killed in or near Jebaliya. In one incident late Thursday, troops fired a tank shell at a group of militants trying to launch a rocket-propelled grenade, the army said. One man was killed and two were wounded.

Of the 131 Palestinians wounded, 12 were in critical condition, doctors said.

A masked Hamas gunman carrying a rocket launcher said he expected Israeli soldiers to leave soon. "Jebaliya will be a burial ground for their soldiers," he boasted. "They will run away and we will stay."

Children enjoy improved playground

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New sand was all it took to please the children at the Child Development Center at the Flint Hills Job Corps.

Members of Delta Sigma Phi replaced sand and did other maintenance jobs in the center's playground Sept. 19, said Eveyline Salay, senior lead teacher for the center.

The center had an open house to celebrate the improvements to the playgrounds on Friday.

Salay said in addition to the sand they also trimmed bushes and planned where new plants should go.

"They came out to do the actual physical labor of replacing the sand and making the playground more friendly," she said. "We are so thrilled to have Delta Sigma Phi help us."

She said the 26 children enrolled began playing in the sand right away.

"Everybody was very thrilled," Salay said. "The kids love playing in the sand."

Diane Sanders, volunteer at the center, said the sand in the playground had gotten thin.

"The sand had started the drift out of the original area," she said.

Sanders said she knew one of the members of the fraternity, and that's how they became involved.

"I said, 'hey let's take you out to dinner and let's talk,'" she said.

New toys also were added to the playground, Sanders said. Plastic chairs, toy trucks, planes, helicopters and turtles were added.

Philip Savage, 14 months, enjoyed shoveling sand into the turtle.

Aava Savage, Philip's mother, said the center is a convenient place to take Philip because she goes to school at the job corps. She just finished a computers program, and now she is going to get her college degree in a business-related field.

She said the training she gets from the job corps will help her along the way.

"Not a lot of people know about this facility," she said. "They don't know there's other opportunities out there for single mothers."

Roxana Anderson, who is studying business technology, agreed.

"I mainly came here because of the day care," she said.

"It's kind of hard to have a job plus have a day job, so it really nice to be here."

Philip Savage, 14 months, holds the hand of his mother, Aava Savage, as he rushes down the slide Friday afternoon at the Child Development Center open house. The event celebrated the outside renovations that had been done by Delta Sigma Phi fraternity.

U.S., Iraqi forces continue pursuit of insurgents

By Zidan Khalaf
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAMARRA, Iraq — Iraqi security forces patrolled the streets, and U.S. troops went door to door searching for weapons and fighters Sunday after the military claimed success in wresting control of Samarra from Sunni insurgents in fierce fighting.

U.S. warplanes also hammered Fallujah, another rebel-held city, killing at least four people, hospital officials said. The U.S. military said it hit a building where the military said insurgents had stockpiled weapons, causing a series of huge explosions.

Meanwhile, the bodies of a man and a woman were found south of Baghdad. The man's head had been severed and was tied to his body while the woman — who had blonde hair — was shot in the head, Police Lt. Hussein Rizouqi said.

Rizouqi said the two might be Westerners, but the corpses, found near the town of Youssefiyah, had no identification. The roads south of Baghdad are the scene of frequent shootings and bombings by insurgents.

U.S. commanders have praised the performance of Iraqi security forces in the offensive in Samarra, 60 miles northwest of Baghdad, calling the assault a successful first step in a major push to wrest key areas from insurgents before January elections.

As the gunfire subsided, Samarra residents emerged from their homes on Sunday to survey the damage and bury the dead. At the main hospital, bodies in black plastic bags were loaded on a truck to be taken to the cemetery.

The military says 125 rebels have been killed and 88 captured since the operation started early Friday.

But residents say many civilians are among the dead, and AP reporters have seen wounded women and children at hospitals. There was mounting anger over the casualties.

"The people who were hurt most are normal people who have nothing to do with anything," said Abdel Latif Hadi, 45.

Still, some residents said they hoped the bloodshed would mean the end of the domination that insurgents have wielded over the city.

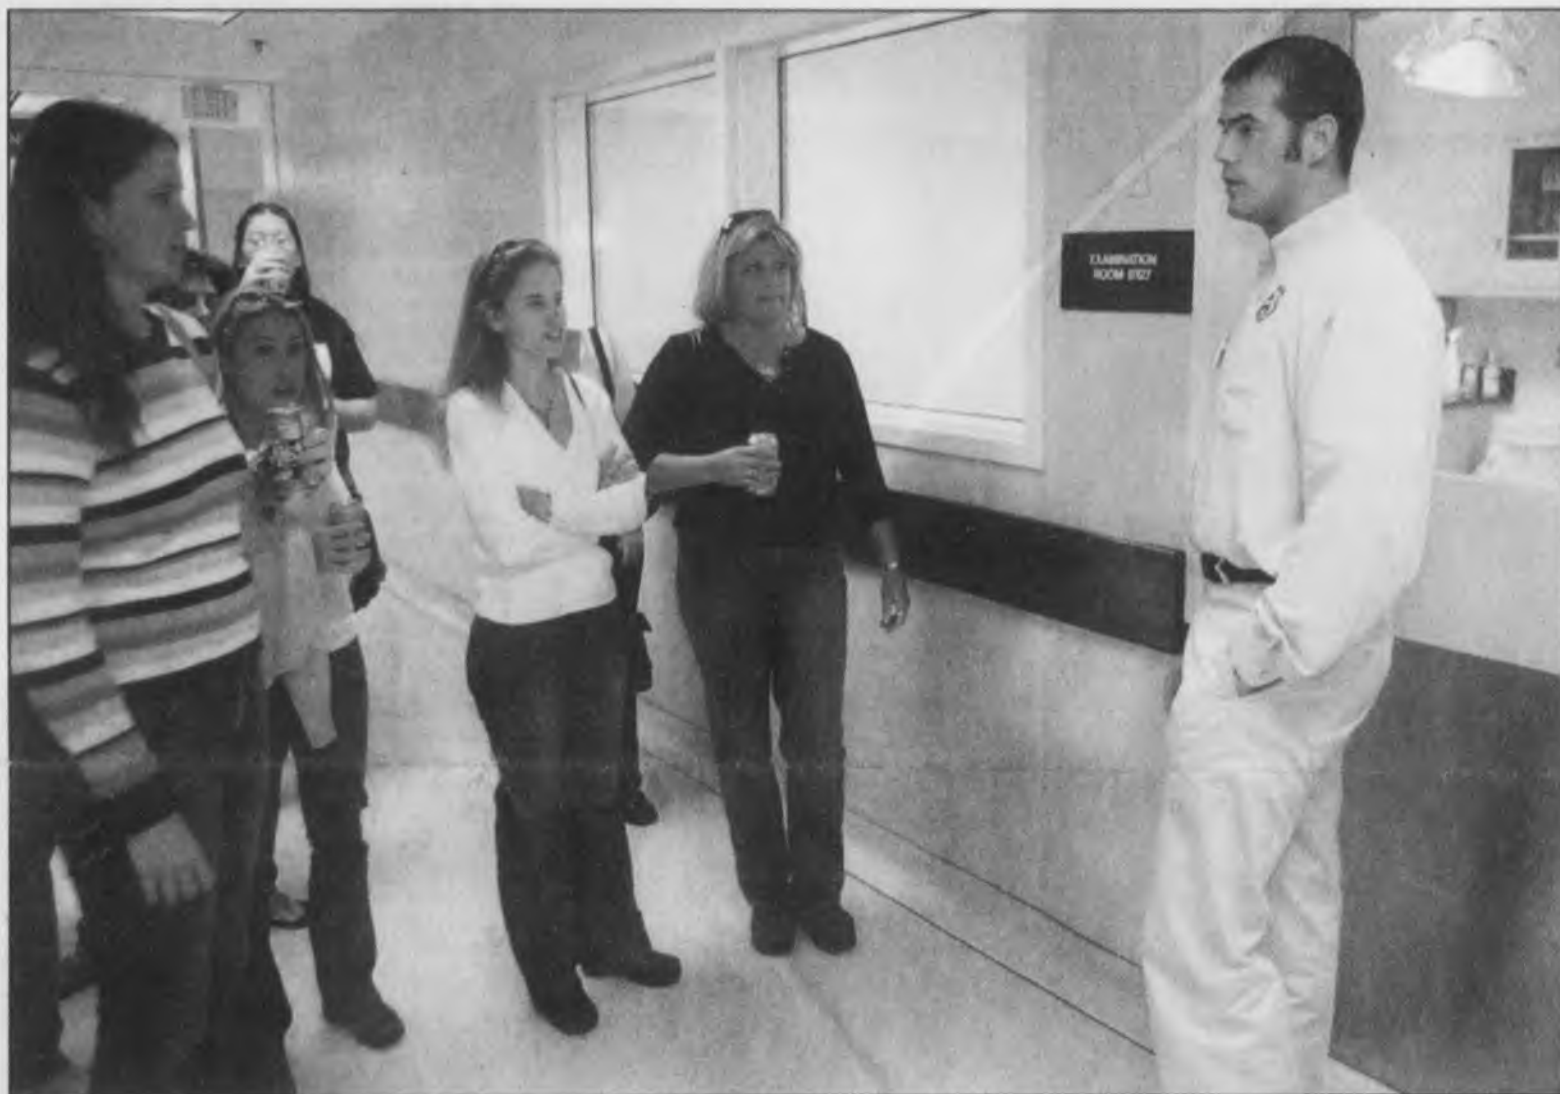

"Since several months, the city has been living in a state of lawlessness," said Abbas Mahmoud, 30. "I hope that after this operation, law and order will be restored."

A few grocery stores opened Sunday, but most businesses remained shuttered. Residents moved around on foot, saying the military had instructed them not to use cars. There was no electricity in the city, but water service resumed, residents said.

While Iraqi police patrolled the city, American soldiers and Iraqi National Guard members went house to house searching for insurgents and weapons caches.

Overnight strikes in Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad, were the latest in weeks of attacks aimed at militant groups, particularly the network of Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. Followers of the Jordanian militant have claimed responsibility for a string of deadly bombings, kidnappings and other attacks across the country.

Students travel to K-State to learn, escape storm-ravaged Grenada

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 65 students are starting their first day at K-State today.

All are third year students in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The students are from St. George's University in Grenada, their homes and school were destroyed after Hurricane Ivan.

"We asked what we could do to help and the dean at their college let us know there was something we could do," said Ronnie Elmore, associate dean at K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

The favor asked of K-State was to allow Grenada students to use facilities on campus so as not to cancel a semester of classes.

First year students from St. George's are going to Purdue for the semester and second-year students are at North Carolina State.

St. George's faculty traveled to Manhattan as well, but some K-State faculty will be teaching the students.

"We're already month behind from the storm; now we have got a lot to catch up on," said Maura Carney, fifth-term student from St. George's.

Sergio Pereira and Jacob Feese, third-year veterinary medicine students, get some food during the welcome reception for the students of St. George's University.

The students were allowed to leave the island with one bag of items. Most books and notes were lost due to the storm, Carney said.

Carney is from Boston but has been studying at St. George's.

"It was strange going back to Boston for two weeks, and having to buy all new clothes. It is weird knowing my stuff is being stored on the island," Carney said.

The students were welcomed to K-State with a picnic between Mosier and Trotter halls on Sunday.

Housing accommodations were made for the students by Shelly Martin and Courtney Brown, both third-year students at K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

Both are transfer students from St. George's, prior to Hurricane Ivan.

"These are all of our old friends, so we jumped at the chance to try and help," Brown said.

Community members celebrate Chinese Moon Festival

Family ties emphasized during annual harvest fest

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dozens of Chinese students, faculty and Manhattan residents came together last weekend to welcome the autumn season in an ancient Chinese tradition meant to bring together friends and family alike.

The event, sponsored by the Chinese Student and Scholar Association, was in recognition of the Moon Festival, a celebration of the coming autumn and harvest season.

"Traditionally, the Moon Festival occurs on the 15th day of the eighth lunar month on the Chinese calendar. This year, China celebrated the festival Sept. 28; CSSA members waited until the weekend with the hopes of drawing a larger crowd.

Zhigang Guo, CSSA president and doctoral student in genetics, said the festival is a way for the students and their families to be together when miles separate them. A full moon, he said, usually symbolizes the fact that a family becomes whole when they reunite for the festival.

"This festival is very important in China," Guo said. "A lot of students miss their father and mother. This party helps them come together, and it helps them feel very good."

Xinshuo Wang, graduate student in biochemistry, said she agreed, and that she misses her family this year.

"The moon is full, so it's like everyone's there. That's the meaning," Wang said.

Xi Hua, graduate student in computer engineering, said being with her fellow CSSA members has helped ease the transition of being with her family at home to being in a new environment abroad.

"It (the festival) makes you not miss your family because you have so many friends here," Hua said.

Guo also said the festival heralds the coming harvest in China.

"They have a lot of corn and fruit this year," he said.

Guo said there are certain foods associated with the festival, such as moon cake, a pastry usually eaten when the moon is full.

Moon cakes are small enough to fit in the palm of one's hand; they are sweet breads that contain different kinds of jams, chocolate and nuts.

In addition to the food at the festival, there were games and drawings for door prizes, and students showcased their talents, such as singing.

Zhu Zhang, graduate student in geology, said everyone is welcome to attend such events and that it is a good way to open lines of communication between people of different cultures.

"We hope all students, including Americans, can come together and enjoy the festival," Zhang said. "This is a good opportunity to communicate with each other."

Manhattan resident Terry Cole said he appreciates the efforts of CSSA, and that events like the moon festival can serve as teaching tools for other cultures. He said these events help make K-State's population of international students more visible.

"Prejudice comes from not knowing people," Cole said. "International students give so much to the community, and no one pays attention to them."

How to Prepare Moon Cake

Makes 2 dozen

1 can (17-1/2 ounces) lotus seed paste
1/4 cup finely chopped walnuts

Dough

4 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 cup non-fat dried milk powder
3 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
3 eggs
1 cup sugar
1/2 cup solid shortening, melted and cooled
1 egg yolk, lightly beaten

1. Mix lotus seed paste and walnuts together in a bowl; set aside.

2. Sift flour, milk powder, baking powder, and salt together into a bowl. In large bowl, use an electric mixer to beat eggs on medium speed until light and lemon colored. Add sugar; beat for 10 minutes or until mixture falls in a thick ribbon. Add melted shortening; mix lightly. With a spatula, fold in flour mixture. Turn dough out on a lightly floured board; knead for 1 minute or until smooth and satiny. Divide dough in half; roll each half into a log. Cut each log into 12 equal pieces.

3. To shape each moon cake, roll a piece of dough into a ball. Roll out on a lightly floured board to make a 4-inch circle about 1/8-inch thick. Place 1 tablespoon of lotus seed paste mixture in center of dough circle. Fold in sides of dough to completely enclose filling; press edges to seal. Lightly flour inside of moon cake press with 2-1/2 inch diameter cups. Place moon cake, seam side up, in mold; flatten dough to conform to shape of mold. Bang one end of mold lightly on work surface to dislodge moon cake. Place cake on ungreased baking sheet. Repeat to shape remaining cakes. Brush tops with egg yolk.

4. Bake in a preheated 375 degree F. oven for 30 minutes or until golden brown. Transfer to a rack and let cool.

TO THE POINT K-State, city show generosity to victims of storm in Grenada

Disaster relief just arrived in a new form.

And many of the businesses in Manhattan have jumped to the opportunity to help.

Sixty-five students from St. George University in Grenada have continued their schooling at K-State, but it was unplanned. The students were hit by Hurricane Ivan and are now taking refuge using K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

In relief efforts and to make the students feel more at home, people have opened their homes for students and faculty to stay.

Businesses have made contributions and other concerted efforts to ease the monetary stress the St. George students have felt, as well as ease the burden of leaving school mid-semester.

Among other businesses, Sonic, Varney's Book Store, Wendy's, Chipotle and Pizza Hut have made donations for food and school supplies for the students. National pet product manufacturers have donated supplies for the animals that live with the students.

However, the most beneficial for these students has got to be the warmth shown by the College of Veterinary Medicine in welcoming the students to use their facilities.

Students and faculty alike at K-State have joined efforts to find housing and food accommodations for the St. George students, a concerted effort in support of the students' education and well-being.

The students and faculty of the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Manhattan businesses have done a gracious thing by bringing relief to the students who had few other options.

Giving blood during donor drive better than alternatives

Last week I had a phlebotomy. That's where you go down to a blood drive to have your blood drained.

I feel obligated to give blood. According to my Red Cross card I'm a "Type O Hero." Having O+ blood means that I'm the "Universal Donor" and gives me the ability to allow anyone to use my blood.

Yeah, that's right, Spiderman can shoot webs at villains and kung-fu them into submission, and, me, well, I can donate blood to them. When they were handing out the cool mutant powers, Captain Planet and I must've been out tossing breadcrumbs to Birdman.

Before my phlebotomy, I did some quick, shoddy, Internet research to give this column a false patina of authority. On the opinion page we have a special term for this: standard operating procedure.

I learned that giving blood can save three lives. This, of course, is fraught with serious ethical and moral dilemmas. Say you save one of Saddam Hussein's kids — one of those test-tube babies they've got hidden in the Louvre. You could be an accomplice to genocide, just like the United Nations!

Before they allow you to give blood, you have to go through a rigorous battery of tests to weed out those that aren't good at rigorous batteries of tests.

They prick your finger with a needle to test for hemoglobin count. For those of you who are ignorant of all things medical, and shame on you, by the way, I'm pretty sure Hemoglobin was the villain in the first "Spiderman."

Having the Hemoglobin in your blood is obviously not a good thing, but luckily, as Universal Donor I am uniquely qualified to expunge this maniacal fiend from my system.

There also is a portion of the pre-donation test where you have to circle "Yes" or "No" to a string of oft-disturbing questions. They were something like:

"Have you had intercourse with a man in the last week?"

"Two weeks?"

"Are you in a fraternity?"

"Have you ever shared needles with a tattooed coke fiend named Daisy who frequently remarked about how much her blood hurt?"

Of course not. Just ridiculous questions. Her name was Audrey.

And then there's this bomb: "Have you ever had Hormone Replacement Therapy?"

Brain: "Uh oh... Hormone Replacement Therapy is on there."

Me: "Dude, you promised me this would be our little secret."

Brain: "I promise a lot of things. You should know that by now."

Heh heh, of course I'm just joking here, about getting HRT. These babies are 100 percent natural.

Once you get past the tests, they begin phlebotomization. Most people have no problem with the needle; just a prick and that's all. I'm not most people.

Once the needle is inserted, I wouldn't say I exactly scream like a little girl; more like a howler monkey in a trash compactor.

They drain out a pint of blood over about seven to 15 minutes. I know what your thinking, "A pint of blood? That sounds British! Are you sure this is safe?"

Of course it is. You'll even get a sticker, unless you're John Kerry, and then it's "hello, Congressional Medal of Honor!"

The Red Cross even hails blood donation as a way to lose weight. Y'know, just like losing a limb or vomiting after you eat. It's all part of a gambit to bring in the bulimics and the teens with low self-esteem.

Really, the absolute best reason to give blood is we are in a war right now, and you never know when another terrorist attack could occur. Giving blood is the least you can do.

I mean, literally, it's the least you can do. I mathematically figured out President Bush's foreign policy equation of "You're either with us or against us." It is: $X = 1P + (1/4)C$; if $X \geq 1$ then "With" is true, if $X < 1$ then "Against" is true.

This means in order to be "With," you have to give either one pint of blood or listen to four hours of country music.

Bring on the needle.

Stupidity runs rampant in college

It will come as no surprise to anyone that stupidity comes in many flavors. Why, right here on campus there is a veritable Baskin Robbins assortment of flavors to choose from.

None of these, however, confront me with the raw force, the brazen arrogance, or the unrelenting stubbornness that is academic stupidity.

I believe everyone knows what I'm talking about: the half-baked ideas that come out of often half-baked individuals. But, this is a university. Aren't we supposed to be stupid-free? Sadly, we are not.

Academic stupidity often is hard to recognize, because it is wrapped in robes and wallpapered with diplomas. But it is here, and active, and screwing with both you and I on a day-to-day basis.

This particularly manifests itself when people perceive they have knowledge of areas in which they have no experience, knowledge or training.

For example people who, despite having no real qualifications in a certain area, feel the need to impose their skewed little theories on the way things should be run.
